K-State fans climb the greased goalpost on the north end of the field Saturday after K-State beat KU, 10-9. The fans stormed the field after the time ran out on KU's offense. The posts were greased as part of an unsuccessful attempt to keep people from tearing them down. The goalposts were carried to Aggieville, where the after-game celebration continued. The posts were later chained to a truck and dragged away by officials.

Despite the thousands of people who crowded into Aggieville Saturday night, there were no significant altercations.

Sgt. Michael Quintanar, an officer working the Aggieville crowd, said the celebration was full of good, clean fun.

"Everybody had a great time," he said. "Of the arrests that were made, most were due to liquor or open containers."

K-State Police officer Timothy Schrag said campus police officers experienced no trouble on or around campus.

About 70 people were issued with open-container violations, and several were issued tickets for urinating in public.

Fans carried the football goalposts from the stadium to Aggieville.

One of the posts was loaded into a truck and taken to City Park sometime during the night, Quintanar said.

Fitzwater talks to journalists

WADE SISSON
Collegian

A notable alumnus and former White House press secretary criticized media agencies that try to dictate policy in his speech at K-State Saturday.

Marlin Fitzwater, former press secretary to Presidents Bush and Reagan, said such agencies encourage reporters to become stars in order to affect public policy during his speech titled "Jurassic Park Journalism."

"Technology has taken us from the muckraker's pencil to the hidden microphone, but at what point did we lose the nobility of protecting the public interest?" he said.

Fitzwater said Reagan and Bush often asked why journalists wrote stories critical of the administrations' policies.

"I told them they would have to accept the principles of journalism before they could understand the practice," Fitzwater said. "The principles are pure, but the practices are not always pure."

During his tenure as presidential press secretary, Fitzwater spoke at more than 700 briefings. During his speech in Union Forum Hall, he recalled the first one.

"Sam Donaldson asked me, 'Marlin, will you lie to us?' I thought to myself, 'Will they lie to me?' which they often did. But I never became bitter.

"I knew as journalists they were representing what is needed in a democracy."

The only press secretary to serve two presidents, Fitzwater said he is preparing a book about his 10 years in the White House.

Fitzwater was keynote speaker for the fourth Journalism Day co-sponsored by the K-State and University of Kansas schools of journalism.

A former Collegian staff writer who graduated from K-State in 1965, Fitzwater said his college accomplishments are recognized more now than when he was a student.

Marlin Fitzwater, former press secretary for Presidents Reagan and Bush, shakes hands Saturday morning outside K-State's Union Forum Hall. Fitzwater, a K-State alumnus, gave a speech titled "Jurassic Park Journalism" as part of the K-State/KU Journalism Day.

Fitzwater said he was once fired from KSDB-FM 91.9 for laughing at his own inability to pronounce the word Toledo.

His comments brought laughter from those in attendance, including journalism students, faculty and Kansas journalists.

"After being gone for over 30 years, you might ask the same question Ross Perot's running mate asked last year, 'Who am I, and why am I here?'" Fitzwater said. "I'm here because I wanted to be here when we're 4-0."

Lecturer to present alternate opinion

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Anyone interested in an alternative to Pat Robertson can attend John Swomley Jr.'s lecture.

Swomley's lecture is part of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series, with the cooperation of several other sponsoring organizations, and is titled "Defenders of Faith or Threat to Freedom."

This unscheduled lecture is in response to the appearance of Pat Robertson on K-State's campus.

"This is not a protest but a responsible alternate opinion," said Gloria Rumsey, Lou Douglas Lecture Series coordinator. "We feel that a protest would not be a healthy or effective way to show how we feel."

Swomley, who could not be reached for comment, is professor emeritus of social ethics at the Saint Paul School of Theology in Kansas City. He earned a doctorate in political science from the University of Colorado.

He is a member of the National Board of the American Civil Liberties Union, author of eight books and 225 articles.

One of his articles is "Religion, the State, and the Schools." "Religious Liberty and the Secular State: The Constitutional Context," is one of his books.

Swomley received the Pioneer Humanist Award from the American Humanist Association in 1985, the Malin Award for outstanding service to the cause of civil liberties from the ACLU in 1975, and the Human Rights Award from the Ethnic Minority Student Coalition, Saint Paul School of Theology.

"Dr. Swomley feels so strongly about coming to talk at K-State that he is taking time off from a conference in New York and paying his own round-trip air fare," Rumsey said.

LECTURE INFO

■ John Swomley Jr. will lecture at 4 p.m. Tuesday at Union Forum Hall. His lecture is titled "Defenders of Faith or Threat to Freedom."

Innocent verdict leads to query of midwifery

OLATHE (AP) — The Kansas Legislature may review health-care laws in Kansas after three midwives were found innocent of charges in the birth of a stillborn baby.

Jimmy King was stillborn Jan. 27 at the home of John and Kathy King near Edgerton in southwest Johnson County.

Prosecutors said they may appeal some of the legal issues raised in the Johnson County District Court trial because the Kansas Healing Arts Act does not specifically address the issue of midwifery.

Sandra Morningstar, Carolyn Zak and Donna Griffith were acquitted by a jury that deliberated for about an hour Friday. They were charged with practicing medicine without a license.

"This experience has increased my energy and focus to work for the legalization of midwifery, both on a state and national level," Morningstar said.

John and Kathy King had pursued the case, and said they will work to have the law changed.

"Sometimes it takes a real tragedy before people wake up," John King said.

Jimmy King was delivered in the breech position after a labor of more than three days, according to testimony at the trial. He died of lack of oxygen.

The Kings had hired Morningstar for $800 to provide prenatal care, labor and delivery services, and postnatal care for their planned home birth.

Griffith was Morningstar's apprentice, according to testimony, and Zak was called in to consult when they learned the baby was in the breech position.

Two police officers injured in protest

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Police fired tear gas and swung nightsticks Sunday to disperse rock- and bomb-throwing protesters enforcing a nationwide general strike called by two opposition parties.

At least 30 people suffered minor injuries in several clashes in the capital Dhaka, police said. Some protesters used homemade bombs to force stores to close, and the blasts injured two police officers, authorities said.

Police detained 12 demonstrators.

The eight-hour strike closed businesses in Dhaka and kept rickshaws, buses and cars off the roads. Government offices opened, but few people showed up to work, United News of Bangladesh said.

The report said the strike also disrupted businesses in other major towns, including Chittagong, Rajshahi, Khulna and Comilla.

Sunday is a working day in Bangladesh because most people celebrate the Muslim sabbath on Friday.

The largest opposition party, the Awami League, called the strike to demand trials of military commanders who led a coup 18 years ago. Its ally, the Jatiya Party, wants ousted President Hussain Mohammed Ershad freed from prison.

Ershad lost power during a pro-democracy movement in 1990 after nearly nine years of autocratic rule. He is serving a 20-year sentence for corruption and abuse of power.

First amendment and citizens' rights as goal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Using their best tools and tactics, Washington lobbyists have launched a mission to rescue themselves from government restrictions.

The quest has all the earmarks of any modern lobbying campaign: a coalition of allied interests; fax machines dispatching bulletins to clients; position papers and studies to provide intellectual firepower for their arguments.

And like most good public-relations efforts, the struggle is portrayed not as a defense of the pocketbooks of its interest-group members, but as preservation of far loftier goals — the First Amendment and citizens' rights to talk back to their government.

The battle also picks on some of America's easiest villains to pillory: Congress, the Internal Revenue Service, the Postal Service, and faceless federal and state bureaucrats.

Divorced Catholics told to say no to sex

ROME (AP) — If abstention from sex is the price of communion for the divorced, unmarried or separated, communion might have to wait.

A conference of Italian bishops told church followers Friday that remarried divorcees, unmarried couples and separated Roman Catholics will only be allowed to receive church sacraments if they promise to give up sex.

Across Italy, where most people call themselves Roman Catholics but often diverge from church edicts, a common response was outrage.

"This sets the church back at least 200 years," said popular television host Pippo Baudo, who is divorced and remarried.

"This seems to me to be something from the Middle Ages," fashion designer Laura Biagiotti said.

"It's rubbish," said television entertainer Marina Ripa di Maena, who is married a second time.

The bishops' Pastoral Familial Directorate was issued three days after Pope John Paul II issued his encyclical "Veritatis Splendor" (The Splendor of Truth).

The long-awaited encyclical reaffirmed the Vatican's intolerance of those seeking to amend basic church tenets, such as a ban on divorce.

According to the bishops' document, Roman Catholics should live the lives of Christians in order to receive the sacraments, Cardinal Camillo Ruini said. Ruini presented the paper at the Vatican.

Remarried divorcees can only take full part in church life if they "interrupt their sexual life and transform the bond into one of friendship, esteem and reciprocal help," the directive said.

"What is it supposed to mean, to live like brother and sister? And isn't procreation the idea behind a religious marriage anyway?" anchorwoman Rita Della Chiesa said.

An Olathe man was killed Saturday night when his Porsche collided into a Union Pacific Railroad pole.

Ronald Rigdon, 56, died at the scene of the accident, which occurred shortly after 7:30 p.m. near the east entrance to Manhattan Town Center.

A passenger, Carol Neweth, Overland Park, was transported to Memorial Hospital for treatment of multiple compound fractures, and head and abdomenal injuries. Neweth's condition was not available Sunday.

Rigdon's vehicle was northbound on Fort Riley Boulevard when it slid off the roadway and struck the pole south of the junction with U.S. Highway 24, Riley County Police Sgt. Michael Quintanar said.

The cause of the accident is still under investigation.

Super Dillons to be three times as large as Westloop Dillons

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

A Super Dillons will open Dec. 18 at 130 Saber Lane, south of the Wal-Mart shopping complex.

The new store is 63,000 square feet in size, which is more than three times as large as the Dillons north of Wal-Mart and 14,000 square feet larger than the Dillons in Westloop shopping center, George Kandt, co-manager for the new store, said.

"It will have a bank, a cleaners, a deli, salad bar, Chinese kitchen, photo developing, a floral shop and a video store," Kandt said.

"There will also be a sit-down eating area for 35 people, where people can sit and eat their food from the Chinese kitchen and deli," he said.

The Dillons north of Wal-Mart is closing, Kandt said.

He has managed that store for 22 years.

"I opened it, and I'll close it," Kandt said.

"This was a big store 22 years ago, but these are changing times, and Manhattan needs another nice supermarket," he said.

The old Dillons' 60 employees will work at the new store, and 90 additional jobs will be created, Kandt said.

The Dillons in Westloop will remain open.

McPherson Construction Co. began building the store in June, but muddy conditions caused by this summer's heavy rains hampered the project.

Susan Herring, junior in secondary education, said she would be glad to see another supermarket in Manhattan.

"If they have more selection, that's great," she said.

Another K-State student did not share this enthusiasm.

"I think it will be bad because prices will go up because everything will be new and in one location," Melissa Cole, senior in elementary education, said.

"It's also hard to get to. It's impossible to get across that intersection out by Wal-Mart," she said.

Clinton should resist the urge to resume nuclear-arms testing

The march toward nuclear disarmament and world peace has taken a mighty step backward.

Last Tuesday, President Clinton cleared the way for the possible resumption of nuclear weapons testing.

Clinton ordered the Energy Department to "take such actions as are needed to put the United States in a position to be able to conduct nuclear weapons tests next year."

The president's command was in response to a Chinese nuclear weapons test just hours earlier. The Chinese detonation, the first nuclear test by any nation since September 1992, destroyed hopes for a global test moratorium.

Clinton announced last July that the United States would halt nuclear testing for 15 months and asked others nuclear-capable nations to do the same. However, he said if his moratorium was broken by another nation he would prepare to conduct additional tests.

The administration's statement instructs the Department of Energy to take steps toward conducting a prospective test but does not allow an actual nuclear device to be constructed.

Experts think the Chinese test will not provoke nuclear testing by other nations, but that a renewal of U.S. testing would destroy hope for international restraint.

President Clinton can not allow the United States to be goaded back into the nuclear game. A resumption of U.S. testing would leave other countries with no choice but to conduct their own tests.

If Clinton is serious about a testing moratorium, the first step is to cease our own experiments despite the testing of other countries.

Conducting a nuclear weapons test is not worth the chance of initiating the second Cold War.

▶ FINE ARTS FEE

If there's a problem, find the facts first

Editor,

David Eugene Frese's article on the fine arts fee reveals general ignorance of arts education. He sees the product, with little or no understanding of the work that goes into a single production and the relationship of that production to the educational process. I wish he was part of the current cast of "Hello, Dolly!" It could be a real experience for him.

I cannot assure Mr. Frese that there are not abuses of the fine-arts fee and agree the regulations should be clearly adhered to. I myself objected to this linking of the athletic and arts fee and agree with that argument. In my view, the two should have remained independent and been given separate hearings. In the long run, I see no relationship and feel that the arts got screwed as usual.

I would like to hear the author's plan. Should we buy two sets of tools to ensure that no student uses the same hammer for class and "official" set construction? Sounds like a nightmare to me. Your graphic display of abuses looks anemic to me. From my view, the only possible abuse might be in the copies area. The other items are direct production costs. Believe me, we have talked to the administration — over and over and over — about support for the arts at K-State, but you see the result.

In short, if you find specific abuses, name them, prove them, and take care of them. Please do not discuss what you do not understand. The productions on campus are educational processes. If you object to that, speak to that, and it can be discussed and perhaps even improved.

Don't create a false impression that those faculty and students who give hours, weeks and months (not to mention often their own money) to K-State productions are involved in some sort of "scam." Much of the time and work are far beyond any reasonable expectations of any "job description."

The artists here at K-State are demoralized enough. We need help — not unsubstantiated generalized accusations. How about a real discussion rather than a bitch session?

▶ NATIONAL DEBT

So what purpose does the trust fund serve?

Editor,

Mr. Clinton, the newspapers say you want to start a trust fund to pay down the national debt. I thought maybe I should get with the times and start a trust fund to pay down my Visa bill. But then I realized there were some problems with that.

Problem 1: The whole point of paying down my Visa bill is to avoid having to pay interest. But if I put the money in a trust account instead of sending it to my creditors, then interest will continue to accrue.

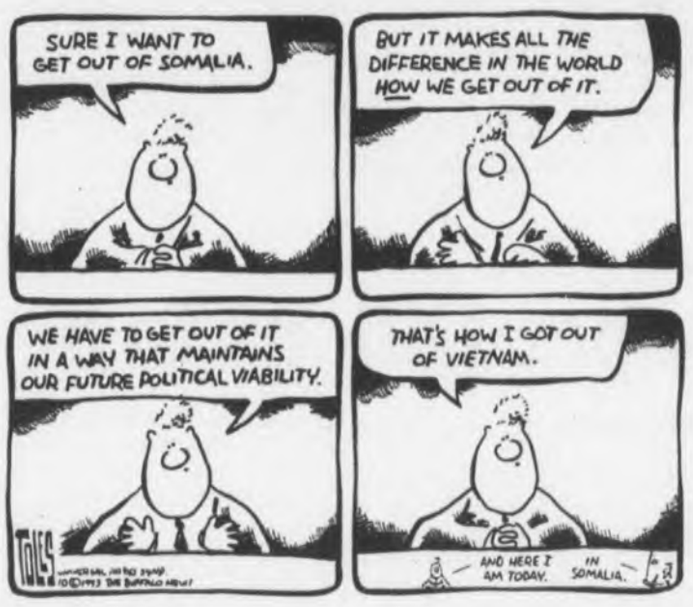
Problem 2: There is only one reason for putting my money in a fund rather than sending it straight to Visa: I might have another use for the money. That is, I might have emergency expenses if I break a leg or meet an expensive woman or discover a nice bookstore.

But, if the purpose of putting money in the fund is to have it available for uses other than paying my Visa bill, then wouldn't it be linguistic travesty to call the fund "a trust fund for paying my Visa bill"?

Problem 3: I can get cash advances with my Visa card. This eliminates my excuses (see problem 2) for not paying my bills immediately.

Because the Feds can be described as having unlimited overdraft protection, what is the point of the trust fund?

Problem 4: This problem is more abstruse, so please bear with me. The only purpose of federal taxation is to offset the inflationary effect of federal spending. In the federal budget, there is no real sense in that the dollars spent are the same dollars that came in as revenue.



We can say that we are collecting taxes for the fund; we can say that tax money is going into the fund, and we can say that is different money that we are spending on other things. But, dollars are fundable. What is the point of making a bookkeeping entry which increases the 1994 trust-fund-for-paying-down-the-debt by so many dollars if we must simultaneously make another entry increasing the 1994 deficit by an equal amount?

I'm baffled, Mr. President. Can you tell me what the advantage of your trust fund is supposed to be?

Rally is defense for peoples and my rights

DEB TAYLOR
GUEST COLUMNIST

Like the National Organization for Women (NOW), I advocate Pat Robertson's right to free speech. I also plan to exercise my own right to free speech by attending the rally that precedes his lecture.

While I can and do advocate Robertson's rights, I also deplore what he and people like him represent. For me, he represents all of the self-hate and guilt with which I grew up while living in a very strict and fundamentalist home. I cringe now when I think of the wasted years where I tried to comprehend seemingly opposing messages like "love my neighbor" but "hate a homosexual." I could not understand how one could love a general group, one's neighbor, and at the same time exclude a more specific group. And I hated myself for not "getting it."

Well, years later I have figured it out. I now know that the Robertsonian way of thinking is, quite simply, wrong. While his beliefs might encompass the wearing of "AIDS is God's answer to FAGS" T-shirts, my belief embodies respecting everyone's right to be different, unique and happy. And while I get accused by Robertson types of being an agnostic or atheist, I realize that my problems are not with God or Jesus Christ, but with most Christians. This is really sad, too, because I am constantly looking for a church that supports unconditional acceptance as well as a more compassionate interpretation of the Bible.

While I advocate Pat Robertson's right to free speech, I deplore the Robertsonian philosophy that supports such things as the fallacy that women are more "nurturing" and men are more "aggressive," and because of this men and women often cannot coexist in the home or workplace. And this is because, Robertsonians argue, the woman— the "nurturing one" — is supposed to be at home raising children and being submissive to her husband.

I really thought that this simplistic view of men's and women's roles was outdated, but it isn't; this way of thinking still exists in college students like John Hart, who likened feminism to an "intellectual virus like the androgynous strain" (Sept. 20). The John Harts of the world perpetuate the Robertsonian world of patriarchy, where men dominate and control women.

And so when career-oriented and independent-thinking women attempt to deviate from the patriarchy, we become subjected to the Robertsonian method for putting us back in our places: We are called "feminists," which in Robertson's world equals "man-haters," and which, of course, translates into "lesbians." Certainly, Robertson and his followers have been successful at making the words "feminism" and "lesbian" derogatory and abusive.

As a result, the very words adopted by women to identify ourselves are mockingly thrown back in our faces. Our free speech is corrupted. We fear being labeled by our self-identifying words, which now sting us. Our eroded self-esteem sabotages our efforts to seek and retain jobs for which we are qualified. We shy away from organizing ourselves in an effort to annul the patriarchy and fight for equal rights. Pat Robertson wins.

So, while I'm standing out in front of McCain on Oct. 12, I'll be defending my rights, even while I'm respecting Pat Robertson's rights. I'll be standing for those who do not want to negotiate who they are and what they believe, but feel powerless under the constant pressure to conform. I'll be standing for those who have been ridiculed and punished for believing that bisexuality, homosexuality and heterosexuality are morally neutral.

I'll be standing for every woman who lost a job opportunity because she is a woman. I'll be standing for those who have spent years of introspection and psychotherapy trying to free themselves from the chains of fear and self-hatred they have been doomed to carry around in a world of Pat Robertsons.

I am ready to defend my position. I would like to hear Pat Robertson defend his position during a question/answer session after the lecture, but I have heard that one of his conditions for speaking is that he not be made to entertain questions.

If this information is correct, then I find his condition deplorable. His hesitancy to answer any questions I want to ask indicates he is taking a cowardly approach to his position. Since I am not a coward, I will exercise my right to free speech, my right to self-expression, my right to be, before Robertson speaks on Oct. 12.

Volunteers act as peers to callers

MICHELE SCHROEDER
Collegian

The names in this story have been changed because of confidentiality of staff members at the Fone Crisis Center.

Students looking for guidance and support in order to deal with pressures of everyday living have a phone crisis line they can call to let out their frustrations.

A group of trained volunteers offer the advantage of anonymity and confidentiality, and will not judge the caller on a moral issue.

Students often misunderstand that the crisis center is intended for any individual, not just students with problems.

A student can call the center with any type of problem they may have, whether it is a minor annoyance, or if they just want somebody to talk to.

"The crisis depends on the person," Lisa, a coordinator at the Fone Crisis Center, said.

Some calls may be suicide calls, while others may be roommate problems.

The Fone Crisis Center opened in 1969 after a survey was conducted on campus. The results showed that students most often turn to peers when they need someone to talk to.

Because the volunteers act as peers, they are prepared to discuss any of the straight facts about life, such as depression, scholastic problems, marriage, rape or drugs. Short-term crisis-intervention information is offered, along with referrals.

Brad, an on-call volunteer at the center, said the most difficult part of the job is having a suicide caller on the line and not being able to talk with them long enough to sort out their feelings.

CRISIS CENTER

■ The Fone Crisis Center is a free service available to students seven days a week from 5 p.m. to 8 a.m.

But there are also many rewards associated with being a volunteer.

"It's a rush of enormous satisfaction when there's positive results," Lisa said.

The primary funding for the Fone Crisis Center comes from K-State's yearly budget allocations.

However, the funding received from SGA has often been insufficient, forcing the center to rely more on donations.

Brad said the amount of money received is little compared to the service the center provides.

"There have been times when we've saved lives, and you can't put a price on life," he said.

The volunteers said they attentively listen to the callers with a feeling of empathy, building trust through support and objectivity, which helps provide solutions for their problems.

"Feelings are a blindfold, and we work with the caller to dispute that blindfold," Lisa said. "We accomplish this by letting the caller talk about their feelings and doing some reflective listening. When that blindfold finally falls from their eyes, they're able to see they had the answers all along in front of them.

"There's so much to benefit from it. We do a very good job," she said.

U.N. convoy ends 100-day block

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — U.N. trucks laden with food and medicine set off Sunday for two northern Bosnian towns where tens of thousands of Muslims have been trapped for months.

It has been more than 100 days since the towns of Maglaj and Tesanj have seen an aid convoy. At least 150,000 civilians in the area have been pinned down by Serb and Croat artillery, relief workers said.

"We have received assurances from the Serbian side that the convoy will be allowed to enter," said Ray Wilkinson, a U.N. relief official in Sarajevo.

"But we have been in this situation before, and at the last minute, there is some excuse to stop the convoys," he said.

Wilkinson called the area a black hole last week because no relief workers from the United Nations or other agencies are there to report on conditions.

"It is potentially the worst-off region of Bosnia," he said.

Bosnia's war began 18 months ago when Serbs rebelled over a vote by the republic's Croats and Muslims to secede from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia. As many as 200,000 people are believed to be dead or missing in the fighting, which has left about 70 percent of Bosnia in Serb hands.

Wilkinson said 24 trucks carrying 250 tons of food and medicine left the Serb stronghold of Banja Luka, where they had arrived from Croatia, and headed for the Maglaj area early Sunday.

Half the trucks planned to try to reach Maglaj later Sunday. The others were to head for Tesanj on Monday.

The towns are about seven miles apart in a heavily contested area about 45 miles north of Sarajevo. Food has been airdropped there in recent weeks, but many of the bundles reportedly have drifted out of reach of the besieged civilians.

State-run Bosnian radio said Serb artillery was firing on people who ventured out to recover aid packages. Those reports could not be confirmed.

In neighboring Croatia, three Belgian peacekeepers were disarmed and slightly injured Saturday in a scuffle with Serb militiamen, Belgian army officials in Brussels said.

The clash began when the Belgians tried to stop members of the Serb "Tiger" brigade, led by Zeljko Raznatovic, widely known as Arkan, from entering Croatia at the Batina bridge on the border with Serbia.

Serb officials and media reports said the brigade was escorting Raznatovic and Goran Hazdic, leader of the self-proclaimed Serb state in Croatia, to a Serb assembly in Beli Manastir in the northeast corner of Croatia near Hungary. They arrived safely in the town, the reports said.

U.S. stance 'too militaristic'

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — American decision-makers right up to and including the president were responsible for the now-discredited tilt toward military action in Somalia, Secretary of State Warren Christopher said Sunday.

The effort to apprehend Somali warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid and his followers after they began their attacks on U.N. forces last June was a sound and natural response, Christopher said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

However, Christopher said he thinks the apprehension attempt became out of balance with too much focus on the military and not enough on the political side of the problem.

"I think we're all responsible for that, right up to and including the president," Christopher said.

Retired Adm. Jonathan Howe, the U.N. special envoy to Somalia, said a $25,000 reward for Aidid's capture remained in effect, and that U.N. forces were still trying to bring him to justice.

Howe, appearing on NBC and ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley," said U.N. forces had many opportunities to eliminate Aidid, but said that's not the forces' job.

Aidid has reportedly called for a cease-fire in the fighting that has left 18 Americans dead over the past week. U.S. officials made clear that while the U.N. resolution calling for his apprehension remained valid, the focus has shifted.

"We have a different set of priorities," Defense Secretary Les Aspin said on ABC. Pressure will be kept on Aidid until a political settlement is found, but we are going to depersonalize it and de-emphasize that aspect of it, he said.

Christopher denied there was any secret peace offer to Aidid and said U.S. special envoy to Somalia Robert Oakley, in the region to coordinate a political solution, has not been instructed to meet the warlord. But if Aidid wants to stop fighting unilaterally, that's fine, Christopher said.

"We have gotten ourselves in a situation of trying to capture an individual in the middle of an urban area that he controls," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee. "It's like going after Brer Rabbit in the briar patch."

Cats' defense holds KU to 3 field goals

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

The smaller the field got for the Jayhawks' offense Saturday, the bigger K-State's defense measured up.

Particularly when KU reached the Cats' 20-yard line, or what is referred to as the red zone.

"It was definitely a mental thing," said cornerback Thomas Randolph, who recorded four tackles and broke up two passes in the Cats' 10-9 win. "When they get inside the 20, we get a different mentality. We think they shouldn't be there, and we really bear down."

Kansas had no trouble moving the ball outside the red zone, gaining 354 yards of total offense compared to K-State's 320 yards. But when the Cats needed a big-time play to halt a KU drive, they either got the job done, or the Jayhawks botched it.

The Jayhawks drove inside K-State's 20-yard line four different times but were not able to convert any for touchdowns. Instead, KU had to settle for three Dan Eichloff field goals. The Jayhawks converted just three times on 14 third-down situations

"I don't know if there is a common denominator why we are having trouble getting it in there," Coach Glen Mason said of KU's inefficiency inside the 20. "When you get the ball first-and-goal at the ten, that is awful tough, fellas. The field shrinks, and you are playing against some good people. I said going in that Kansas State has a tremendous, tremendous secondary. And those people become a bigger factor in the red zone."

K-State scored on its first two possessions of the game, taking a 10-0 lead with 4:51 left in the first quarter. KU marched down the field on its next possession, reaching the Wildcats' six-yard line for a first down.

L.T. Levine took it to the one-yard line, setting up a third-and-goal. Levine got the ball again, but he was met up the middle by Kirby Hocutt and Matt McEwen and was unable to get across the goal line.

KU quarterback Asheiki Preston threw a low pass to a wide-open Dwayne Chandler in the end zone on fourth-and-goal, but Chandler was unable to scoop up the pass at his feet. K-State took over on a loss of downs and maintained its 10-0 lead.

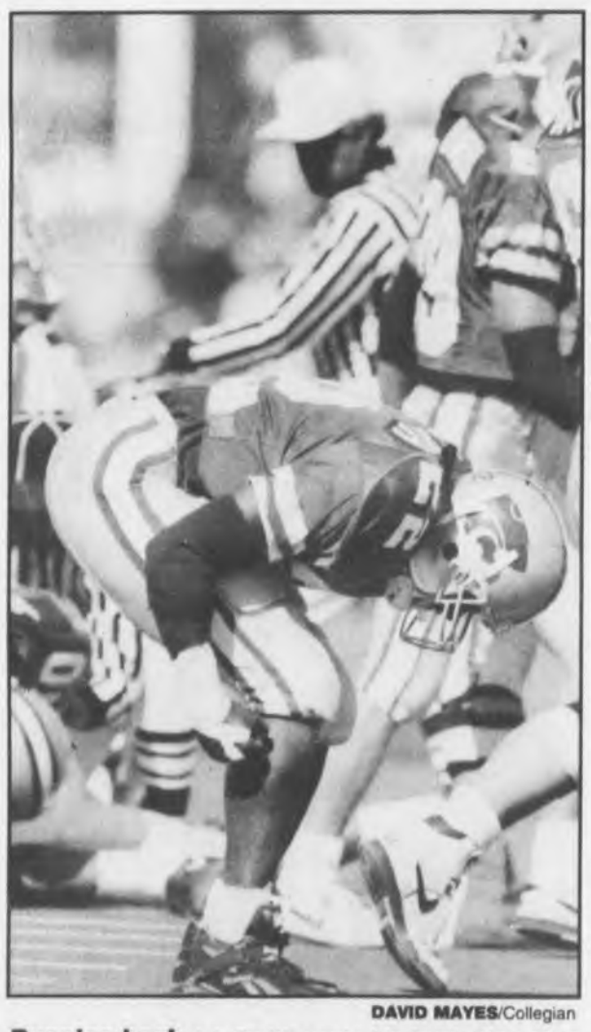
"We knew Eichloff was a great kicker — we just didn't want to give Kansas any touchdowns," Randolph said. "We just wanted to stop them from getting in the end zone. On third-and-goal we did that. I think that stop was the turning point and maybe the biggest play of the game."

Preston said from his viewpoint it looked like Levine did make it in the end zone.

"I definitely thought he scored," Preston said. "I thought they took that away from us, because from my angle it looked like the ball was across the goal line."

Randolph had a different opinion.

"No, he didn't get in," he said. "When we hit him, his knees hit the ground. Our coach told us he should of got in there instead of letting it be the referees' call, so that is the game."



The Cats took a 10-6 lead at the half, and the defense allowed just one more field goal, a 24-yard boot by Eichloff in the third quarter.

K-State took the ball for the last time on its 22-yard line with 5:43 remaining in the fourth quarter. The Cats drove to the KU 27 before losing the ball on a loss of downs.

But K-State was able to burn 5:23 off the clock, giving the Jayhawks 20 seconds to set up a field goal or a get a touchdown for the lead.

The Hawks made it to their 45-yard line with

BRIAN ANDERSON

K-State might not have given themselves a 10 on performance, but they got 10s elsewhere.

The Wildcats beat the Kansas Jayhawks 10-9 Saturday at KSU Stadium in front of 44,165 fans to get their 10th consecutive win at home.

The win gave K-State its first Top 25 poll ranking in nearly 23 years as the USA TODAY-CNN Coaches poll gave the Cats a No. 24 ranking; but the Associated Press put K-State at No. 26.

K-State coach Bill Snyder said the win was important, but six games are still left on the schedule.

"Certainly it's a big win, no doubt," Snyder said, "but it isn't the biggest win. 5-0 is great if you don't have to play anymore."

Center Quentin Neujahr said the victory was great for the team.

"Definitely, it's a big win," Neujahr said. "We came out and proved we could win it."

Kansas coach Glen Mason said he knew the game would be a fierce battle.

"I thought it was a great football game," Mason said. "Anytime you start talking about rivalries, it comes down to a very tough, close-fought battle. You look back to one or two plays in the game, and that's the difference."

One play that made the difference was Tate Wright's 50-yard field goal — a career high — at the 3:17 mark of the first quarter. Wright said he was rushed into the kick.

"My holder (Brian Kavanagh) said to hurry up," Wright said. "It was really difficult to do. I tried to hit it good and let the wind take care of it. I was pretty scared. After I kicked it, I looked up, and it was going straight. I'm glad I made it."

Wright said the reason he was rushed was because the coaches were deciding who should kick the ball.

"There was a mix-up because of the range of the kick," he said. "I had a range of 50 yards, and anything over, Warren (Claassen) would have kicked. (Special teams coach Nick) Quartaro looked over at me and told me to kick it."

Another factor in the game was the wind, which gusted to 20 mph during the game.

"I wasn't worried about Chad (May) throwing into the wind. I was just concerned about kicking into it," Snyder said.

"Even Dan (Eichloff) had some trouble kicking into the wind. I think if we would have had to kick more into the wind, it would have been a different ballgame.

"I felt it was extremely important, because every point was scored with the wind," he said.

Mason said he wanted to have the wind to start the third quarter so his team could catch up with K-State.

"Well, I don't think that there was any doubt that the wind was a factor today," Mason said. "At that point in time, if you're going to make your move, you better make it right there. I didn't want to fall any farther behind than we were, so I figured I'd take the wind right then and there."

Running back J.J. Smith rushed for 135 yards on 26 carries — both for career highs. Smith could have had more if he hadn't fumbled early in the second quarter.

"J.J. Smith was really upset about the fumble," Snyder said.

"My concern was getting him tempered down. He felt like he fell off the face of the earth. I wanted to get him calmed down and back into the game."

After the game, Mason said K-State had a fine team.

"We're playing a team that's undefeated, and we were away from home," said Mason.

"We played a good football team, and we came up short."

Snyder said the Jayhawks' last drive gave him more gray hairs.

"After this game, I feel as if I'm 97 years old," he said.

Fans haven't seen best of Wildcats

DEREK SIMMONS

It's been 62 years since any K-State football team has started a season 5-0.

That's a lofty feat all by itself.

Add to that the 10-9 win against Kansas Saturday, and Wildcat fans honestly have reason to be looking forward to the remaining Big Eight Conference schedule.

But what's puzzling is despite the Cats' perfect record, fans have yet to see the best of what this team has to offer.

The Cats opened Saturday's game with a quick seven points, then tacked on another three in the first quarter, for a 10-0 lead with three quarters of football left.

At that point, I thought my prediction of, "K-State a helluva lot, Kansas not very damn many," was starting to take shape.

Not in a million years would I have thought that was the end of the scoring. But it was.

" We were playing hard and well, and all of a sudden we were in a daze," said wide receiver Andre Coleman, who scored the game's only touchdown. "I feel like we kind of escaped because we didn't play up to par. We played one quarter of football, and that was it. We moved the ball, but we'd get a penalty or a turnover."

Game Notes K-STATE VS. KANSAS

✔ The victory tied K-State's longest home winning streak at 10.

✔ The win marks the first time since 1931 that K-State has started the season 5-0.

✔ Since the start of the1990 season, K-State is 19-2 at home.

✔ The game marked the first time since the 1966 matchup that K-State held KU without a touchdown. That game was a 3-3 tie.

✔ Chad Romano marked a career-high effort with a 60-yard punt.

✔ Andre Coleman had four receptions for 52 yards to move to 10th on the career list for both receptions (70) and receiving yards (1,000.)

✔ Jamie Mendez recorded 14 tackles against KU to move into 17th place on the career tackle list with 246. Seven more tackles will boost him into the top 15.

✔ Tate Wright booted a personal-best 50-yard field goal. He is now 7 of 10 on the season and 12 of 17 in the past two seasons.

✔ K-State set a new record for attendance with 44,165 fans. The previous record of 43,576 was set at the 1974 K-State/KU game.

✔ Mitch Running hauled in eight passes for 84 yards to mark a career single-game high. His previous best was 73 yards against Montana last season.

✔ The game marks the first time since 1984 that K-State held KU to single-digit scoring (24-7 in Manhattan.)

✔ J.J. Smith rushed for a career-high 135 yards, marking the second consecutive game where he gained more than 100 yards.

Women beat KU, men lose 18-15 to Outlaws

COLLEGIAN STAFF

The men's and women's rugby teams both faced tough opponents this weekend.

The women's team came out with a 15-5 win over the University of Kansas in the first match and a 10-10 tie in the second.

"We played very well against KU," Ladonna Grenz, graduate student in laboratory medicine, said. "Our rookies played better than we expected. Sharon Doll scored two tries in the first game."

Grenz said the forwards did a good job and the Kansas squad.

"Our forwards were great. We did a lot of mauling and kept possession of the ball. That is how we won," she said.

The K-State team said they were satisfied with how the match went.

"The rookies caught on really fast," Cyndi Cushing, junior in geography, said.

"We recycled the ball well, and our players were aggressive, especially Sharon Doll."

The KU team was short a few players, so the K-State team gave them a couple of players to be able to play.

"The players that we gave KU were the ones that scored against us," Cushing said. "They showed up short, but we still wanted to play."

The men's team didn't come out as lucky. They lost 18-15 to a non-collegiate clubside team, the Columbia Outlaws, from Columbia, Mo.

"The Outlaws had the wind with them during the first half," Jeff Smith, senior in public relations, said.

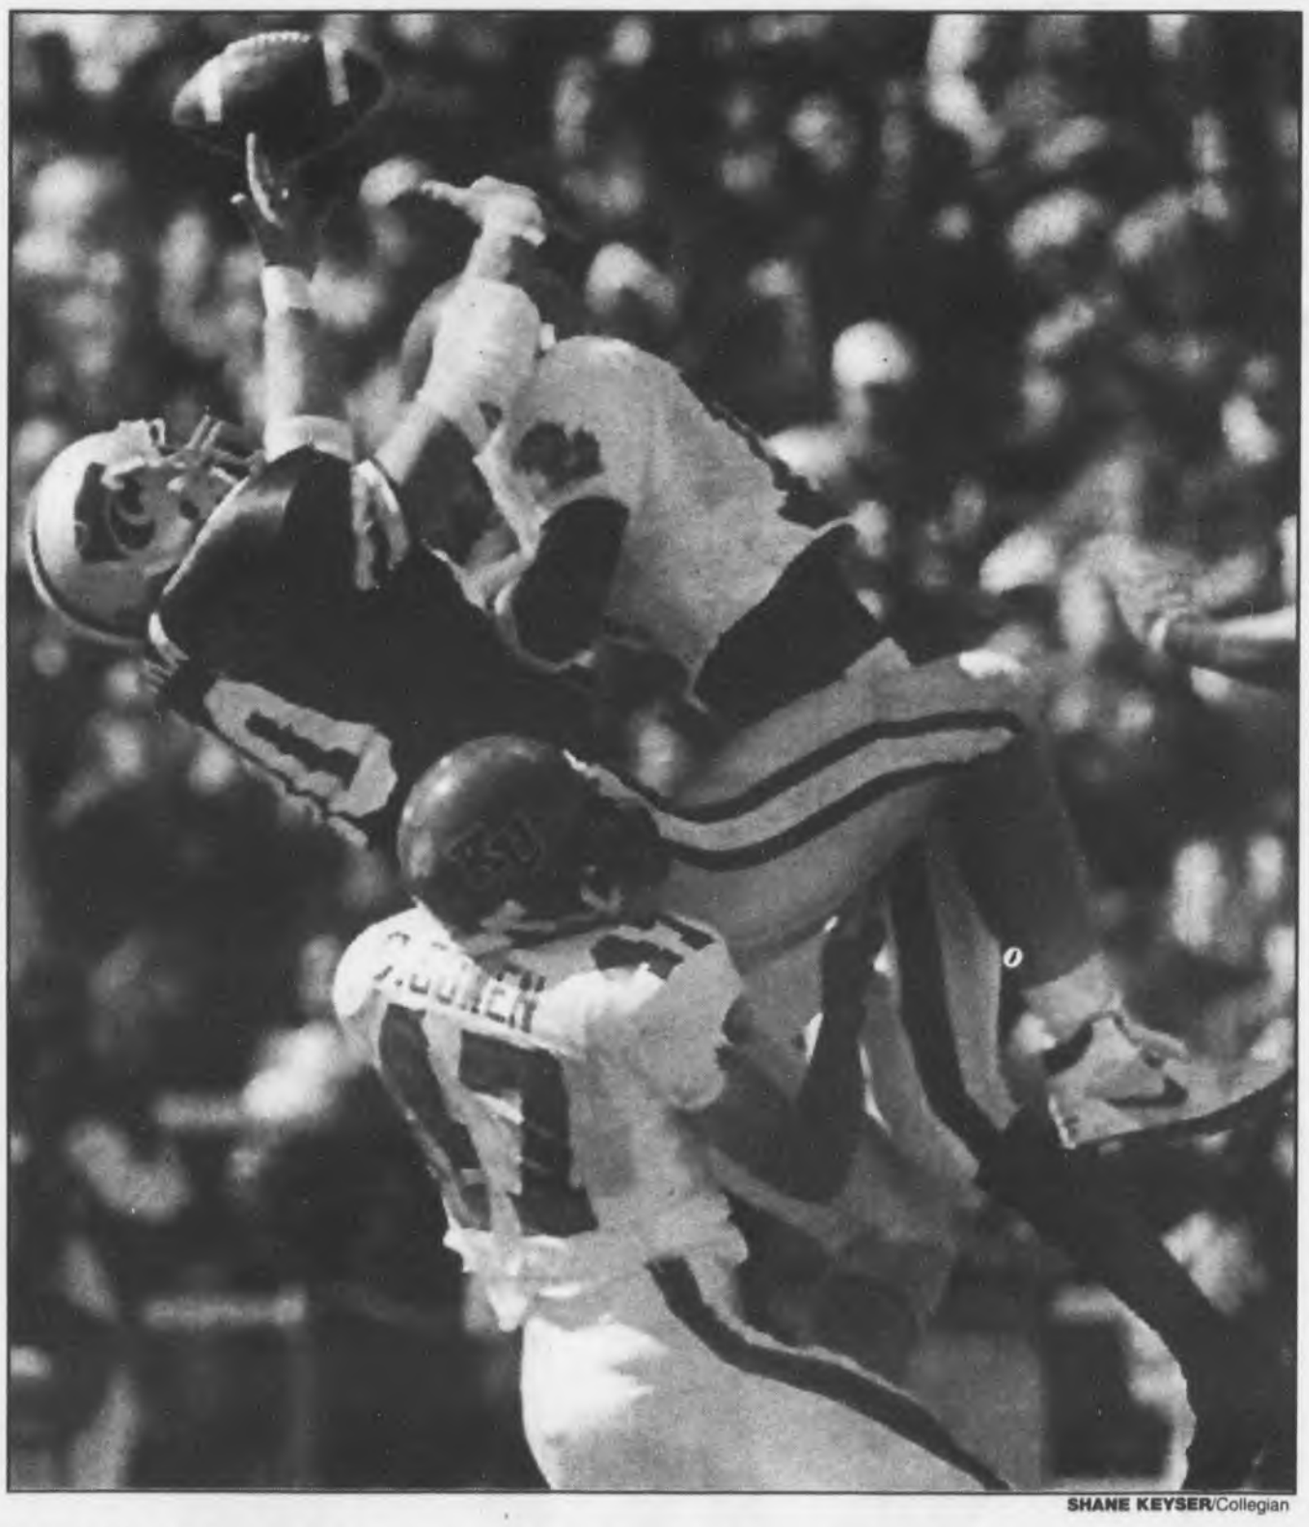
"They were leading 13-0 by half-time."

Coach Danny Blea said there were some positive outcomes for the K-State team.

"I saw much improvement over last weekend," Blea said. "We played more like 15 guys together, instead of individuals."

"It was also great that Matt Smith scored for the first time," Blea said. "The team also improved in its outplay."

Blea said they contolled the ball during the match.



"We were able to retain the ball and gain it back quickly throughout the match, he said."

The men only played one match. Smith, Brit Harper, senior in graphic design, and Matt Smith, freshman in business, scored the three tries for the K-State team.

"Our team is pretty young, and we had players at different positions," Smith said. "We usually play an A and B game, but the other team didn't have enough players.

"It was a really good match. I think we gained some confidence."

Both teams will be playing at the Heart Of America Tournament next weekend in Kansas City.

"I knew we had eight seconds on the clock, and I was just trying to get as much as I could and get out of bounds so we could get within field-goal range," Preston said. "Apparently, I didn't do it quick enough."

Randolph said he was out of reach of Preston on the last play but thought Preston might get out of bounds in time.

"I looked up at the clock, and there was only three seconds left," Randolph said. "I thought he was going to get out of bounds with one second left, and Eichloff would come in and kick a field goal. But I was hoping to God that the clock would run down to zero."

The Cats had three turnovers, and all three led to points for KU. Ouch.

So far this season, there have been two K-State teams. One that puts points on the board early and holds on for a win, and another that gets down before rallying for a victory.

Against New Mexico State, the Cats took a 10-0 lead with 10:37 left in the first half, but let the Aggies' Cody Ledbetter scramble in for a touchdown with no time left at the end of the second quarter.

Division II Western Kentucky put 13 points on the board in the second quarter and at one point led the game 10-7.

The Cats had to rally at Minnesota, scoring a touchdown late in the fourth quarter for a 30-25 win, after squandering a 17-0 advantage.

UNLV took a 14-10 lead at halftime before K-State woke up and eventually won 36-20.

And after jumping out to a 10-0 lead on the Jayhawks, K-State settled for a one-point win.

One fact remains — the Cats are still winning. "We didn't play very well, but we played well enough to win," quarterback Chad May said after the win against KU. "Whether we win by 50 points or one point, we still get a notch in the win column."

K-State travels to Lincoln, Neb., next week, then faces Colorado and Oklahoma at home.

One thing is for sure — the Cats won't be able to go to Lincoln, Neb., without playing four quarters of football. It's not that they can't, it's just that they haven't really had to yet.

The Jayhawks were an exception. If KU would have had one more second on the clock Saturday, the Cats could very well be 4-1.

If L.T. Levine, who was the first KU running back to rush for more than 100 yards this season, can run for 115 yards against the Cats, imagine what Calvin Jones could do.

We've all seen glimpses of greatness, which has produced eye-catching results.

But sitting on 10 points or relying on a come-from-behind victory in the next three weeks will more than likely end in nothing but disaster.

▶ GOLFERS TRAVEL TO LAWRENCE, WICHITA

The men's golf team will travel today to Lawrence for the Kansas Invitational at the Alvamar Public Golf Course.

Golfers in the 13-team tournament will play 36 holes on Monday and 18 on Tuesday. The field includes Big Eight and district foes Kansas, Iowa State, Missouri, Nebraska, Wichita State and Oral Roberts.

Other teams in the tournament will be Memphis State, College of Charleston, Missouri-Kansas City, South Florida, St. Louis and Virginia Tech.

K-State is coming off an eighth-place finish at the Grand Canyon Invitational with Scott Hovis leading the way with a fifth-place finish.

The women's team will also travel today to Wichita for the Wichita State Shocker Classic at the Terradyne Country Club. They will play 36 holes over the course of the two-day tournament.

Wildcat golfers will face Texas Tech, Pepperdine, Baylor, Colorado State, Nebraska, Oral Roberts, Creighton, UMKC, Southwest-Missouri State, Texas-El Paso and Hardin-Simmons, along with host Wichita State.

This will be the first tournament for K-State since the Hawkeye Invitational on Sept. 26, when the Cats finished sixth.

▶ DUGAN, YOUNG TO ALL-TOURNAMENT TEAM

The K-State volleyball team finished with a 2-1 record at the Drake Tournament last weekend with wins over Oral Roberts and Northeastern Illinois.

The Wildcats also placed two players on the all-tournament team. Sophomore middle-blocker Jill Dugan and freshman Yolanda Young were selected to the team after strong performances in all three matches. For the tournament, Dugan totaled 38 kills and 10 digs, and Young had 42 kills.

The Cats won their first match against Oral Roberts 3-0 on Friday. Young led K-State with 14 kills, and senior middle-blocker Angie McKee had 11 kills. Dugan also added eight kills.

The Cats' only loss of the tournament was against Drake University. The Cats had lost two games to the Bulldogs and were on the edge of getting swept when they battled back and won game three by a score of 15-9. But the Bulldogs came back and won game four 15-9.

Leading the Cats against Drake was Young, who had 18 kills for the match. Sophomore setter Chi Dau also contributed 56 assists for the match.

K-State came back against Northeastern Illinois. They lost the first game 15-11, but they came back and won the next three games 15-10, 15-11 and 15-13 to win the match 3-1.

▶ TORONTO NEEDS 1 WIN; PHILLIES TIE SERIES

TORONTO (AP) — The Toronto Blue Jays finally bucked the home-team jinx in the AL playoffs. Now Chicago can only hope that it can, too.

Behind Juan Guzman's pitching and Roberto Alomar's hitting, the Blue Jays became the first home team to win in the series, beating the White Sox 5-3 Sunday for a 3-2 lead.

The defending World Series champions can earn a return trip with a win Tuesday night in Chicago, where the Blue Jays won twice last week. Toronto will send Dave Stewart, 7-0 in the playoffs after his win in Game 2, against Alex Fernandez.

ATLANTA (AP) — Danny Jackson and the Philadelphia Phillies managed to hold off Atlanta — mostly because Milt Thompson held onto the ball.

Jackson, battered by the Braves in last year's playoffs, pitched out of trouble throughout the game, but stayed cool in the clutch and led the Phillies to a 2-1 victory Sunday that evened the series 2-2.

On a night when the game could have turned at any point, Thompson pulled off the most spectacular play of all.

Thompson crashed into the left-field wall for a leaping back-handed catch of Mark Lemke's drive with two on and two out in the eighth inning.

IBM computers to assist students in doing case studies

MIKE HIND
Collegian

Two years of hard work by K-State faculty and staff have resulted in a joint-study program with IBM that has yielded the donation of $100,000 in computer equipment.

The new computers are part of a multi-media system at the College of Veterinary Medicine.

These computers will allow students to use computer-recorded images to help them identify, diagnose and treat case studies, Dr. John Galland, assistant professor of clinical sciences, said.

This technology allows full-motion video of animal patient cases to be displayed on a computer monitor, Galland said.

These videotape images are copied to the hard disk drive of the computer and edited. Each animal case that comes in is recorded in this manner. Students will then be evaluated by how they identify and treat each case on the computer, Galland said.

"This technology is very beneficial because we can record every case that comes in and use it for future students," Galland said. "This reduces the need for live animal subjects."

The computer system, which involves 11 computers, is located on the fourth floor of Trotter Hall.

Six computers are used by the students for teaching purposes, Galland said. One computer is used as a file server, which allows each student to work on a different program at the same time. The remaining four are used by faculty to develop the programs.

The research done at K-State now will benefit other veterinary schools in the long run, he said.

"We can develop programs here that will be shared with other schools across the country," he said. "There are 26 vet schools in the country, and this technology will give us the best multi-media lab of any of the schools."

The donation began with a written proposal from Galland.

"I wrote a proposal expressing our need for this type of technology," Galland said. "IBM had the best equipment to fulfill our need."

Tony Mynsted, IBM account executive, said K-State's reputation is at the forefront of veterinary medicine, which was one of the reasons IBM accepted the proposal.

"We think that the leading-edge research that K-State is conducting will benefit the whole field of veterinary medicine in the long run," Mynsted said.

'Oklahoma' cast performs with energy and versatility

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH
Collegian

Seeing Rogers and Hammerstein's "Oklahoma!" Friday night on stage at McCain Auditorium was like seeing a living piece of history performed.

"Oklahoma!" revolutionized musicals when it first appeared on the Broadway stage some 50 years ago and was the first musical ever whose storyline continued through its musical numbers. Up until that point, the story being told just stopped while popular songs were sung and the latest dance steps demonstrated.

Songs from the production like "Oh, What a Beautiful Mornin'" and "People Will Say We're in Love" told the story of the courtship of a stubborn young cowboy and a proud farmer's daughter in the Oklahoma territory at the turn of the century. They also changed the way musical theater was done forever.

Friday's production by the Troika Association featured April Harr as Laurey, Pamela Gregory as Aunt Eller and George Merrick as Curly. It was indeed something to have seen.

The music was beautifully performed by the actors. Amanda E. Watkins' rendition of man-hungry Ado Annie's song "I Cain't Say No" was a comedic treat.

In addition, Craig Benham's voice made his character, Jud Fry, all the more menacing to the audience when he sang "Lonely Room," a song about the character's dark desire for love and understanding from Laurey. Benham was enough to make your skin crawl.

The dancing, choreographed by Daniel Pelzig, combined ballet and jazz with a little can-can thrown in for good measure. It was exciting, energetic and told a story without the need for words.

The versatility of the ensemble cast was most entertaining for being able to go from two-stepping to tap-dancing (in cowboy boots, no less) to ballet.

As enjoyable as the production's singing and dancing could be, the acting was exaggerated and cartoonish. One character, Ali Hakim, the traveling salesman, was a walking gag line. That was the nature of the production, having come from a much more innocent era in theater history. For people used to the more realistic, though, it could be a bit irritating as the evening wore on.

All in all, "Oklahoma!" was good, clean fun. It was something the whole family could go to, something both Grandma and the grandkids would enjoy.

Siblings run household

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANHATTAN — Bill Leonard can make light of his inability to cook, but the responsibilities that come with managing a family are no laughing matter.

The 20-year-old is trying to hold together a family of five younger siblings while one parent is in a hospital, and the other is charged with attempted murder.

Leonard and his sister Elaina, 19, have become parents, counselors and providers to children whose ages range from 5 to 17.

"I wasn't at all prepared for this responsibility," he said. "At first I was just lost."

The children's mother, Lena, is in critical condition in St. Francis Hospital in Topeka. After surgery to control swelling of her brain and several days in a coma, she has yet to show encouraging signs of recovery.

Their father, William, is out on bond awaiting trial. He is charged with attempted murder in the beating of his wife. He is restricted from seeing her and from visiting the home. Bill Leonard said the children have been in contact with their father only by phone.

Bill and Elaina have juggled schedules at jobs and have taken turns driving to Topeka to check their mother's condition while the other watches over the family. He said hours on the road and at work and the pressures of home are beginning to take their toll.

"We got it coordinated so one of us can be at home while the other is out, but we're just going back and forth too much to carry it on long term," he said.

Help is coming from outside the family, which lightens the burden, he said. Friends and members of the First Congregational Church and its minister, the Rev. Donald Longbottom, have helped out.

"It makes me feel so relieved," Leonard said.

"There's no way I could do this by myself. When we said we'd keep the family together, I didn't know how I was going to do it, but I knew there were a lot of nice people in Manhattan and that there would be some way.

"Right now, I'm just thinking about everything like my mom is going to be back soon, and I think everyone else is looking at it like that too," he said. "That's the way we have to deal with it for now."

Leonard said he hoped the church fund could keep the family going for a year, at which point their future could be assessed and long-term decisions about the care of the children could be made.

Nonetheless, that support still doesn't reduce the pressure from the void left by two absent parents. The change in responsibility from being a 20-year-old going to movies with his girlfriend to providing for several young children has been overwhelming, Leonard said.

For the present, he's setting aside his personal ambitions.

"Someday, I'm going to feel very glad for what I did, and I'm sure my mom is going to be very happy too," he said.

▶STATE TO APPEAL HOUSE-ARREST SENTENCING

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) — The state will appeal the house-arrest sentence of former Wyandotte County commissioner who pleaded guilty to vehicular battery.

Deputy Attorney General John Bork on Friday filed a notice of appeal of the 90-day sentence given Patrick Scherzer. The petition claims Wyandotte County District Judge William Cook acted illegally in imposing house detention on Sept. 30. Cook retired a few hours after imposing the sentence.

Bork also asked the Wyandotte County District Court to postpone imposition of the sentence until after the appeal is considered. Scherzer began serving the sentence Oct. 4.

He pleaded guilty to driving the wrong way on Interstate 70 and striking two vehicles, leaving six people injured.

Dear Cassandra,

Would you mind taking a minute and answering my next two questions?

First of all, why are black people so loud and vocal? Many times I've been disturbed by inner-city youths hollering outside my window. Are they deaf? Has the bass from rap music finally taken its toll?

Secondly, what form of the English language are they speaking? I find myself at a total loss when it comes to carrying on a conversation with some of these guys.

Signed,
Word! (?)

Dear Surely You're Joking,

You mean you can carry on a conversation — with anyone? I'm thoroughly overwhelmed.

You have some problems that transcend even my diplomatic abilities. Get help and get some education. Your ignorance may one day hurt someone besides yourself.

Dear Cassandra,

I desperately need your help! Every morning, I wake up at exactly 7:14 a.m. It never changes! My alarm is set for 8 a.m., but I've never slept long enough to hear it. What can all this mean?

I've searched for the cause of my problem but cannot narrow my choices down to one answer. Can it be that the Guy Upstairs is letting me know in his own subtle way that my time will come at 7:14 some dreary morning?

Or possibly I am troubled by the MTV commercial that introduced me to the concepts of bestiality and sadomasochism? Perhaps I am troubled by my roommate's intense desire to form a group called "Sodomists Anonymous."

But why 7:14? I pray you have the answers!

Signed,
Ben Dover

Dear Ben Dover,

That's good. Almost as good as Joe.

Joe Mamma, that is.

Anyway, I think your problem is very, very serious — warranting immediate medical attention. You could have a tumor, or some kind of cyst or maybe an anomalous condition.

It looks pretty bleak. You probably don't have much time left. Give away all your money now. In fact, send a money order or check to: Cassandra, K-State Collegian. ...

Confusion ends in an evening of jazz

MATT BECHTOLD
Collegian

Union Station played host to a bit of confusion Thursday night. As the evening began, many students were caught by surprise because the band playing was not the one advertised.

Shangoya, a band whose style includes a mixture of reggae, calypso and ska, decided to back out of their contract with K-State when two of the other colleges in their touring block canceled.

Union Program Council usually tries to set contracts with performers in blocks with other schools, Burt Brungardt, Eclectic Entertainment chairman, said. As a result, UPC splits the cost with other schools and lowers K-State's individual costs.

However, this does tend to cause some problems, as those who attended the show can attest to. When the two other schools canceled on their dates, K-State was left in the cold. Brungardt said it was the talent agency's fault. He also said Mark McManus, Mid-America Talent representative, was in charge of getting any replacements in case of cancellation.

"He left us really high and dry," Brungardt said.

He said McManus claimed a band called the Minnesota Reggae All-Stars would play the venue in Shangoya's place. However, the replacement band never bothered to show up for the gig. Although the sound equipment arrived, the band was nowhere to be found.

Moods, a jazz trio, saved the evening.

The trio was contacted just seven hours before the performance and agreed to play the 90-minute set in place of Shangoya and the Minnesota Reggae All-Stars.

Moods is made up of Henry Ashwood, Fred Shepherd and Karen Martin. Ashwood, saxophonist and junior in music education, played front man for the show with jazz pianist Shepherd. Vocalist Karen Martin was unable to attend on such short notice.

The two men, who graced the stage, as well as saving it from a night of embarrassing emptiness, played 90 minutes of jazz with the audience's approval.

"Moods really came through for us," Brungardt said.

Moods usually plays at the Manhattan Country Club, and as the band played its set, one could hear the familiar sounds of cover songs like "Over the Rainbow," "Yesterday" and even "The Flintstones" theme song. Shepherd and Ashwood jazzed up these covers with their own style.

"The jazz band was a good replacement, despite having expected to hear the ska band," Matt Howe, freshman in biology, said. Howe said he stayed for the entire show.

Because those who came originally had expected reggae and ska, attendance for the event was low. Jazz was not something the audience was prepared for, and many people left when they discovered the mistake.

However, between 20 and 30 people decided to stay and take in an evening of jazz. A few people even migrated in late when they discovered the jazz band replacement.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD
Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Repairs to begin on Anderson Hall

University uses deferred funds to restore building

KIM DILLON
Collegian

The lightening strike that caused the August fire in Anderson Hall will cost the University approximately $1.2 million.

Slightly more than $1 million has already been temporarily deferred from K-State's Repair and Rehabilitation projects. This money was originally intended to fund projects from fire/life safety renovations to power plant boiler repairs.

According to the Status Report on Anderson Hall Repairs, revised Oct. 4, the estimated cost for the repairs is $1,164,200.

Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said he hopes the University can get the repair costs down to the available $1,027,000 by the time everything is done.

The total amount of money marked for use from the deferred projects is $1,027,000, according to the Anderson Hall Restoration Status Report of Sept. 15.

If additional funds are needed to complete the restoration, the administration is looking for other projects that still have funds available, Rawson said.

These available funds could then be deferred to subsidize the cost of the Anderson restoration.

One of the projects they hope not to delay is putting an elevator in Eisenhower Hall this spring, Rawson said.

There is still a possibility the project will be delayed if the money is needed.

"To complete the restoration as quickly as possible, we needed to identify some existing funds. The decision was made to delay some projects so this restoration could be started," Helen Cooper, assistant director of planning, said.

K-State receives a $2.4-million allocation for Repair and Rehabilitation projects from the Kansas Board of Regents, Rawson said.

The University is asking the board to seek an emergency supplemental appropriation to complete the deferred projects, according to the Sept. 15 Anderson Hall Restoration Status Report.

Members of the Joint Committee on State Building Construction were on campus for meetings three weeks ago, and they seemed favorable toward the idea of replacing the money, Rawson said.

"I believe we will be successful in getting the special appropriations," Rawson said.

The University of Kansas received an $18-million appropriation from the Kansas Legislature for rebuilding Hoch Auditorium, Allen Wiechert, university architect at KU, said. Hoch Auditorium was also struck by lightening June 15, 1991.

Victory puts Papandreou in power

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATHENS, Greece — Andreas Papandreou's Socialist party made a dramatic political comeback Sunday after voters rejected the conservative government's painful austerity measures.

Clearly upset, Premier Constantine Mitsotakis conceded defeat to Papandreou Sunday evening after voting returns showed the Socialists winning a clear majority in parliament.

"The election has been decided. The Greek people has chosen the Panhellenic Socialist Movement, which will form a government with a large majority in Parliament," Mitsotakis said, adding that he would also step down as leader of his party.

Papandreou, who was ousted after eight years of power in 1989 over a financial scandal, waved to a crowd of several thousand supporters outside his suburban Athens villa before making a televised victory speech.

"I want to thank the people from the bottom of my heart for the trust they showed in me," said Papandreou, who was later acquitted of charges by a special court that he had received missing funds from an Athens bank.

Thousands of Socialist supporters drove through the capital, honking their horns and waving green-and-white party banners.

With 47.2 percent of the votes counted, the Panhellenic Socialist Movement was ahead with 46.4 percent, while the ruling New Democracy party had 40.7 percent, the Interior Ministry said.

Official projections gave the socialist party, or PASOK, 169 seats and the New Democracy party 113 in the 300-member single chamber Parliament.

The Political Spring party would get 9 and the Communists 9, the projections said.

Mitsotakis and Papandreou drew battle lines in the campaign over the economy.

The conservatives froze wages, cut spending and reduced taxes, narrowing deficits and bringing inflation down to 12.8 percent, the lowest in more than a decade.

The ruling party wanted to continue streamlining the economy by selling off debt-ridden, state-controlled industries and some public utilities.

42 confirmed dead in capsized ferry

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — A ferry carrying more than 200 passengers capsized in rough seas off South Korea's west coast on Sunday.

Police said more than 120 people are dead or missing.

By nightfall, 74 people had been rescued, 42 were confirmed dead, and the rest were missing and presumed drowned, police said.

"The ship sank in less than 30 seconds," said Lee Sang-mun, who broke a window to escape his second-floor cabin. "There were many women and young people in my cabin, and few came out."

TV reports quoted survivors as saying most of the passengers were inside the cabins because of the bad weather and were trapped when the ferry capsized.

Most of the survivors had been on the upper decks and jumped or were thrown into the water before the ship went down, survivors said.

The West Sea Ferry sank off the coast of northern Chollabukdo province, about 140 miles southwest of Seoul. It was carrying passengers bound for a day of fishing and hiking on islands in the Yellow Sea.

Reports about the number of people aboard the ferry are conflicting because no passenger list was available, police said. State television quoted witnesses as saying there were 200 to 250 people on the boat, which had a capacity of 207.

The Yonhap news agency said the ship left Wido, about six miles off the mainland, 30 minutes behind schedule because of bad weather and headed to the island of Kyokpo, which is 11 miles away.

Gusting winds and high seas forced the ship to turn back about 2-1/2 miles from Wido, Yonhap said. As the ship was turning, it was swamped by waves, capsized and sank.

Police said more than 30 navy and civilian ships and 16 helicopters joined in rescue operations, but they were hampered by seas running 10 to 13 feet high.

Reducing deficit and strengthening families are keys

LEIGH NEVANS
Collegian

A former K-State student body president returned to campus Monday night to stress the importance of political activism.

Sam Brownback, a former state secretary of agriculture who is running for Kansas' 2nd congressional district, was the first speaker in the K-State College Republican Candidate Speaker Series.

K-State has produced some great leaders who first became politically active as students here, Brownback said.

"You have to find out what your passions are and follow that," he said. "Figure out what your core values are. Look at the inner person, what you believe and what you are about."

Brownback has a list of what he calls "got-to's," such as the deficit, growth of the economy and the social and moral fiber of the country.

"The deficit is a mortgage on you and your future," he said. "We're going to have to make real serious cuts."

The United States has the largest economy of any country, but the gap between us and other countries is closing, Brownback said.

The moral and social fiber issue is a serious one, Brownback said, but not one the government should try to tackle.

"We need strong families," he said. "The answer is not the government. It's the family."

Brownback used the opportunity to clarify his stance on the North American Free Trade Agreement.

"The NAFTA agreement is a positive one in general for Kansas. I'm for it," he said. "There will be some trade-offs, though."

There will be some dislocation, but Brownback said he thinks there needs to be training for those people in some other area.

The national health-care issue is complex, and changes are needed. However, Brownback said the government shouldn't be the one to make the changes.

"There are issues within health care that need to be dealt with," he said. "I don't trust the government as much as private sector to solve problems."

One of these health care issues is abortion.

"The federal government should not fund abortion. It's an issue that belongs at the state level."

Brownback said deficit reduction is one of his main concerns.

"The government needs to cut back to get globally competitive," he said. "Why couldn't we try a domestic spending closure bill?"

Congress needs to make some changes itself, Brownback said. Members of Congress ought to subject themselves to laws they subject everyone else to, he said.

"Congress ought to vote itself a pay cut," Brownback said. "It would send a strong signal to people. We ought to be making serious real cuts now. You don't tax your way out of this situation."

Brownback received his bachelor's degree in agricultural economics from K-State. He went on to get a law degree from the University of Kansas.

"I'm pleased with the enthusiasm the students have," said Greg Hill, senior in economics and chairman of College Republicans. "The candidates are helping us get people involved."

Karla Stovall, candidate for Kansas attorney general, will speak as part of the speakers series on Nov. 1, Hill said. Bob Benney, candidate for Kansas' 2nd Congressional District, will speak on Nov. 8.

Haitian Army backs rebels against U.S.

U.N. officials say peace mission not in jeopardy

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Army-backed toughs warning of another Somalia, wrecked plans for American troops to land as part of a U.N. peace mission in Haiti on Monday and drove away U.S. diplomats waiting to greet them.

The band of 25 to 50 men, some of them armed, then beat up merchants in the nearby market and fired guns while roving through the capital, including near the seaside U.S. Embassy. No casualties were reported.

Although the group was small, they clearly had the support of the powerful Haitian army's police division, which stood by or even helped the gang.

U.S. and U.N. officials said the disturbances would not halt the overall peace mission.

But it was yet another direct challenge by the military to the U.N. efforts to restore democracy to Haiti.

In Washington, the Clinton administration demanded the Haitian military explain why the troops were not allowed to land.

Madeleine Albright, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, brought a complaint to the Security Council, which met to consider endorsing it. A U.S. source at the United Nations said it contained a veiled warning of reimposing sanctions if Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali reports the Haitian peace plan has been violated.

Monday's landing was to begin in earnest the peace mission to restore democracy and rebuild the economy. About 100 other U.N. personnel — including 25 U.S. troops — are already in the country to do advance work.

After the disturbances, the White House delayed the deployment of the nearly 200 American military medics, engineers and civil affairs specialists aboard the USS Harlan County, an amphibious landing ship anchored 800 yards offshore. There was no word on when the troops might dock.

Following the killing of at least 17 American soldiers in Somalia last week, criticism has been growing in the United States about participation in the mission.

The docking will not take place until we have a permissive environment. That is, one that is safe for the men in the U.N. mission, said U.S. Army Maj. Jim Hinnant, a mission spokesman. Hinnant, one of the U.S. advance team flown in last week, said negotiations were under way between mission officials and the Haitian government.

Port officials supported by the Haitian military blocked the Harlan County's docking by moving another ship to the pier where arrangements were made days ago for the U.S. ship to berth at 10 a.m. Monday.

Guards at the dock refused to let Vicki Huddleston, deputy chief of mission at the U.S. Embassy, enter the gate, and police stood by or blocked traffic while a group of shouting Haitians filed off a bus.

Described later by a trembling Huddleston as a group of gangsters, a group of thugs, the men shoved diplomats and reporters gathered for the scheduled docking, then punched and kicked their cars as they fled.

"We don't want foreigners coming here and trying to tell us what to do!" one man screamed.

Another shouted: "We're going to do to them what they did in Somalia!"

About a half-dozen men made similar references to Somalia.

Haiti's military is betting the international community does not have the will to force it from power. The military seized control two years ago by overthrowing President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, Haiti's first freely elected leader.

Aristide is widely popular with Haiti's poor masses, and there is overwhelming support among ordinary Haitians for a U.N. peace plan that would put the traditionally repressive military back in the barracks.

"We know that the majority of the Haitian people support the U.S. presence," U.S. Embassy spokesman Stanley Schrager said just before the shouting gang forced American officials to leave the dock.

"I thinkit's pretty clear that the people who don't want this (democratic) process to go forward are a small, violent minority."

U.N. envoy Dante Caputo said the army, which agreed to the U.N. plan for returning Aristide to power Oct. 30, had exclusive responsibility for the protest.

"We believed its commitment was real. But no," Caputo told reporters at the U.S. Embassy.

He said the port harassment was only a temporary setback to plans to bring in a 1,600-member U.N. force of police trainers, medics and other support personnel by month's end. About 700 Americans are supposed to participate.

The mission is not to combat, but to help in the building of schools, roads, hospitals, barracks and other facilities, and also to provide military training after Aristide's Oct. 30 scheduled return to power.

Professor dies at 71 from heart attack

VICKY TILLIER
Collegian

Walter H. Smith, professor of animal sciences and industry for 42 years at K-State, died Monday at the Saint Mary Hospital after suffering a heart attack. He was 71.

"He was a loyal supporter of K-State and an outstanding teacher," said Don Good, professor emeritus in animal sciences and industry. "He was an absolutely outstanding individual from the standpoint of his character, integrity and his fairness to students."

Robert Schalles, professor of animal sciences and industry, said Smith was an extremely precise researcher in his field.

"I'm sure that the entire department and all the genetics and animal breeding people throughout the world will miss him," he said.

Smith's speciality was animal breeding and genetics. He earned his bachelor's degree from K-State in 1943 and his master's degree in 1949. He retired from K-State in 1992.

He dedicated all of his time and energy to being a good family man and to teaching the principles of animal breeding and horse science to students at K-State, Good said.

Good said Smith was wounded in World War II, after which he received a Purple Heart with an oak leaf cluster for his courage.

"He was an infantry soldier in the European Theatre," he said. "He fought in the battle of Northern France, the Rhineland and in the Battle of the Bulge."

In his spare time, Smith made furniture and worked on cars, Good said.

"I don't think many people knew Smith worked with his hands," he said. "He was very good with his hands. He enjoyed making furniture and tuning up automobiles."

He was born in Limon, Colo., on May 3, 1922.

Witch's hat worn to protest feminist stereotypes

JEREMY UNRUH
Collegian

Sandra Coyner does not normally wear a black witch's hat to campus.

Coyner, associate professor of women's studies, has been wearing a witch's hat for the past two weeks to protest Pat Robertson. Robertson is scheduled to give a Landon Lecture at K-State on Tuesday.

"I heard about Robertson's characterizations of feminists — about how feminism was an 'ideology' that urged women to leave our husbands, kill our children, destroy capitalism, become lesbians and practice witchcraft," Coyner said.

"I am a feminist, and I recognize every one of these phrases as a distortion and an over-generalization.

"I work all week long to teach students how to rise above stereotypes, distortion and over-generalization. When I heard of Robertson coming to K-State, all those feelings of anger came out," Coyner said.

However, Coyner doesn't plan to fight fire with fire. She said groups such as Robertson's Christian Coalition use anger as a tool to provoke others.

"I didn't just want to be angry back. I don't want to sink to his level," Coyner said. "I want to deflate Pat Robertson because he's full of hot air."

The biggest irony in the feminism vs. Pat Robertson conflict is Robertson portrays feminism as intolerant, she said.

"It is the right wing that is promoting intolerance," Coyner said.

It is in this way Robertson is trying to redefine Christianity, she said.

"If these people are allowed to define Christianity in America, on the whole I'd prefer witchcraft," Coyner said.

Witchcraft exists today, but not in the stereotypical sense, Coyner said.

Modern witchcraft focuses on the power of Mother Nature to improve self esteem and spiritual well-being, Coyner said. Witches such as Starhawk and Z. Budapest write books on the subject of redefining witchcraft as something that might be appealing to the power within each woman.

Modern witchcraft is completely benign, and in no way contradicts Christianity, she said.

Coyner said she is protesting over-generalization and is trying to suggest religions can promote tolerance.

Her strategy is to poke fun at Robertson. That is where the witch's hat comes in.

The hat came out of her family's costume trunk, and it also seemed appropriate because it is the Halloween season, Coyner said.

Coyner said the witch's hat is a real attention-getter.

"I decided to wear the hat to call attention to myself, and I've realized that doing something odd really makes people look at me," she said. "I hope it will make people think about all this."

LANDON LECTURE SPEAKER

Pat Robertson will speak today at 10:30 a.m. at McCain Auditorium.

Pat Robertson was born March 22, 1930. He founded the Christian Broadcasting Network, which became the only existing Christian television network in the United States, in 1959. The 700 Club, CBN's flagship program, has been on the air for 29 years, making it the longest-running religious TV show in history.

Robertson sought the Republican nomination for the presidency in 1988, but suspended his campaign in May and endorsed George Bush. In 1989, Robertson founded the Christian Coalition, a national organization that now has 370 chapters in the United States.

Bosnian aid detained by Serb authorization

ZAGREB, Croatia (AP) — Serbs failed to give the promised go-ahead Monday for the United Nations to send badly needed aid into two Bosnian Muslim towns.

Serbs in their stronghold of Banja Luka in northwest Bosnia-Herzegovina promised on Sunday to allow 250 tons of food and medicine to reach Maglaj and Tesanj, which aid workers said were jammed with as many as 150,000 Muslim refugees.

But the convoy, which would be the first aid shipment into the towns since June 1, remained in Banja Luka all day.

"It's clear the Bosnian Serbs have been dragging their feet," said Peter Kessler, spokesman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees in Zagreb, the Croatian capital.

Kessler said the convoy had been inspected by the Serbs, and he was awaiting approval for the 45-mile trip.

UNHCR officials complained that the authorization should take minutes rather than days.

In a statement, the Bosnian Serb army accused UNHCR official Larry Hollingsworth of repeatedly planning and sending convoys without any permission or agreement with the Serb authorities.

Maglaj and Tesanj are in a pocket of government-held territory in central Bosnia that has been cut off for months. The last aid convoy to the area, on June 1, was shelled, and two Danish aid workers were killed.

Since then, relief officials have warned that the area has become a potential humanitarian disaster.

Gambling pays off big for K-State student

Perseverance and luck paid off for a K-State student Monday night when he won $4,000 in the Club Keno Kansas Lottery.

Bill Tanner, junior in pre-optometry, bought his winning ticket at Mrs. O'Leary's Pub in Old Chicago's Bar and Grill. Before winning, Tanner had invested $6 in unsuccessful attempts to win.

"I was going to go home early because I was down six bucks," Tanner said. "I was kind of feeling like a dumb-ass because I felt I'd wasted money for no reason."

Tanner played the Seven Spot Game with the odds of 1 to 4.23 of winning. The computer randomly selected the numbers for him and matched all seven.

"The computer made me a winner," he said.

Tanner said he was initially doubtful that he won, but once it was official, he was astonished.

"I bought a round, and I tried to stay calm," he said. "Then I came outside and screamed."

With his earnings, Tanner plans to pay his credit card debts and possibly put a down-payment on a car.

Old Chicago's Bar and Grill has offered Kansas Lottery games since it opened on March 22.

"We just decided when we opened Old Chicago's that it was too small for a pool table, so we decided we would gamble instead," said Thom Walker, manager of Cactus Jack's and Old Chicago's.

Middle East peace plan gains support

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — Palestinian Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat gained an influential ally Monday in efforts to get the Palestine Central Council to endorse a peace accord with Israel.

Farouk Kadoumi, head of the PLO's political department, set aside misgivings about parts of the accord and joined Arafat in urging the council to endorse it.

The pact gives Palestinians a measure of self-rule in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank town of Jericho, with their powers to be spread over a wider area pending the outcome of talks in the next three years.

Terms of the accord require approval by the Palestine National Congress, or parliament in exile. The 107-member Central Council is a policy-making body, and its approval is preliminary to adoption by the much larger congress.

Radicals within the PLO oppose the accord because it fails to deal with the status of Jerusalem or guarantee the right of refugees to return home.

"This was the maximum we could get under the current international circumstances and because of Arab weakness resulting from the Gulf War," Arafat said Monday in urging the council to endorse the accord.

"This is the first state — it is an essential step upon which we will build our independent Palestinian state," he said. "Those who reject it should understand that our next generations will have to continue the long march."

Despite opposition from hard-line Palestinian factions that have sworn to sabotage the PLO-Israeli agreement, Arafat is expected to win backing for the Sept. 13 accord.

At times it seemed chaotic, but Friday the stage came steadily together for the Troika Organization's production of "Oklahoma."

"Oklahoma's" crew has several hours of set-up work to do before every performance.

"Every theater we walk into is different," Jerry Nadal, production stage manager, said

John Luce, technical director, said the show takes six to eight hours to set up.

Twenty members of local chapters of the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employees worked with K-State students to put the set together, said Bill Tuzincka, music teacher at Southeast of Saline High School and union steward.

"We don't play a lot of colleges. So, we don't get student crews often," Luce said.

Twenty-six local people are needed to help unload and set up two 48-foot trailers full of lights, costumes, sound equipment, sets and scenery.

Set-ups for evening shows start at 9 a.m., and set-ups for matinee shows start at 6 a.m.

"It's like running a class everyday," Luce said.

The set took about a month to build in the organization's scene shop, Nadal said.

"The sets are designed to come apart, because they know they are going to be on the road," Nadal said.

Seven people are on the crew.

A technical director oversees the load-in of the set and takes care of problems in other departments.

The master electrician's responsibilities include all of the production's lighting equipment.

The master carpenter supervises K-State's crew as it puts the set together.

The sound engineer is responsible for the sound equipment. There are 16 body microphones. In addition, the whole orchestra is under microphone, and floor microphones are on the stage, Nadal said.

Eight musicians travel with the production, and the rest of the orchestra sound comes from a synthesizer, he said.

The production's cast of 25 has a large wardrobe. The wardrobe supervisor makes sure all of the costumes are ready for the performance. There are five crates full of costumes, some of which need to be washed everyday, Jeanne Bland, wardrobe supervisor, said.

The props supervisor is responsible for all the props in the show and the set dressing.

The production-stage manager watches everything go in and checks to make sure it fits.

During the show, the production stage manager calls set moves, light and spot-light cues. Because the production uses a local crew for lighting, every show brings a new spot-light person, Nadal said.

The local crew helps put together sets and works with the costumes.

"I'm on wardrobe. So, it's my job to unpack costumes and make sure everyone's station has their hats, make-up, shoes and whatever they need," Rebecca Bowman, freshman in pre-medicine, said. "Tonight, I'll help hang up costumes during the show, and afterward we'll pack everything back up again."

The crew works six days a week and averages eight to nine performances a week, Nadal said.

"Every night is like an opening night for us," he said.

▲ Actor Brian Myers leaps into a spinning lasso during a musical number. "Oklahoma" was the first musical to have music directly tied into the plot of the play.

U.S. Somalian effort has become too costly for Americans

Our mission in Somalia is no longer about feeding starving masses. It's about saving face.

And once again, American foreign-policy makers have leaped into a messy quagmire that threatens to undermine the very face they wish to save.

In our hunt for warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid, the "bad guy" so ruthlessly painted across newscasts, we've put aside our humanity and instead instigated a full-scale civil war.

He attacks us; so, of course we must retaliate to show "our resolve." In the face of our counter-attack, Aidid attacks again and forces us to once again strike back.

There emerges the vicious circle that no one sees. While many Americans have died, by Red Cross estimates hundreds of Somalis, many innocent, have been killed in U.S. attacks.

What is the "acceptable loss ratio" our government will accept before Aidid is captured?

America is not the only one. Belgian troops were reported to have killed 200 Somalis last summer near Kismayu.

Many of the Belgian troops interviewed after returning home told tales of intense brutality and advised that U.N. estimates of dead Somalis should be multiplied by a factor of five.

Later, an American sniper, writing home to his father, reported causality estimates are kept down by demanding positive identification on all dead.

Last August, American forces stormed a house where it was believed Aidid was hiding.

Instead, the troops accidentally shot a former commissioner of police in Somalia who once worked for the British.

He is now in critical condition, and his relatives cannot get a visa to the U.K. to help him, despite being a pensioner of the British government.

The list goes on, and America isn't being told a lot by its own government.

The only way we can save face now is to find a peaceful solution to the problem.

We need to quit giving Aidid an excuse to hit back at us and continue the circle.

Our Somalian policy needs overhauled.

It's peace talks or more death. It's time to find an answer and quit with all the saving face.

End the problem now, while it still can be ended peacefully.

THE SCOURGE OF INTER-IQ DATING

The planets must be out of alignment. Anyone who knows me is aware I am usually a ray of sunshine bringing constant joy into the lives of those around me. But lately, I've been a tinge irritable.

A lot of things have been scoring high on the "Smith-Oh-please! Scale of Irritation" lately. Any topic of discussion remotely related to Pat Robertson, for example. I hope that whole thing is over after today. As long as he doesn't serve funny-tasting Kool-Aid™, who cares?

Loud drunk football fans banging trash cans and singing fight songs at 5 a.m. is another gem that makes me want to rip my hair out. We only won by 1 point. I mean, the score was 10-9, for God's sake. Legally, to bang things after 2 a.m., the margin of victory should be at least 10 points.

People with the first name Michael are also receiving way too much attention for my taste. Michael Jackson. (Slow news day?) Michael Jordan. (I bet he still does those Nike™ ads.)

But what's really been irritating me lately is this recent surge of inter-IQ dating. Inter-IQ dating occurs when the party of the first part enters into a lasting relationship with a party of the second part whose IQ differs from the IQ of the party of the first part by more than 20 points. In other words, smart people hooking up with comparative idiots.

For example, it would be a clear-cut case of Inter-IQ dating if Albert Einstein were to call up Barbie and say, "Hey babe, wanna catch that new Richard Gere movie tonight after I finish this theory of relativity thing?"

SARA SMITH

Why would a smart man deliberately pick a stupid woman? What would you have to talk about? I wonder.

Men like this astound me. They always have. Aren't they bored to tears? What are their conversations like?

Smart Man: Honey, what do you think of Aristotle's theory of the Immovable Mover?

Stupid Woman: The last time I hired movers, I couldn't get them off their butts either.

Silence.

Man: Do you want to go to bed now?

Woman: OK.

The same is true of women who like the strong, stupid type. Do they really find this attractive? Some smart women gravitate to men who think Beavis and Butt-Head offer serious social commentary. Why?

Smart Woman: Say, where were you when Kennedy was shot?

Stupid Man: Jackie Kennedy was shot?

Silence.

Woman: Do you want to go to bed now?

Man: OK. Huh, huh.

Of course, these fictional conversations imply I think the smart half of these equations are using the stupid halves for their talents in, oh ... other areas. The stereotypical, and I stress stereotypical, picture of this is the silly blond cheerleader being led around by her ponytail. This is sometimes legitimate, sometimes not. I don't think it's the main source of Inter-IQ dating. Some people just don't have enough self-esteem to date a person who is on or above their intellectual level. It's too much of a challenge and takes too much effort.

It's probably much easier to gaze into glazed eyes at the end of a long day. It must be reassuring to think that the rest of the world is as inferior to you as the person you are dating is.

Friends do this too, for the same reasons. You've seen these friendships before.

The smart friend uses the stupid friend as an ego builder, and the stupid friend sort of nods and smiles in a daze. The conversations are comical. There's a lot of this:

"Am I right, or am I right?"

"You're right. I don't know what the hell you're talking about. So, I assume you're right."

"I knew I was right. Damn, I am so smart."

"You sure are."

And so it goes.

Maybe I'll never fully grasp this concept. I like to be with people who understand me and who I understand. Otherwise, it's just wasted air.

Collegian's Weekend proves to be weak with strip bar story for everyone to see

Editor,

The Collegian's Friday Weekend edition went too far with the Dr. Love's story, which didn't even merit publishing, much less a page story and two photographs.

The Collegian editors and writers responsible should feel shame knowing the many visitors for the University of Kansas/K-State game opened our student newspaper to tactless print that directly reflected on the University.

It's not an issue of freedom of press, but a question of taste.

GUN CONTROL IS THE SOLUTION WE NEED TO STOP VIOLENCE

A student got shot at Junction City High School at the beginning of the school year. It's something I've thought about a lot during the past couple of months.

I'm student teaching at Wamego High School this semester. Some of my students and I for the past week have been talking about crime and violence. We watched an award-winning documentary called "Scared Straight" about throwing juvenile delinquents in prison for three intensive hours of interaction with violent criminals in the hopes they'll be scared enough to avoid ever going back.

And today, we'll finish up a news program called "48 Hours on Crack Street."

Granted, these kids are seniors in high school, but I don't remember talking about anything like that when I was in their shoes. Of course, then, Wichita didn't have one of the fastest increasing violent-crime rates in the country.

Gun control, at least to me, was a distant issue.

Kansas was boring then. Murders were big, big news. I barely knew what drugs and gangs were; at least they didn't have anything to do with my immediate surroundings. They were something I read about in the newspaper.

I doubt I could say the same for even one of the students I have now.

Peter Falk, narrating "Scared Straight," told my class that about half of all violent crimes were committed by kids under the age of 21.

That was 1978. There were about 35,000 violent crimes in 1978.

A couple of days ago, I saw on CNN that that number has increased to 112,000 — a 93-percent increase just since 1987. But the most astonishing statistic told what age group committed the most murders in the United States last year — kids 15-19.

There is no other place like America in the world. No other country, despite civil unrest and terrorism, is as violent as ours. In Ireland, and Bosnia, and Israel and even Somalia, people fight over their beliefs.

They kill each other over differences that define their very beings.

So far this year, 19 people have been killed in Belfast, which has roughly the same population as Wichita.

LAJEAN RAU

More than 40 people have been murdered in Wichita this year.

In Wichita, people kill each other over drug money, property, rumors and insults. Many of the victims are innocent bystanders trying to go about the business of living and working in a city where, more and more, people not responsible for any of the violence are prisoners in their own homes.

So, is our culture's violence a gun-control issue? I say it is. Whether or not you believe guns are to blame, no one can argue that making them harder to get wouldn't at least help.

I read in Newsweek that people blame our country's violence, at least in part, to the American ideals of personal rights, individualism and a "frontier mentality."

But, as this columnist said, this explanation is "grossly oversimplified."

"Canada expanded across a huge frontier. Australia was colonized by convicts. People like to kill each other there, too. The main differences is that they lack the means to do so with ease — the gun."

In 1990, for instance, 10 people in Australia and 68 in Canada were killed with handguns. In the United States the number was 10,567.

My brothers and my dad are avid hunters. My friends hunt. I've shot guns a few times.

It's a sport. It's fun. And it can be as safe as bowling if it's done correctly.

But if my brother wanted to kill someone, it would be at the very least inconvenient for him to conceal one of his shotguns or rifles.

Most people who use handguns and automatic weapons use them to shoot people.

So make them illegal, or at least next to impossible to get.

No sane gun enthusiast could argue against that. No responsible hunter should expect to be able to purchase a gun as quickly and easily as a Big Mac.

And if I were a hunter, I would want to be counted among the ranks of a select, well-trained, responsible few who own and use guns.

Gun control does not — despite warnings from the National Rifle Association — take away your right to keep and bear arms. And it should be a federal law.

People call our youth a lost generation. I don't think a lot of gun-control opponents have have stopped to think about just how ominous that is.

If we don't stop fooling ourselves about the intentions of the writers of the Constitution, we may fool ourselves right into something we can't get out of.

Students practice English with conversation partners

TORI NIEHOFF
Collegian

Each semester, the International Student Center offers a conversation partner program requiring no expertise.

"The objective is to help international students with spoken English by uniting them with American students," Motaz Hourani, program coordinator, said.

No foreign-language background is mandatory, and the center prefers it when the American does not speak the international language. This guarantees all conversations are in English.

"The idea is to bring two culturally different students together. It is a non-formal agreement where two students meet and talk about whatever they want," Hourani said. "Most find it to be an enjoyable experience and a way to make long-lasting friendships."

The procedure starts when both students fill out an application available in the center. Students are then paired according to common interests, hobbies and, sometimes, age.

A letter is then sent to each student, and the initial contact is made. An average of about 60 pairs are matched each semester.

"We are still working on matching students for this semester," Hourani said. "We have had a late start, and many people are still applying."

The center asks the students to meet about a minimum of two hours per week. This depends on the schedules and activities of the students.

For the American, the program is a firsthand experience with a different culture, whereas international students gain insight into everyday slang and language they are trying to understand.

"I really don't have a reason for applying to be matched. I thought it would be fun to meet someone and help them understand our everyday language," Jennifer Trahan, junior in arts and sciences, said.

The program involves many different nationalities. There are usually not as many Spanish and European students who apply.

This gives Americans a better chance at dealing with a culture, such as Japanese or Chinese, in which they don't have much background.

The demands of the program are growing — each semester more people apply.

"If I have more international students than Americans, I will find a match somehow. All of these students should be able to have someone to help them with the spoken language. The program is beneficial to both people, and usually a new friend is made," Hourani said.

Group focuses on women's issues

Society supports diversity overlay, social change

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

The Women's Studies Society, a new campus organization, encouraged men and women interested in social change to join their ranks during a meeting Monday night.

"We're active for social change and the diversity overlay," said Melissa Todd, senior in English literature and women's studies and vice president of the Women's Studies Society. "Our goal is to keep awareness up on women's issues such as domestic abuse and act as support for anyone who needs us."

Sherry Sperman, senior in sociology, women's studies and ethnic studies and president of the Women's Studies Society, said the group plans to offer help to Lena Leonard, who is in critical condition in St. Francis Hospital in Topeka.

Leonard's husband, William, is being charged with attempted murder in the beating of his wife.

"We honestly feel community support is necessary, and it could have been one of us," Sperman said.

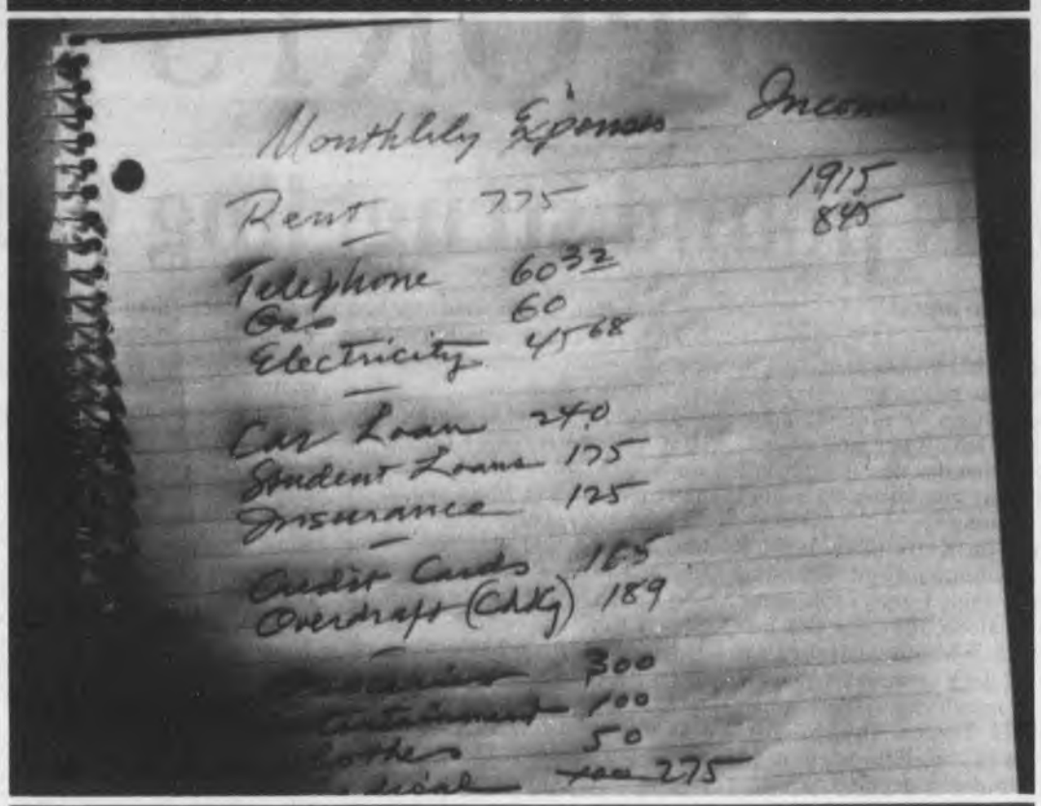
The society supports the proposed diversity overlay that would require K-State students to take some sort of cultural diversity course before graduating, she said.

Todd said it is of utmost importance to support the diversity overlay.

"It needs to be a grass-roots movement," Sperman said. "We need to start with masses in order for the few people that are going to be voting on it to hear."

Club members discussed the Pat Robertson protest planned for today. The club will distribute black arm bands for anyone who wishes to separate themselves from Robertson supporters, Sperman said.

"We respect his right to speak, but don't agree with him," Sperman said. "Just because he has a packed auditorium doesn't mean it's full of supporters."



Todd said the society is planning a trip to the National Women's Studies Conference. The society also hopes to sponsor a conference in Manhattan to discuss the feminist movement, she said.

Todd said there is still a lot of negative attention directed at feminists today.

"We'd rather define ourselves than have someone else define us," Todd said.

GET ON THE FAST TRACK AND SAVE MONEY!

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

IRONICALLY, THE TIME TO START SAVING FOR RETIREMENT IS WHEN IT LOOKS LIKE YOU CAN LEAST AFFORD IT.

Can't afford to save for retirement? The truth is, you can't afford not to. Not when you realize that your retirement can last 20 to 30 years or more. You'll want to live at least as comfortably then as you do now. And that takes planning.

By starting to save now, you can take advantage of tax-deferral and give your money time to compound and grow. Consider this: set aside just $100 each month beginning at age 30 and you can accumulate over $154,031* by the time you reach age 65. But wait ten years and you'll have to budget $211 each month to reach the same goal.

Even if you're not counting the years to retirement, you can count on TIAA-CREF to help you build the future you deserve—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Bills pound struggling Oilers 35-7

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — The Buffalo Bills picked up against the Houston Oilers on Monday night where they left off last January.

Except that this time, they didn't have to fall behind by 32 points before winning.

With Jim Kelly throwing for three touchdowns and Thurman Thomas rushing for 90 yards in the first half alone, the Bills beat the Oilers 35-7 Monday night in a replay of their memorable playoff game 10 months ago. That's when the Bills forged the biggest comeback in NFL history, erasing a 35-3 third-quarter deficit to win 41-38 in overtime.

This time, the Bills used a 21-point second quarter to break a 7-7 tie, and Houston turned the ball over seven times, continuing the horrific slide that started in that game on Jan. 3.

Buffalo got 28 of its points in the first half — its four offensive touchdowns in 30 minutes was one more than it had produced in its previous three games. The Bills are now 4-1 and tied with Miami for first in the AFC East.

The Oilers lost their third straight game and stand 1-4.

Houston, which had a week off to try to end its slide, continued instead to fall apart — this game was no help to coach Jack Pardee's shaky job security. On one series just before the final Buffalo touchdown on Kenneth Davis' 3-yard run in the fourth quarter, the Oilers were called for pass interference, then had 12 men on the field on two consecutive plays.

But that was only the culmination of the Houston futility.

On offense, the Oilers couldn't hold the ball and allowed four sacks. Before being lifted in the third quarter, Warren Moon threw three interceptions — two of them were batted at the line of scrimmage — and now has had 11 passes picked off in five games.

On defense, the Oilers let Thomas run loose in the first half and left Andre Reed and Don Beebe wide open on three TD catches.

Beebe scored the first TD, a 34-yard pass from Kelly on the first play after Cornelius Bennett intercepted a pass he batted down to nose tackle Jeff Wright, then picked off on the deflection.

A 17-yard TD pass from Moon to Leonard Harris tied it at 7-7, but the Bills came right back with an 87-yard drive capped with a 24-yard TD pass from Kelly to Reed early in the second quarter. Reed caught a 39-yarder four minutes later, and Thomas capped off a 21-point quarter with a 7-yard TD run with 1:52 in the half.

Kelly completed 15 of 25 passes for 247 yards while Thomas rushed for 92 yards on 24 carries after his 90-yard first half.

The second half was a comedy of errors, highlighted by a 35-yard scramble by Moon, the longest run of his 15-year career in the NFL and Canada. Typically, two plays later, Marvcus Patton deflected a pass and Darryl Talley intercepted to end that threat.

Mendez selected for award

Senior free safety Jaime Mendez was the recipient of K-State's Athlete of the Week honor Monday in a split vote over volleyball player Yolanda Young and golfer Scott Hovis.

Jaime Mendez

Mendez recorded 18 tackles, including 11 solo stops, to lead the Cats defensively in a 10-9 victory against the University of Kansas Saturday.

K-State's defense didn't allow a touchdown, marking the first time since 1966 that KU hasn't had a touchdown in the matchup.

"We had a lot of guys play well on defense, but Jaime Mendez made an awful lot of plays," Coach Bill Snyder said. "He bailed us out on two or three occassions when the rest of our defense broke down."

Mendez just missed receiving the Big Eight Conference Defensive Player of the Week, losing in a split vote to Nebraska's Barron Miles.

Students seek different learning

PAULA MURPHY
Collegian

Students are flocking to new schools in town.

They are not seeking traditional academic studies, but a different kind of learning. They want to train their bodies, minds and emotions through the study of the martial arts.

Chris Hundven, senior in kinesiology, attended his first martial arts class this year.

"I've always been interested in it," he said. "I plan to use it for physical fitness, along with weight lifting."

Monks in China, India and Tibet also used martial arts for exercise. Records have been found from at least 2000 B.C. that describe similar techniques. The different kinds of martial arts include karate, judo, tae kwon do, jujitsu, aikido, tai chi, hapkido, kendo, kung fu and Chinese wrestling.

Each discipline has different concentrations. Tae kwon do involves kicking, striking and blocking. Judo teaches throwing, flipping and grappling.

Jeff Sullivan, Manhattan resident, is a third-degree black belt in tae kwon do, hapkido and judo. He began studying at the University of Iowa.

"Being a black belt is somewhat similar to having a Ph.D. in an academic field," he said.

A beginner has a white belt. When a sufficient level of competency has been reached, the student is invited to test. Each successful test allows the student to advance to higher belts.

There is no standard system among different schools and styles. Typically, a white belt signifies a novice level. A brown belt indicates an advanced level, and a black belt means a level of expert proficiency. Other colors signify intermediate ranks.

It has taken Sullivan 10 years to attain his third-degree black belt. The highest rank is a ninth degree.

"Children study the martial arts for fun and self-defense," Sullivan said. "Adults study it for self-defense and exercise."

The study of martial arts may affect many parts of students' lives.

"Tae kwon do is my way of life," Sullivan said. "It's the way I live. The attitude and the discipline rub off on every part of your life."

The martial arts can increase stamina and concentration, Sullivan said. "It can also increase your flexibility, help you lose weight, increase your balance and agility, and increase your lean muscle mass."

Chris Henry, junior in agricultural engineering, has been studying tae kwon do for more than a year.

"It keeps you in shape, and you can do it any time," he said. "It's self-defense. It's a sport you can use in a crisis situation. It will always be there for you."

Sullivan said martial arts involve serious self-discipline.

"When you step onto the training floor, you adopt an attitude where you will learn and be serious," Sullivan said.

Students learn the five tenets of the martial arts. They are courtesy, integrity, perseverance, self-control and indomitable spirit.

Korean is the universal language of the martial arts.

"That means you can go anywhere in the world to train," Sullivan said.

Youngsters find discipline in martial arts

PAULA MURPHY

Two quick claps punctuated the barren room. An order was barked.

Before the echo died, more than 30 kids scrambled to form precise lines.

Once they found their place, they stood silently, feet together, arms straight at their sides.

"Brandon," the instructor yelled, "Do you think strong stomach muscles are a good thing for martial artists?"

"Yes sir," the boy said.

"I do, too," the instructor said with a grin. "Everybody down. Let's do sit-ups. Come on, feet up. Let's go."

James Woodyard, 11, was among the group.

He is one of the many who are studying martial arts.

After six months, he has advanced from a white belt to a yellow belt.

"I'm a yellow belt going on orange, I hope," he said.

Woodyard will have to display his knowledge of physical accomplishments and ethical rules before he will be allowed to advance.

"I like studying because it's fun," he said. "It's interesting. You learn how to defend yourself, like if you get in a fight or something."

The instructor is quick to discipline his students.

"Are we supposed to have shoes on the training floor?" the instructor asked.

"No sir," a boy said.

"Give me 25 push-ups. That's 12-and-a-half for each shoe."

Wesley Proctor, 9, has been studying for almost two years.

"He loves it," Proctor's grandmother, Marilyn Coxwell, said. "He loves everything about it."

As her grandson approached, Coxwell smiled. "I like the discipline part of it."

Jeff Sullivan, a third-degree black belt, said martial arts are for everyone.

"Kids and adults can participate and gain positive benefits," he said. "You can study it until you die."

Tips and outlook for big game archery hunting this fall

TAD MUSSELWHITE

It's the second weekend of October, and still the tags remain in the hunting belt.

Archery seasons for deer and turkey opened up the first weekend of October, and if you're like me, you've been in the woods and have seen a couple of deer or maybe even a flock of fall gobblers.

The deer have not yet began to move like they are known to during rut, but it shouldn't be too long before the deer hit pre-rut.

The last two weeks have been rather uneventful as far as signs of scrapes or rubs. I have talked to a couple of people who claim to have seen a couple of scrapes, including one that reeked of urine.

This weekend also gave me an excellent shot at a nice-sized doe. Being the optimist that I am, I passed it up waiting for the big buck to come creeping up behind.

Many hunters I have listened to seem to believe that rut will last only a few days, maybe a week. This is malarkey.

The fact is, rut can last up to at least 40 days. It can be turned off and on by hot and cold spells in the weather.

It is a safe bet to count on the peak of rut to hit sometime in November or early December. A wildlife biologist for the Kansas Wildlife and Parks said the unusually wet weather pattern over the past months should not affect the timing or extent of rut.

I suggest getting out into the woods — if not to hunt, simply to scout out the deer and the area you plan to hunt. A hunter can actually learn more by going out and observing deer in their natural habitat without having the pressure of getting a good shot.

When the deer come close, see what you can get away with. Try not to spook the deer, but try making slow, steady movements, and watch to see what the deer reacts to.

I think you will find that the deer are not as wary as most hunters think. This may be because there has not been much pressure from other hunters.

Doing this gives the hunter a prime opportunity to look for scrapes and rubs, which are starting to appear along deer trails.

If you are fortunate enough to find one of these signs, look for a good spot to place your stand. Make sure you have good shooting lanes and enough cover to at least break up your outline. I have been primarily hunting from the ground, trying to stalk deer, and have had considerable success in getting close to a number of does and small yearlings.

Purchasing a turkey tag might not be a bad idea either. I have been seeing flocks of turkeys throughout the woods I have been hunting.

The first day my hunting partner and I set up on the edge of a wheat field, we happened to find ourselves in the middle of a flock coming down out of their roosts.

We were close. Very close. My buddy even got soiled by turkey droppings and hit on the head by a falling branch as the gobbler came out of its roost.

My advice for hunting turkeys will probably be argued among some hunters, but I would encourage the fall hunter to pack a diaphragm call and do a series of putts and purrs for close turkeys trying to set them up for the kill. Ranging turkeys can also be lured in by doing a series of yelps.

I have seen video footage of a local hunt last fall where a hunter yelped in a nice flock of the wise old birds by simply imitating a yelp using only his voice.

The turkeys came running right up to him and walked around him curious as to where the call was coming from. They were there for darn near 20 minutes.

Another method for hunting the elusive birds is to locate the flock and walk right up through them, waving your arms or yelling, causing the flock to break up, fleeing danger.

Then, simply set up and let out a series of yelps and putts to bring the flock back together in your area.

This may take up to an hour before you see the turkeys again, but be patient, and you may just get a shot.

Good luck.

Befriend the hairball

Dear Cassandra,

I have a big, hairy problem. It's bad enough I live in a dorm room, but my resident adviser is a long-haired hippie. He is a walking mop, with his "Freedom Rock" hair and his beanpole body.

This is the first of two hindrances. He takes a 45-minute shower, and we can't figure out if he is washing that crusty mop, doing a testicular-cancer check or pulling his root.

When he is done with his beanpole scouring, he leaves behind a scuzzy surprise — a giant HAIRBALL. We don't know if it's from that mop or his root.

It looks like a drowned rat, tail and all, plugging up the drain. Then when the water floods, it crawls up your leg. It scares us to go into the bathroom, in more ways than one.

We would approach him, but he is just a nauseous sphincter. Cassandra, what can I do? Get a rat trap or leave him a jar of petroleum jelly and a sperm donor card?

Signed,
DA' NADS

Dear Dormie Dude,

So, yer worried about yer R.A., eh? With his "Freedom Rock" hair? Lord.

I think you should try to trap the little fella — the hairball, that is — and all of his successors. Then start a compilation of daily hairballs. Someday you'll have one gigantic, incredible hairball. Hairball with a capital H.

Surely you remember that one Ren and Stimpy show, where Ren finds out that hairballs are excruciatingly valuable.

Hairballs are good for scrubbing your pots and pans, cleaning out the wax from your ears, and when boiled with olive oil, hairballs make great homemade pasta!

Regarding his alleged preoccupation with his "root" (I prefer crooked willies, if you recall), I'm not so sure you should really concern yourself with his privies. You may get some sort of rash if you think about it too much.

Take my advice, and make friends with a nauseous sphincter today!

REVIEW

Sylvester Stallone's newest endeavor "Demolition Man" exploded at the box office this past weekend. However, this film bombs on the silver screen.

The story begins in 1996. Los Angeles is in a shambles, and the streets are controlled by maniacal criminals.

Then enters our hero, police officer John Sparton, played by Sylvester Stallone.

Sparton is recruited to apprehend and arrest bad guy Simon Phoenix, played by Wesley Snipes.

The operation to arrest Phoenix goes awry. Both Sparton and Phoenix wind up in a cryogenic prison, frozen in captivity for years.

The story moves to the year 2032. The city of Los Angeles has merged with other southern California cities and is called San Angeles. There's no smog, no crime and no traffic jams. Now that's science fiction.

Phoenix escapes his cryogenic incarceration and begins wreaking havoc throughout the now passive city. The SAPD reinstates Sparton and turns him loose to recapture Phoenix.

Stallone has some funny moments throughout the film. In addition, Snipes plays a great bad guy, but these performances are over-shadowed by weak script writing and too much gratuitous violence.

Sparton also has a love interest in this brave new world, Lenina Huxley, played by Sandra Bullock. Bullock's acting is delivered too stiffly and seems contrived.

Unfortunately for Sparton, Huxley and the viewing audience, sex is outlawed. They must resort to having virtual reality sex (reminiscent of "The Lawnmower Man" sex scenes.)

All in all, "Demolition Man" would have been better off left in the freezer.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be on time. Today will undoubtedly be the day of the pop quiz.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Wear shorts sometime today. It may be your last chance this year.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Finish your homework early. Unexpected plans will arise.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Go to a lecture today. The atmosphere could prove to be interesting. ... to say the least.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Pay attention to your cat. It has been feeling neglected lately.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Climb a tree in your underwear. It will give you a new perspective.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Go to the Rec. Your beer belly is beginning to show.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take the evening off. You deserve a break — go to a movie.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Take your coat to the dry-cleaners. You may need it soon.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Get plenty of sleep tonight. Tomorrow you will need to pull an all-nighter.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Didn't you listen? I said buy the blue one. Now go take back that hideous pink thing.

UPC shows local art

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

Student artists are getting a chance to strut their stuff this week.

The Union Program Council Arts Committee's 1993 Student Art Show is on display in the Union Art Gallery until Oct. 29.

The show consists of work submitted by students to the UPC Arts Committee. Submissions were judged by a panel of three artists and art instructors. One judge was a local illustrator; another was from Kansas City, Mo., and the third was from New York City.

The judging took place on Oct. 6.

Works were entered into one of three categories for the show. The first category was two-dimensional, consisting of drawings, paintings and the like. The second category was three-dimensional and consisted of sculptures and ceramic work.

The final category was graphic design. It consisted of things such as lettering and computer art.

Shelly Rasmussen, UPC Program Advisor, said the response to the show has been overwhelming. She estimated the show received 70 to 80 entries this year.

"We've got an overwhelming amount of entries, and we'd like to exhibit all of the pieces entered," she said, "but we have a limited amount of space."

Rasmussen said deciding on what pieces to show is always tough.

"We sometimes just go with a percentage of the total pieces (submitted)," she said. This year, Rasmussen said, every piece selected by at least one juror is in the show.

Ed Larson, Committee co-chairperson of the event, said he also was pleased with the turnout.

"We received a large number of works," he said. "There were a lot more than we expected."

Larson said the show has a lot of different works.

"We've got a little bit of everything," he said. "It's a pretty diverse show."

This is the third student art show the committee has sponsored.

Plants studied in research for removing toxic wastes

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

It costs billions of dollars each year to remove toxic compounds that are released into the environment as a result of agriculture, mining and industrial activities.

The Great Plains-Rocky Mountain Hazardous Substance Research Center, headquartered at K-State, is dedicated to supporting research of cost-effective technologies to clean up these compounds and prevent contamination.

"Our focus is researching ways to enhance nature's own remediation abilities," Stan Grant, associate director of the center, said. "Nature has many ways of cleaning up waste. Problems occur when humans overload the system."

Many of the projects funded through the center involve bioremediation technology. Bioremediation is the use of plants and microbes to clean up toxic compounds, Grant said.

"Some kinds of bacteria will literally eat the contaminants, and deep-rooted plants will absorb or concentrate them around the root systems so that they can then be more easily removed," Grant said.

The emphasis on bioremediation stems from its cost-effectiveness, Larry Erickson, director of the Center, said.

"This type of technology will save billions of dollars," Erickson said.

The center, one of five nationally, was established in 1989. It serves a 10-state region and is a consortium of seven universities.

Faculty members from these universities submit research proposals each year, and an advisory panel recommends which ones to fund, Erickson said.

Several K-State researchers have made successful bids for funding.

For example, Gary Pierzynski, assistant professor in agronomy, and his colleagues are studying ways to clean up lead, zinc and cadmium, which are contaminating soils around old mining sites in southeast Kansas.

"There are a host of environmental problems down there," Pierzynski said. "There are large piles of waste rock with nothing growing on them."

This lack of vegetation allows contaminated dust to blow into houses and gardens, and rain water washes contaminants onto crop lands, making them sterile, Pierzynski said.

The goal of Pierzynski's research is to find ways to establish plants on the waste rock that will stabilize the site and prevent the spread of the contamination, he said.

In another center-supported project, Kathy Banks, assistant professor in civil engineering, and her colleagues are studying how plants and microbes work together to clean up contaminated soil.

"We've found that the soil around the roots of plants contains 100 times as many microbes as soil that is not next to plant roots," Banks said.

These microbes break down certain kinds of contaminants into non-toxic substances, she said.

"The center's emphasis on studying ways to use vegetation to clean up waste makes it kind of special," Banks said.

"Very few other groups are using this approach."

Spillway showcases area history

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

The erosion at the Tuttle Creek Spillway caused by summer flooding has provided an excellent exposure of rocks and fossils.

For the most part, what can be seen now was cut, scoured and shaped during a 17-day period between July 23 and Aug. 9, 1993.

The spillway may not be as large as the Grand Canyon in Arizona, but it does share similar characteristics, Tom Olszewski, graduate student in geology, said.

"It's a great place to go for people who've never looked at fossils. Manhattan's little Grand Canyon is similar to the Grand Canyon in Arizona," he said. "The basic idea is the same."

"You've got a lot of rock exposed in vertical sections, but on a smaller scale. We can tell what the environment was like, and you can see how rocks changed through time. It builds a history of the earth," Olszewski said.

What visitors to Tuttle Creek will see is unlike anything else in this area, Allen Archer, assistant professor in geology, said.

"Probably without any question it is one of the best exposures of rock in this part of the world," Archer said. "In that respect it is very, very unique.

"There are all kinds of ways to appreciate it. You can go out there and say, 'My, what a big hole in the ground,' or you can have a deeper appreciation of the fossils and how different it was in Kansas thousands of years ago," he said.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

Walking tour to offer trip through time

"The reservoir release provided exposure of rock that you don't have naturally. The rocks are colorful. Red, green, black and white oscillate in different patterns," Archer said.

Ron West, professor of geology, said the geology department and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers are planning a walking tour.

"We're working with the Corps of Engineers to set up a self-guided walking tour. We'd like to set it up so that you'd start at the lowest level and walk up," West said. "You'd actually be walking up through time. It's so spectacular. However, a lot depends on what the local people do, and if there is an interest."

West said the geology department provides a map that has points of interest on it. Small, numbered red flags on the spillway mark them. The department's information pamphlet gives keys to the various fossils that can be found.

There are two types of fossils: the body fossil and the trace fossil, West said.

"The body fossils are the actual remains, the shells and teeth. Trace fossils are the things that the animal leaves behind, like tracks and footprints in the mud," West said.

The fossils at Tuttle Creek date back further than the age of the dinosaurs. Plant and animal fossils of all kinds can be found.

The best place to locate fossils is in the dark shale units, Olszewski said. The greatest amount of diversity in marine life can be found in the shale, he said.

Sightseers are allowed to pick up what is loose but can't take a hammer and chisel to get fossils, Dale Forge, project manager of the Corps of Engineers, said.

"Any digging will require a permit. The fossils are government property. If you found something lying around that you think could be something of value, you should bring it to us. The intent is for it to be studied by people who know what they're looking at," Forge said.

Forge also said the permits are generally only given to those who have credentials in geology.

Forge said he encourages people to see the spillway, though.

"If you're interested in it, go look at it."

This natural wonder is not a permanent fixture at Milford Lake or Tuttle Creek.

"The best time to see the geological formations is now," Archer said. "Gradually through the year, the soil-forming process will change rocks back into soil. A lot of it will grass back over."

Fuel tax will affect farmers minimally

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Farm workers and rural residents generally will not be hit by the tax hikes passed by Congress earlier this year, a government study said. They will also benefit from tax incentives intended to boost farm investment, the study said.

Most farmers and rural residents have low-to-moderate incomes, and therefore will not be hurt by the tax hikes, said the report in this month's issue of "Agricultural Outlook," an Agriculture Department publication.

If the goal of $500 billion in deficit reduction during a five-year span is reached, it said, farmers will also profit from lower long-term interest rates.

A 4.3-cents-a-gallon increase in the federal excise tax on gasoline and diesel fuel will have a minimal effect on farmers because farm use of these fuels is exempt from the tax.

The tax will cause a modest increase in farmers' transportation costs and rural workers' commuting expenses.

Low-income farm and rural households are likely to benefit the most from the enlargement of the Earned Income Tax Credit, the report said.

While it will be phased out for families with incomes between $11,000 and $23,760, the credit will now also apply to low-income workers without children and will be bigger for qualifying households.

Faculty senate opposes cuts in periodicals

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

Members of Faculty Senate expressed concerns Tuesday about the proposed slashing of another $220,000 worth of periodicals and materials from Farrell Library.

Faculty Senate voted by the required two-thirds majority to accept a resolution addressed to President Jon Wefald urging the administration to find a solution to the long-term problem of periodical erosion.

According to the resolution, $437,000 worth of periodicals have been cut in the past five years, and the current budget calls for another $220,000 in cuts.

The resolution blames the problem on the internal allocation of funds within the University.

In the resolution, K-State's 8,290 periodicals were compared to the University of Kansas' 27,391 periodicals, both maintained with the same inadequate funding from the Kansas Legislature. The resolution states significant changes in priorities need to be made at K-State.

During the meeting, the options of re-allocating money from the colleges or getting funds from the Essential Edge Campaign were discussed.

"The money will have to come from somewhere," Kenneth Klabunde, professor of chemistry, said. "Who will make the decision as to where the money comes from?

"We can't assume there's a pot of money in Wefald's office," Klabunde said.

Many faculty members are angered by the proposed cuts, Aruna Michie, president of Faculty Senate, said. She said as a form of protest, some faculty members refuse to turn in lists of periodicals to be cut.

"Most of the faculty are absolutely in flames over the (Dev Nelson) Press Box and the new library when they see periodicals being cut," Alan Brightman, professor of clinical sciences, said.

Michie said in order to keep cuts from happening every year, there would need to be a reallocation of $700,000 plus over the next three to five years.

Michie said the high rate of inflation in the price of periodicals is the reason the library targets them when budget cuts have to be made.

"This year it's $200,000. If you save those periodicals for this year, next year you have $200,000 plus 11-percent inflation. Each year the bill goes up just to stay where we are right now," Michie said.

> "One-time money raised in a campaign is of little value. It needs to come from endowments. We need money every year."
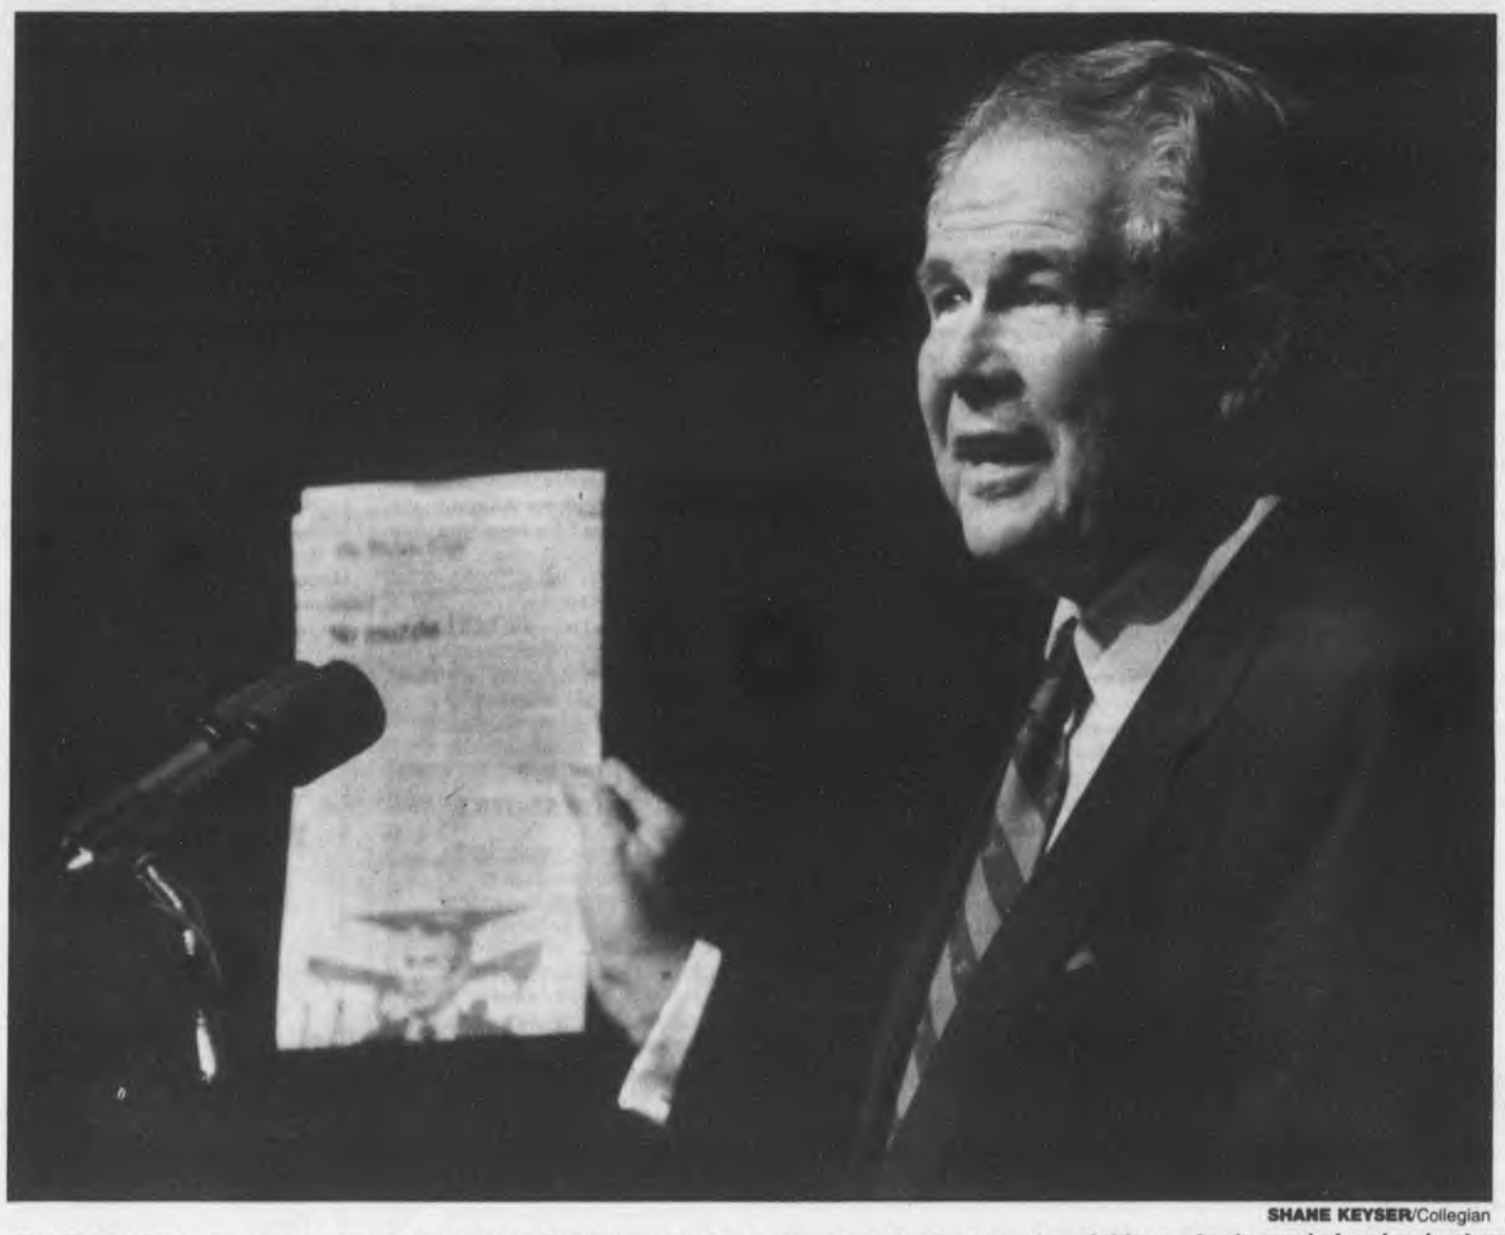
>
> BRICE HOBROCK
> DEAN OF LIBRARIES

Brice Hobrock, dean of Farrell Library, said the library received $2.85 million from the Essential Edge Campaign to fund construction of the addition to Farrell, but there is not a chance that money can be allocated from Essential Edge for periodicals.



"The acquisition of periodicals is something that goes on every year," Hobrock said. "One-time money raised in a campaign is of little value. It needs to come from endowments. We need money every year."

Hobrock said it is difficult to raise money from alumni for something like periodicals because they would rather put money in things of lasting value.

In other business, results from the 1992 Report on Faculty Satisfaction and Morale were presented.

The survey of a random sample of faculty members paints a picture of a faculty on the edge. According to the survey, more than half of the faculty expressed themselves as very likely or somewhat likely to seek a job elsewhere in higher education.

A resolution was passed to study the findings of the next survey in the spring of 1994 and target specific issues at that time.

God needed for democracy

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Faith in God is not a threat to democracy, but it is the foundation of America's democratic government, Pat Robertson said to an overflow crowd Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

Robertson, a religious broadcaster who ran for the Republican nomination to the U.S. presidency in 1988, presented the first Landon Lecture of the semester.

"Like no other nation on Earth, faith is woven into the fabric of American life," Robertson said. "Faith is the heartbeat that pumps life into the democratic ideal."

America's faith in God is one of the reasons why the United States has prospered and become a world power, Robertson said.

"Perhaps no nation can claim a special place in God's heart, but perhaps America is a better nation because he has a special place in our hearts," Robertson said.

Belief in God is on the rise in America, Robertson said.

This is based on an opinion poll and his experiences as a candidate for the presidential nomination, he said.

"A large majority of Americans of all races, creeds and political affiliations unapologetically and unambiguously celebrate the joy and richness of lives filled with the wisdom of God's word," he said.

Only a minority of the population sees his ideas as a threat to the nation, Robertson said. This minority is becoming more vicious in its attacks on religion, he said.

"This effort to demean religion and religious practices is gaining a foothold in the political culture," Robertson said. "There is another term for this kind of assault. It is called McCarthyism."

Robertson said he did not fear these attacks but instead found them to be reassuring.

"I find the the virulence of these assaults a reason to celebrate, not a reason to fear," Robertson said. "The opponents of religious belief in America have become so fierce because they realize that at the end of 20th century, the tide has turned against them."

Robertson denounced committing immoral acts in the name of religion, however. He used the pro-life protesters' shooting of two doctors who perform abortions as an example.

"As much as I support the sanctity of innocent human life, as much as I believe peacefully resisting injustice is a noble act, I abhor these demented acts of violence."

Robertson also called on Americans to follow the example of the pioneers, who settled the West and work to make the world a better place.

"Let us not rest until this day is a better one than it was when we awakened at first light," he said. "Let us be the new pioneers."

Somali meetings begin for hostage

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — The diplomatic troubleshooter sent by President Clinton to talk peace in Somalia met with representatives of warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid on Tuesday, seeking freedom for a captured American pilot.

But the backdrop for the meeting was hardly encouraging for peace efforts on a day when another victim — apparently the 18th American death — was confirmed from a failed U.N. raid this month.

U.S. fighter planes buzzed the capital for a second straight day, political signals were mixed, and there were new reports of Somalis firing on aid workers and peacekeepers.

The remains of what was believed to be another American soldier killed in the Oct. 3 raid on a suspected Somali militia compound were turned over to U.N. authorities. Capt. Tim McDavitt, the U.N. spokesman, said all missing Americans are now accounted for.

No details of the meeting between Robert Oakley and members of the Somali National Alliance, Aidid's clan-based political group, were released immediately. Oakley was expected to press for the release of Chief Warrant Officer Michael Durant of Berlin, N.H., captured in that raid, and an unidentified Nigerian private captured earlier.

The botched raid stunned Washington and prompted calls by some U.S. lawmakers to withdraw troops from Somalia. President Clinton has pledged a withdrawal by March 31, but in the meantime is sending in heavy reinforcements.

Aidid's faction was reportedly split over the hostage issue, with some members insisting the two be held until the United Nations released 32 Somali prisoners, including four key aides of Aidid.

Also in doubt was whether the faction members who met with Oakley had any real clout with the fugitive warlord.

McDavitt said the Somali detainees would be held until U.N. authorities were convinced they played no part in attacks against peacekeepers, and refused journalists' requests to interview them.

He added there was no time frame for their release."It could take months," he said.

U.S. forces wait on Haitian peace mission

Port workers prevent landing of U.N. troops

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Haitian rightists, emboldened by their success in blocking the deployment of U.S. troops, urged the military today to battle the Americans if they try to carry out a U.N. peacekeeping mission.

The Pentagon, meanwhile, ordered the ship carrying the American soldiers out of Haitian territorial waters to await further instructions, senior defense officials said. And the White House said the United States will support renewed economic sanctions to punish Haiti's military leaders for preventing the Americans from landing.

Armed toughs working under the protection of the military have vowed to stop the U.N. effort to restore democracy and reinstall President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, who was ousted in a violent military coup two years ago.

On Monday, military-backed port workers kept the U.S. amphibious landing ship Harlan County from docking with more than 200 American and Canadian soldiers who are to help pave the way for Aristide's scheduled return Oct. 30.

U.S. and U.N. officials blamed Haiti's military for the disturbances Monday.

"We're going to ask the U.N. to reimpose economic sanctions, those which strike hardest at the individuals who are now holding up the process," White House Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers said today.

International sanctions against Haiti were lifted after agreements were signed in July permitting Aristide's reinstatement.

Myers added: "The president does not intend to let the troops sit on the ship offshore indefinitely."

Another Clinton official said a second troop ship, the USS Fairfax County, would not leave for Haiti as scheduled Wednesday.

Today, the Haitian rightists continued their campaign against the U.N. force by declaring a day of indignation. Gunfire rang out in the capital before dawn, and armed civilians stopped the kaleideoscopic-colored Haitian buses, known as tap-taps, to stop children from going to school.

There were no reports of casualities at the start of the daylong protest.

In a statement broadcast earlier today on Radio Signal FM, a far-right coalition called the National Front urged parents to keep their children off the streets and called on Haiti's army to fight the Americans if they attempt to land.

"The army has the responsibility to defend its national territory," declared a coalition spokesman, far-right politician Gerard Bissainthe. "If there is an invasion, it must defend the territory."

On Monday, several of the civilian toughs threatened to create another Somalia if the United Nations continued its mission. Washington is reeling from the deaths of at least 17 American servicemen last week in Somalia, and Haitian democracy opponents are playing on U.S. fears of violence against Americans.

Some democracy opponents have waved the flag of nationalism in their opposition to a U.S. military presence in Haiti. Haitians, wealthy and poor alike, have bitter memories of the 19-year U.S. Marine occupation that ended in 1934.

The Harlan County was carrying nearly 200 U.S. military engineers,

Crash may be result of radar ignorance

WASHINGTON (AP) — If the operator of a towboat near Mobile, Ala., had known how to use his radar, he would not have misread a railroad bridge as a barge and hit it, a Coast Guard officer testified Tuesday.

One of the barges being towed struck the bridge, setting in motion events that led to the deadliest wreck in the history of Amtrak, the House Merchant Marine Committee was told.

Amtrak's Sunset Limited passenger train derailed while crossing the Bayou bridge early on Sept. 22. Forty-seven people were killed and 153 injured.

"If he (the towboat operator) had known how to use the radar, he would have seen something straight across the river and known he did not want to move toward it," Coast Guard Rear Adm. James Card told reporters after a hearing before the House Merchant Marine Committee.

The early morning scene was foggy, and the towboat operator believed that he was near a barge to which he could tie up, the panel was told.

Dennis Sullivan, Amtrak's executive vice president and chief operating officer, said the passenger train derailed because a section of the bridge had been struck by a tug. Its barges and had been knocked out of line about three and one-half feet.

The committee was told that, other than the radar and a radio, the towboat carried no chart, compass or other navigational tools.

Pentagon requests delay of court order

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon will ask the Supreme Court to delay enforcement of a federal court order that banned discrimination against gays in the military, a spokeswoman said Tuesday.

"We will seek extraordinary relief from the Supreme Court," Kathleen deLaski told reporters at a Pentagon briefing.

In the meantime, the Pentagon has instructed units to suspend its ban on homosexuals in the military while it pursues the case, she said.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last Friday left in place an order issued Sept. 30 by U.S. District Judge Terry Hatter Jr. of Los Angeles banning discrimination against gays in the military.

A three-judge panel of the 9th Circuit court unanimously denied the Defense Department's emergency request to suspend or immediately overturn Hatter's decision.

Russian leaders start forming new doctrines

MOSCOW (AP) — Rewarding those who quelled this month's violent rebellion, the Russian government advanced plans Tuesday for a new military doctrine demanded by the army.

Russian leaders, focusing on security, also announced that prosecutors may soon get sweeping new powers to combat crime.

Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin said as he opened a conference on the draft military doctrine that President Boris Yeltsin has ordered a version ready by Friday for consideration by his Security Council. Yeltsin is visiting Japan this week.

Since the new Russian army was created from the old Soviet one nearly two years ago, military leaders have sought a doctrine laying out reforms in the army's role, size, cost, armaments and strategy.

Yeltsin began emphasizing the new doctrine last week after he called in tanks and thousands of troops to put down an armed challenge by supporters of hard-line lawmakers. Yeltsin's victory freed him from 18 months of stalemate with the lawmakers, who had slowed his reforms and chipped away at his powers.

There has been speculation about whether Yeltsin promised the army anything for its loyalty and what he may choose to reward it with.

Chernomyrdin told government and military leaders behind closed doors Tuesday that the Security Council considers the military doctrine its top priority, even ahead of economic reform, the Interfax news agency reported.

"When we make up our mind on the military doctrine, we will know what to do about other issues," the prime minister said, according to Interfax.

The army's demands have included better housing and salaries. It also may press for more say in arms control and a more active role in former Soviet republics.

The new doctrine calls for cutting the military to 1.5 million soldiers from the current 2.5 million.

Meanwhile, the commandant for Moscow's nine-day-old state of emergency said Tuesday that Yeltsin was expected to approve a decree giving law enforcement officials across Russia broader powers to fight crime, Interfax reported.

Col. Gen. Alexander Kulikov told a meeting of the Moscow mayor's office that the new law would enable authorities to continue an anti-crime crackdown even after the current emergency regulations and city curfew are lifted.

Supreme Court denies CIA employee's appeal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today turned away an appeal by a CIA employee who was fired after admitting that for years he hid his homosexuality from the agency.

The court, without comment, rejected his argument that lower court rulings in his case leave the CIA and other executive branch agencies free to discriminate against gay employees.

The man, identified in court records only as John Doe, has been on paid administrative leave for the past eight years.

Trial of mother results from contradictions

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The case of a mother accused of murdering her daughter, then pretending to be grief-stricken while the city searched for the track star, hinges on whom the jury chooses to believe — Vivian King or Vivian King.

King, who reported her daughter missing in January, confessed a month later to killing her, and then recanted within days, goes on trial this week in a case riddled with contradictions.

King told police she shot 17-year-old Shilie Turner in a drunken rage in a park, where the body was found a month later. King said her daughter came home late and associated with people she didn't like.

Another version of herself, one she presented to the public, shows a mother worried sick about the daughter she called "Shay-Shay," a woman who wore lavender ribbons, Turner's favorite color, at a rally to call attention to the teen-ager's disappearance, and a woman who urged police to look harder.

King now says police coerced her after 12 hours of questioning into falsely saying she killed her daughter.

Jury selection begins Wednesday.

Bob's Diner disappoints

KELLY-ANN GERAGHTY
Collegian

REVIEW

Like its competition, Bob's Diner, located at 1103 N. Third St., offers the usual assortment of shakes, steaks and pancakes.

Upon arriving at the restaurant, customers have a choice of sitting at a traditional diner counter or at one of the tables in the small dining area.

The interior of the restaurant is sparsely decorated but includes pictures of diners from all over the country.

On the back wall is an enjoyable hand-painted map of the famous old Route 66 and the states through which it travels.

In keeping with a nostalgic theme, the music piped into the diner is '60s tunes.

Once you are seated and ready to order, the wait staff can accommodate your dining choices.

Unfortunately, there were several problems that arose with the order.

For instance, after ordering apple juice, a glass of juice with ice in it was brought. However, ice wasn't requested.

In addition, the English muffin was untoasted and without butter.

The waitress also had to be reminded that pancakes had been ordered after they didn't arrive.

All the condiments most likely to be used on breakfast items should have been available on the tables. Instead, they had to be requested.

These mistakes can be attributed to the restaurant's recent opening and the inexperience of both the waitress and the kitchen staff.

A sample of the food showed an uninspired clone of the food served at the other two 24-hour restaurants in Manhattan.

Before leaving the diner, make sure you go over your bill. Coming as no surprise, there was an overcharge on the bill.

It's too bad Bob's Diner is not monopolizing on its theme.

It could be a welcome addition to the restaurant scene if it worked out its kinks and served some tasty stick-to-your-ribs diner food.

Recreational council elects new chair and vice chair

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

Two K-State students were elected to the chair and vice chair positions of the Recreational Services Council recently.

Lin Bliss, sophomore in pre-med and history, was elected chair, and Christy McCallum, sophomore in accounting, was elected vice chair and secretary of the council on Sept. 28.

The Recreational Services Council is the policy-making and advising body for Recreational Services. It is composed of 17 members, including students, faculty, staff and one designee from the KSU Alumni Association, Raydon Robel, director of Recreational Services, said.

In addition to setting policy, the council also sets the budget, Bliss said.

Both Bliss and McCallum were elected by nomination to serve one-year terms to the council.

Bliss said he believes his experience as an intramural official gives him a good working knowledge of how Recreational Services operates and qualifies him for the chair position.

As chair, Bliss said his main job will be to oversee and direct the council's monthly meetings and to help keep an eye on the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex expansion.

Plans for the Rec Complex expansion and ideas for improvement of fitness programs offered by Recreational Services have been the main topics of council discussion so far this semester, McCallum said.

The upcoming expansion will cause additional work for the council as it reviews and expands, as necessary, existing policy dealing with Recreational Services, Robel said.

As vice chair and secretary, McCallum assumes the chair position in Bliss' absence and records minutes of the meetings.

Students and faculty are encouraged to bring suggestions about the Recreational Services' programs or expansion to the council, Bliss said.

"If anyone has suggestions, they can bring them to us because our mission is to direct the policies for Recreational Services," he said.

medics and civil affairs specialists and 26 Canadian air force carpenters. A representative for the U.N. military mission, U.S. Army Maj. Jim Hinnant, had said the soldiers would not disembark until it was safe.

In a dusk-to-dawn vigil that began Monday night, about 100 of the Haitian rightists lined their cars along a seaside boulevard, headlights glaring at the Harlan County anchored nearly a half-mile offshore.

The troops aboard the Harlan County were to join an advance party of 100 U.N. personnel, including 26 U.S. soldiers and 50 Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers.

In all, 1,600 U.N. personnel, including 700 Americans, were to come as part of a U.N.-brokered plan to reinstate Aristide, Haiti's first democratically elected president.

Opponents of the U.N. plan fear Aristide will not stop Haiti's repressed masses from killing coup supporters if he returns to power.

The protesters have the full support of the army commander, Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras, who oversaw Aristide's overthrow and the slaughter of hundreds of the president's supporters in the weeks afterward.

"The armed forces deplore that citizens who are worried about their national sovereignty ... have been called 'gangsters' and 'thugs' by members of the international community," Cedras told reporters Monday.

Gunmen break Somali cease-fire

U.N. military representative, said usually 30 to 40 Somalis were held by U.N. forces at any one time and stayed in detention for an average of 10 days.

"Aidid's people will certainly be held for more than 10 days," he said.

Reporters in a pool organized by U.S. forces saw at least three flyovers Tuesday by U.S. warplanes — two by F-18s and one by an A-6.

Meanwhile, gunmen still roamed the battered streets of Mogadishu, firing on two U.N. posts manned by Pakistanis during the night. The attack shattered a three-day calm since Aidid issued a cease-fire order.

Stockwell said the gunmen were believed to be from Aidid's militia, but he had no proof. The Pakistanis returned fire and were not hit, he said. McDavitt said a relief convoy belonging to Irish Concern was attacked Tuesday morning by bandits south of Mogadishu but managed to reach the city without casualties. He also said U.N. troops had stopped street patrols since last Friday, relying instead on helicopter surveillance.

Despite opposition from Somali clan leaders, plans were proceeding for an Oct. 20 meeting on Somalia between Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali and leaders of the Organization of African Unity, the Islamic Conference and the Arab League.

EDITORIAL

Protesters deserve praise for making statements in peace

On, Tuesday, K-State's campus brought back many memories of the '60s.

The University was home to four different groups representing completely different points of view.

Despite the incredible differences between the speaker, the counter speaker, the ralliers and the counter-ralliers, there was one message that got though: The First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution on freedom of speech is alive and well.

This event proved it is possible for everyone to express his or her own message in a peaceful, positive manner.

The decision to bring Pat Robertson to campus was bound to create controversy, and the Manhattan National Organization for Women quickly organized a rally that drew more than 100 participants.

And more than 20 campus and community organizations joined the UFM Lou Douglas Lecture Series to bring John Swomley, an internationally known theologian and civil libertarian, to campus to give a lecture on "Defenders of Faith or Threat to Freedom."

What no one expected or invited was Fred Phelps and his family of protesters.

He and his 15 followers felt the need to demonstrate against what he describes as "a gay and lesbian function," referring to the NOW protesters.

Despite these incredible differences of opinion, not one act of violence took place.

And whether or not you agreed with one of the speakers or the other, or if you agreed with one of the protest groups, you did learn two things Tuesday: what both sides of the issue are, and that differences of opinion can be heard without violence.

Somalia and reminders of another war

"... It cuts me to the quick. In the faces of the strangers that march down the street, I see the faces of the ones I love. I may not know a single one in the khaki wave, but those unknown soldiers are just as much my brothers, my sons, my husband as if I had held them in my own arms, laughed with them, cried with them and loved them as such.

"I think that I shall never be so scared again in my life. It is the terror of one who must wait and pray that these hands that have waved those boys away will not have to bury them."

I wrote that in my journal when troops were being deployed to the Persian Gulf. I was terrified. After the bombing of Baghdad, I sat glued to the television, watching like everyone else, wondering if it would be someone I loved that got killed next.

At night, I would lie awake and wait to hear the windows rattle with the thump of Fort Riley's artillery practice. I hated it, but at least the noise meant that someone was there. Deployment meant silence, and silence fed my nightmares.

When President Clinton announced he was doubling the American military presence in Somalia, I set myself up for some long nights of waiting and wondering. There was another feeling that battled for a place in my heart that I had not felt nearly as strong as before — fury. I am furious.

It is 1993, people. We walk on the moon. The Cold War is finally over. McDLTs have disappeared, and a Democrat is in the White House. Yet, instead of it being a time of hope, peace and crystal healing, it is still a time where we can still build a better tank and not a foolproof contraceptive. This should be a time for peace. Yet, we are still living in a dark age where the American government still acts like we have to play babysitter to every country's internal affairs.

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

It is not so much that we are sending our young men and women in a place where we should never had been in such numbers in the first place. (Don't breathe out your nose that fast, Mr. Proud-To-Be-A-Gun-Carrying-American-Overseas. You'll hyperventilate. It seems that everyone, including the United Nations, has forgotten that the United Nations is supposed to be the pitbull watchdog of the world, not the United States).

It is not so much that the United States constantly seems to have to have more troops, more arms, more of a stake in world-wide conflicts than any other of the U.N. forces every time something like this happens. That "stake" translates into hundreds of young American lives.

What does it to me is that Clinton's reasons for not having an immediate withdrawal of troops sounds suspiciously like our president is saying that if we do, we will look like scaredy cats in front of the whole world.

"Our own credibility with friends and allies would be severely damaged," he says. "And ... aggressors, thugs and terrorists will conclude that the best way to get us to change our policies is to kill our people."

They have already concluded that. Our people are dying. Our young men are having their dead bodies dragged through towns. Which is more important to our government: saving their lives or how macho we look by sacrificing them and staying in a country that does not want us there?

I want to know if Clinton thinks that staying six more months, with the probability of troops being killed increasing every day, will make us look better to our allies. If that is what he thinks, I don't see why he and Mohamed Farrah Aidid, the warlord who has been blamed for most of the attacks against our troops, don't just get together, drop their pants and decide right then and there who has the bigger balls.

At least, then, I wouldn't have to worry about burying a loved one while they tried to prove it with guns.

Robertson's call for faith is call to repair America

I wasn't surprised that Pat Robertson didn't show up for his Landon Lecture yesterday, at least not the strawman-Pat Robertson protesters worked so hard to construct and destroy in recent weeks.

The real Pat Robertson generated more interest and discussion than any other lecturer I've heard in my three years at K-State. McCain was packed, as was Forum Hall, which showed the lecture on closed-circuit television. Many people had to listen in the foyer and lawn outside McCain. It was an educational experience of the highest order.

As a person who believes that the world of important ideas revolves around issues besides women's rights and homosexuality — the issues many protesters used to energize their effort to demonize Robertson — I was especially pleased to hear the topic of his lecture.

He spoke about the importance of faith in politics. Robertson's thesis was embodied by a quote of one the most prominent intellectuals in modern times, Alexis de Tocqueville, who in 1835 said, "Faith in the Almighty is central to the success of the democratic experiment."

Robertson consistently alluded to the greatest need America faces in its future: spiritual renewal.

I believe there is a spirit of unity in America much greater than most of us realize. Unfortunately, that unity is based on shared pain and frustration due to divorce, child abuse, teen pregnancy, homelessness, drug abuse, gangs, racism, violent crime, rape, suicide and AIDS — problems that have affected almost all of us personally in a significant way and problems that have their roots in the soul of fallen man.

As a nation, we have rejected, as Robertson suggested, a faith in God that can provide us with a fulfilling life on every dimension. In its place, we have put our faith in the myth that the government, education or any other human institution can effectively confront issues that are spiritual in nature.

Robertson quoted Alf Landon, who in 1936 said, "We want more than a material recovery in this country. We want a moral and spiritual recovery as well."

I had the opportunity to attend the National Student Leadership Forum on Faith and Values in Washington, D.C., last month. The non-partisan event was hosted by a variety of current and former congressmembers including Rep. Jim Slattery, Sen. Pete Domenici, Rep. Tony Hall and former Governor John Ashcroft.

JOHN HART

The speakers urged our group of more than 500 to emulate Christ's example of servant based leadership and to make the greatest commandment — Love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your mind, and love your neighbor as yourself — the guiding force in every area of our lives, including politics.

During the closing night of the forum, Jim Slattery boldly declared, "Jesus Christ was the most important leader in the history of the world." He then criticized university professors for rarely mentioning that central historical fact in class.

He went on to say, "There isn't anything anti-intellectual about faith in Christ." He added that the Christian life is the most intellectually challenging endeavor one can embark on.

It is so obvious we face incredibly difficult problems in our nation today. The longer we hold on to the artificial dream of solving our problems through human institutions, the longer we will continue our cycle of despair.

I'm not satisfied with allowing suffering to be the force that unites us as Americans. By putting our faith in God and renewing the spiritual foundation of our personal lives and then our nation, we can turn our suffering into perseverance, perseverance into character, and character into hope.

In the opening night of the forum, Rep. John Lewis, who marched next to Martin Luther King Jr. during a time when, as Robertson commented, the civil-rights movement was in its purest form, said simply, "There is hope in this room."

Thankfully, there is not only hope in that room, but in the lives of millions of other Americans from many backgrounds as well. It is a hope in Christ that unites and never disappoints.

▶ OVERLAY

Don't force students to conform to diversity

Editor,

The problem of mandating multicultural overlays lie in the very root of its theory. These classes have been suggested by various people and organizations as a means of using forced education to make students more aware of different cultures around them.

We believe first that cultural diversity is a necessity for a person to be successful in this ever-growing world market. We are not, however, in favor of the fundamental way it would be pushed upon us. There are many classes currently offered and many great organizations that provide the chance at no additional expenses.

This is America, the melting pot of the world. Many people have given up their native country to come to the United States and our way of life. It is not the job of our education system to support cultural diversity over cultural unity. This is a singular country made up of Americans, not of blacks, whites, Asians, Mexicans and various other cultures. It is a singular entity and should be supported as such.

This institution should not be bogged down by needless classes and undue expenses. The classrooms and funds can be of much more use in other areas, especially in this age of decreasing budgets. No, cultural diversity is truly fostered through friendship and experience, not in a classroom and certainly not through a textbook.

So take advantage of the opportunities K-State has to offer, but don't force us to learn from a textbook what can only truly be learned in the heart.

▶ GUN CONTROL

Having guns better than being unarmed

Editor,

The author of the Oct. 11 anti-gun article advocates the banning or restriction of handguns. Though she never says it directly, she alludes that this would help control violence. Within this argument seems to be the notion that a ban on handguns would decrease availability to criminals. As naive as it may seem, many people do not realize that a very small percentage of criminals obtain their guns through legal means, so most would not be affected by new laws. With more than 300 million guns already in this country and borders that cannot be controlled, gun availability to criminals will not be affected by a handgun ban.

In all likelihood, the availability of guns would follow the same patterns as the availability of drugs. Every drug that has been outlawed has become cheaper, of higher quality and more widely available than when it was legal. We can also look at differing regions of the United States that have differing gun laws. It is interesting to note that the states which have the least gun-control laws have the lowest percentage of criminals who use firearms.

It is also interesting that the five states which have the most lenient gun laws in the United States are also the five states with the lowest violent-crime rates: Idaho, Iowa, Maine, Montana, North Dakota and South Dakota. The crime rates for the five states with the strictest gun-control laws, much stricter than anything being proposed on the national level, have crime rates which are 1,400 percent higher than these states. The facts are, where guns are easier to get and more honest people have guns, there is less crime and a smaller percentage of criminals who use guns.

We must remember that gun-owning citizens stop more than one million crimes each year and kill or wound more criminals each year than the police. Polls of felons suggest that gun-owning citizens are a much greater deterrent to crime than the police, and given the inverse relationship of lawful gun ownership and crime, we have every reason to believe them.

The only law which would decrease gun availability to criminals, even to a small degree, yet not restrict access by honest citizens, is a background check at the time of purchase. The NRA has backed this plan, but interestingly, gun control groups have opposed the background check, instead backing the Brady Bill, which requires no background check.

Many people made '40 Seconds' happen right

Editor,

I would like to thank the following people and organizations who helped with "40 Seconds of Silence" this weekend at the K-State/KU football game: Bruce van de Velde, Angi Johnson, Coach Bill Snyder, Scott Elert, Dr. Frank Tracz and the K-State Marching Band, Heath Perry and the K-State cheerleading squad, the Classy Cats, Scott Johnson, Troy Coverdale and DB92. With your help, the demonstration went off without any problems. Again, thank you and please help remember the 40.

College debates main problems

Dean suggests possible options for Arts and Sciences

LEIGH NEVANS
Collegian

The future of social and behavioral sciences in the K-State College of Arts and Sciences was the focus of a colloquium given by the Institute for Social and Behavioral Research.

Peter Nicholls, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, spoke to a group of about 20 faculty members and graduate students Tuesday afternoon in K-State Union 206. The purpose of the colloquium is to increase recognition and exchange ideas in the social science areas, said M. Duane Nellis, director of ISBR.

"We're trying to enhance awareness of development of social and behavioral sciences," he said. "We want to create a forum of interaction."

Nicholls went through every department in the college and specified the number of faculty, students and graduate students in each field. The role and aspirations and recommendations were made.

One problem was the high student-to-faculty-member ratio. For example, in journalism and mass communications, there are 18 faculty members to 700 students and 33 graduate students.

"Obviously, student demand is high," Nicholls said.

The A. Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications is one of the few accredited University schools. Entrance requirements help stabilize the situation, he said.

Nicholls said it was hard to compare departments — especially ones that have gone through a lot of change like kinesiology.

"It's had more reorganization than any other major," he said. "Its got a new curriculum, and it's closely linked with the sciences."

Activities such as the psychology department's freshman seminar were looked upon favorably by Nicholls, as was the increasing numbers of students enrolling in classes like women's studies and American Ethnic studies.

There were three main problems brought up by Nicholls that need to be dealt with, such as stabilizing enrollment, research cost and support and graduate student funding.

With the high student-to-faculty ratio, something needs to be done about stabilizing enrollment. Entrance requirements are one answer.

"The numbers are frightening," Nicholls said. "I don't know how long we'll be able to cope."

Increased publicity and the putting out of brochures and newsletters were brought up to help draw attention to the social sciences and its research.

Possibly as soon as next year, conferences and speeches could be put on, he said.

"Right now, for graduate-student funding, we are relying on state support," Nicholls said. "There is no real answer."

Large crowd overflows to Forum Hall

TED KADAU
Collegian

An unusually large audience prompted about 500 students, faculty and visitors to spill over into Union Forum Hall to view Pat Robertson's Landon Lecture Tuesday morning.

The audience, both at McCain Auditorium and at Forum Hall, was larger than expected and surprisingly peaceful, Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said.

"We never expected this kind of turnout, or we would have planned for it a little better," Franklin said. "I guess we should have expected it, though. He really has gotten a lot of support."

Franklin, who estimated that around 500 students watched the lecture on channel 6 in Forum Hall, said other people went to the Union bowling alley, Union Station or the Union TV room.

This brought the combined attendance to around 2,600, including the 1,900 who watched and listened in McCain.

"I've been told that this response is similar to that given to Richard Nixon when he spoke here in 1989 or 1990," Franklin said.

He said students asked him about the possibility of allowing only K-State students and faculty into future Landon Lectures until the last 10 or 15 minutes before the speech begins, which would allow more students and faculty to get in the door.

Franklin said he was pleased with the number of people who attended the lecture.

"It's been very peaceful, and I'm very happy with the way it turned out," he said.

Overall student response to Robertson's speech was good, as waves of applause and agreement floated through the air in Forum Hall.

"I think that publicly, people wanted to hear what he had to say," Kristina Eunbok Kim, graduate student in personal counseling, said.

Another Forum Hall viewer said she felt Robertson's speech was good.

"He really knew his stuff," Julie Roller, junior in secondary education, said. "If anyone came in with any preconceptions, I think they were pleasantly surprised.

"I think he did a nice job of showing that religion does have its downfalls in society, but that it does have a positive side."

Wal-Mart's predatory prices violate law

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CONWAY, Ark. — Wal-Mart Stores Inc. illegally tried to force competitors out of business with the same policy that made it the nation's largest retailer — low prices — a judge ruled Tuesday.

Judge David Reynolds said Wal-Mart violated state law by selling some drugs and health and beauty aids below cost at its store in Conway. He ordered an end to the practice and awarded the plaintiffs, three independent Arkansas pharmacies, nearly $300,000 in damages.

The decision was the first predatory-pricing ruling against Wal-Mart, which critics have blamed for the demise of many long-established merchants in small towns and cities nationwide. But it was unclear whether the decision, which applied only to Arkansas, might lead to similar rulings elsewhere.

Wal-Mart said it would appeal to the Arkansas Supreme Court. Robert Rhoads, Wal-Mart's general counsel, warned of higher prices at stores throughout Arkansas.

Wal-Mart officials said during a two-day trial in August that some items were priced below cost to draw customers, not drive local druggists out of business.

Reynolds based his ruling in part on Wal-Mart's in-store displays comparing its prices to those of local retailers.

The judge also noted Wal-Mart had different prices in different markets, and he pointed out the company's advertised policy of meeting or beating the competition without regard to cost.

Some retail analysts said the chances of the smaller stores prevailing would be small if the case is appealed outside state courts.

Terence McEvoy of the brokerage firm Janney Montgomery Scott Inc. in New York predicted the U.S. Supreme Court would reverse the decision if the case comes before the court.

The ruling is "blatant restraint of trade, which at one time was allowed and in the current environment no longer is," McEvoy said. "It's a state law, and today's environment is much different than when that law was written. Court decisions tend to go with the times."

Matthew Adlong, a lawyer for the three pharmacies who sued Wal-Mart, said small retailers nationwide were awaiting the case's outcome to decide whether to proceed with similar cases against Wal-Mart and other retailers.

Former police officers escape life sentences in beating-death trial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DETROIT — Two former police officers convicted of beating a motorist to death outside an inner-city crack house escaped life sentences Tuesday, one getting 12 to 25 years behind bars, the other eight to 18 years.

The judge said Larry Nevers and Walter Budzyn must be held accountable even if they didn't intend to kill Malice Green, 35, an unemployed steelworker who suffered at least 14 blows to the head and had part of his scalp torn off.

The dismissed officers — partners known as Starsky and Hutch on their beat — appealed to Judge George W. Crockett III for leniency in choking whispers.

They said they didn't mean for Green to die and said he just got out of hand. Crockett responded it was the officers who got out of hand.

The judge gave Nevers the stiffer sentence, although both men were convicted of second-degree murder. A request to extend bail was denied, and they were taken to a state prison at Jackson for processing. They likely will be moved to a federal prison within weeks.

Before sentencing, Green's family made emotional pleas to the judge.

"It is time for the world to see through the excuses and face the truth — being black, unemployed and having used drugs did not kill Malice. Mr. Budzyn and Mr. Nevers killed my husband," said his widow, Rose Mary Green.

Witnesses during the officers' summer-long trial testified they saw the two white officers repeatedly beat Green with their heavy metal flashlights outside a suspected drug house Nov. 5 when he refused orders to open his clenched hand. Green died on the way to a hospital.

"I did not kill Malice Green," Nevers told the judge, his voice shaking and his body slumped. "I never intended to hurt him, to do anything to him other than to arrest him for a felony."

"I just reacted to the resistance to the arrest," said Nevers, 53, who had been honored several times during his 24 years on the police force.

Budzyn was barely audible, wiping tears from a face that had remained emotionless through the trial.

"I'm sorry for what has happened. I was just doing my job. I never struck Mr. Green — never," said Budzyn, 47, who served 19 years on the force and had been named precinct officer of the year in 1990.

The officers were convicted Aug. 23 by two separate, predominantly black juries. The officers' supervisor at the scene is black and faces a trial on a misdemeanor charge of neglect of duty.

No testimony indicated race was a factor in the beating. But the case drew parallels to the Rodney King case in Los Angeles and focused attention on racial tensions in the Detroit area.

Budzyn and Nevers had faced a maximum of life in prison. Under Crockett's sentence, Nevers could be eligible for parole after nine years, eight months and 14 days. Budzyn could be eligible for parole after six years, five months and 22 days.

Volleyball team returns home to face Wichita State

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

After playing seven matches on the road, the K-State volleyball team will return home today for a match against Wichita State at 7:30 p.m. in Ahearn Field House.

On the road trip, the Wildcats sported a 3-4 record, including losses to Big Eight Conference foes Nebraska, Colorado and Kansas.

"I'm really excited to play at home," Coach Patti Hagemeyer said. "It will be nice to not have to drive somewhere. It's an advantage for the kids to play at home, because they get to sleep in their own beds, go to all of their classes, and they get to play on their own court."

The Cats are coming off a 2-1 performance last weekend at the Drake Tournament. In that tournament, the Cats defeated Oral Roberts, 3-0, and Northeastern Illinois, 3-1. K-State lost to Drake, 3-1.

Hagemeyer said the key to repeating last weekend's performance is maintaining intensity.

"We now need to know that winning is important," Hagemeyer said. "We will have to maintain the intensity from last weekend. I talked a lot about being excited and showing character this week."

Hagemeyer said she didn't know what Wichita State's record was this season, but it shouldn't matter how good they are, because she was more concerned with her team.

"I know that Wichita State played a tough tournament in California to start the season off," Hagemeyer said. "That has to give them some confidence. I'm not really concerned with their record, but I am more concerned with our approach to the game."

In the third game against Drake, Hagemeyer juggled her line-up after falling down 2-0. The switch in the line-up gave the Cats new life, and they responded by winning the third game.

"We decided to make some line-up changes," Hagemeyer said. "I put Kate DeClerk in the middle-blocker position. I also put Suzanne Hagge and Heather Zoerner on the outside. They responded and played well, so they will be starting against Wichita State."

Hagemeyer said Hagge responded to the opportunity for more playing-time well.

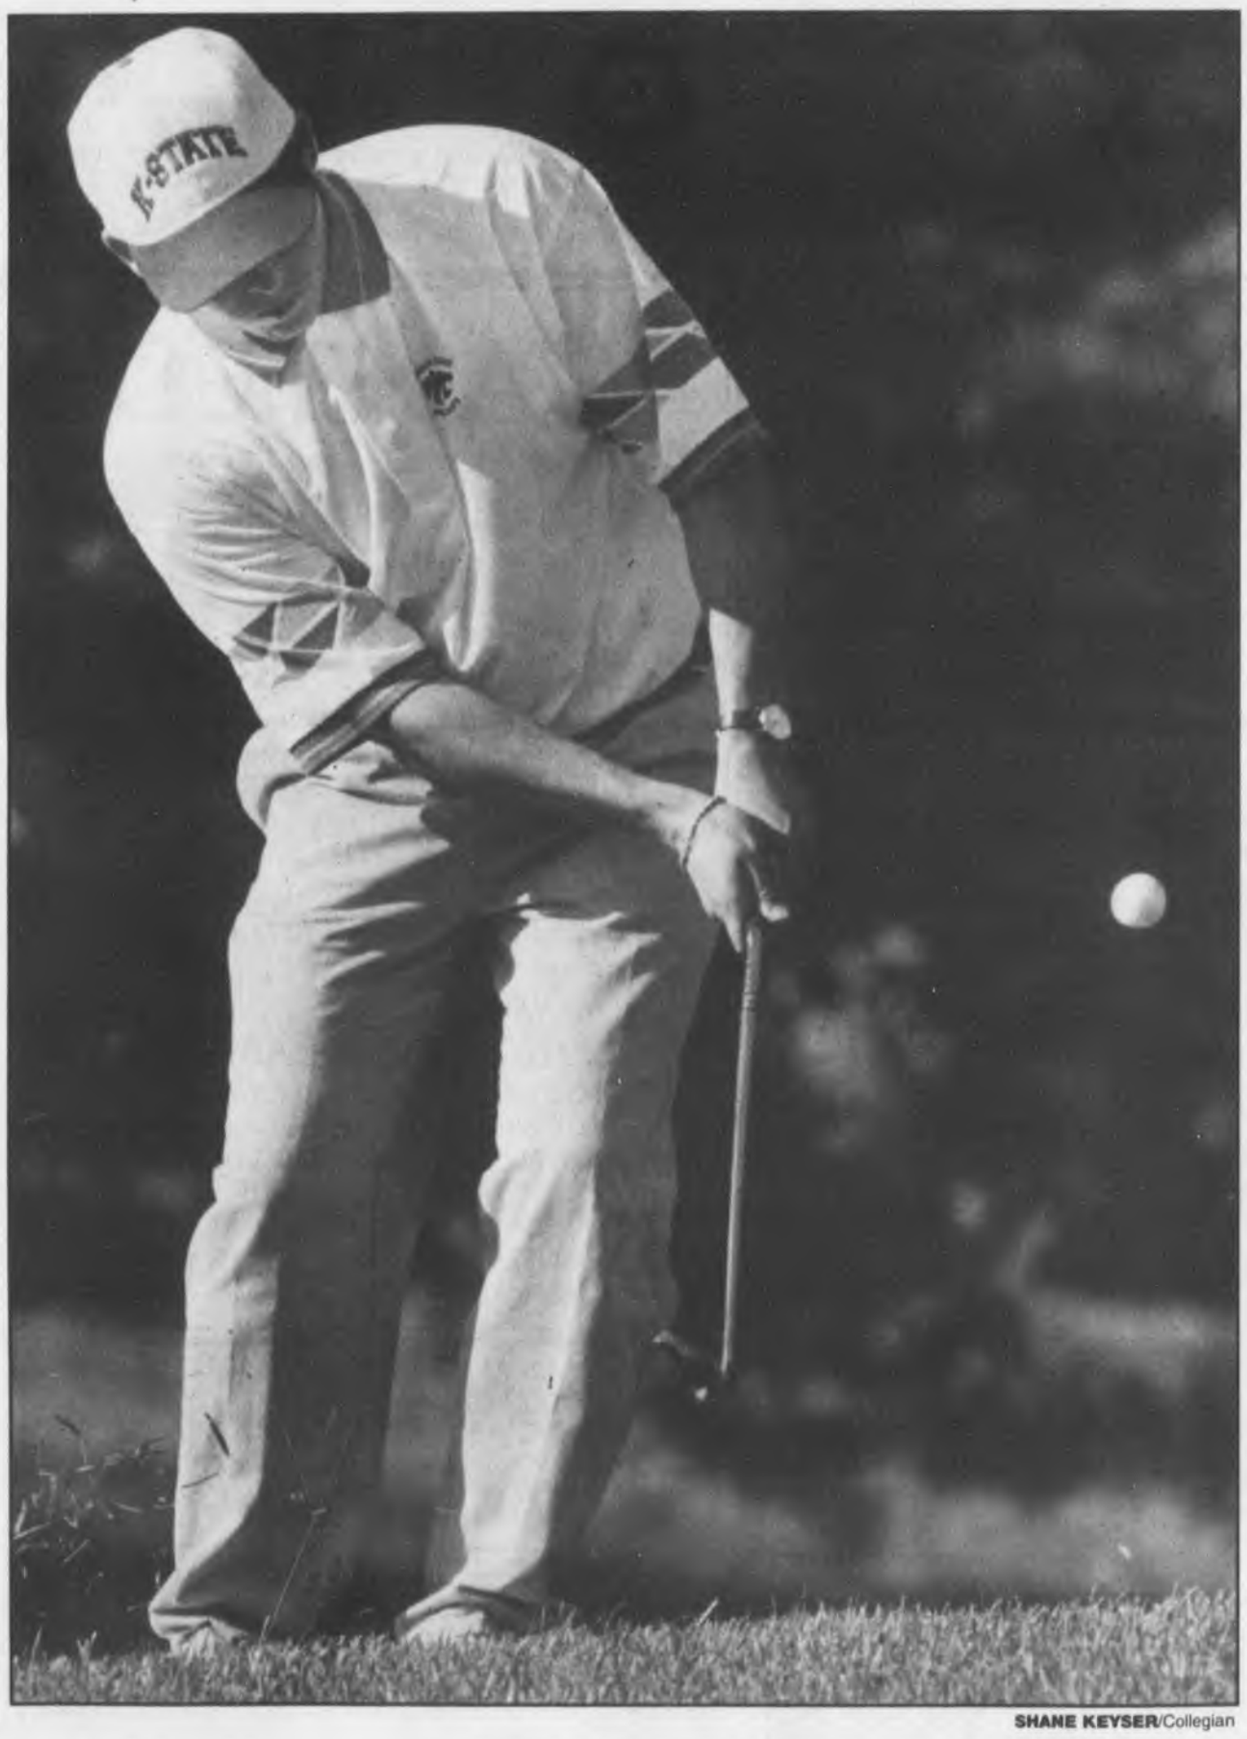
"Suzi has finally started to calm down," Hagemeyer said.

"She does some smart things, and she has shown some improvement the past two weeks."

Tonight's match-up is a preview of the Wichita State Invitational, which takes place on Oct. 29.

"This will allow us to prepare to play them later on this season," Hagemeyer said.

"They have some tough players. Their middle-blocker was named to the all-Missouri Valley Conference team."



Early in the season, Hagemeyer said that, to win, the defense would have to play consistently.

But now, Hagemeyer said the team is playing up and down defensively.

"Right now, we are trying to keep the ball off of the floor consistently," Hagemeyer said.

"We have allowed teams to score a lot of points in groups. But we also have kept the ball off the floor intermittently. So we are really up and down now."

Golfers slide to 7th place at KU Invitational

LAWRENCE — The K-State men's golf team finished a disappointing seventh in the Kansas Invitational at the Alvamar golf course. The team finished the two-day tournament with a score of 924.

"We weren't playing up to our potential," senior Chad Judd said.

"There are a lot of district schools here we needed to beat to make it to the NCAA (Tournament)."

Judd finished the tournament with a 239 after shooting 78, 87 and 74.

Placing seventh was a bit of a shock to the team after finishing second in the same tournament last year.

"We needed to shoot well today," sophomore Jason Losch said. "We were really disappointed after we did so well in the past."

Coach Mark Elliott said the squad hasn't shown the continuity that he would have liked to see.

"We didn't play well either day," he said, "We have done well in our regional tournaments, but we haven't been as consistent as I thought we would.

"We haven't played very well this fall, but we're not in bad shape as far as regionals are concerned."

One K-State player did fare well. This tournament was the first for sophomore Max Pinney.

"This was my first tournament, so I didn't really know what to expect," Pinney said. "I felt comfortable at this course because I have played here a lot."

Pinney scored a 73 and 76 the first day and 77 in the last round to lead the Cats with a total of 226.

"For his first tournament for us, I think he did well," Eliott said. "He beat everyone else on our team by five strokes. It was a good tournament for him."

K-State did outscore other teams in the Big Eight. The Wildcats beat both Nebraska and Missouri.

"As bad as we are playing, we are beating the teams that we have to," senior Sean Robertson said. "We beat two Big Eight teams and lost to two."

Robertson shot a three-day total of 239. Scott Hovis shot a 231, and Jason Losch shot a 238.

Kansas came in second with an 880, and Virginia Tech came back from third place to win the tournament with a two-day score of 877.

Oral Roberts was leading the tournament after Monday's rounds with 586 but quickly fell to finish third.

The K-state men will be traveling to Colorado State next week for their last tournament this fall.

"I will be taking Max Pinney and some guys who haven't played yet," Elliott said.

Squad hires pitching coach

K-State baseball coach Mike Clark added a new position to his coaching staff, hiring John Baptista as the Wildcats' pitching coach.

"John brings a wealth of knowledge, and we're very fortunate to get someone with his experience for this position," Clark said.

Baptista joins the K-State staff after serving 3-1/2 years as the pitching coach at Yavapai Community College in Prescott, Ariz. He helped guide that team to the 1993 NJCAA national championship.

"The work he's done at Yavapai has built his reputation as one of the top young pitching coaches in the nation," Clark said.

Baptista pitched at Cal-State Sacramento during his collegiate career and earned his bachelor's degree there in 1978.

Writer confesses to disbelief of undefeated Cats

TROY COVERDALE

In keeping with the religious theme of Tuesday's Pat Robertson visit, I just can't live with myself until I admit that I have been a very bad Wildcat football fan.

I confess. I never, ever, in my wildest dreams, thought the K-State football team would start a season 5-0.

I'm so ashamed that I couldn't fathom the fact that the Cats were that much improved from last year's 5-6 team.

Maybe it's because I've always had my hopes crushed by Wildcat football teams that have gone in the tank. Or maybe it's because I'd gotten so used to K-State football being a joke for so many years.

Oh, football gods, I beg for your forgiveness! How was I to know that a ranking in a Top 25 poll — ANYBODY'S Top 25 poll — would happen while I was walking the planet?

And the fact that the Wildcats didn't let KU in the end zone last weekend has got to be a miracle, even though the Jayhawks are still getting comfortable with a new quarterback.

I realize that I've been a rarity on this campus this season — someone who tried to remain realistic among fans that expected the Wildcats to do all of the above, and more.

Sure, K-State didn't exactly turn the Jayhawks on their ears and blow them out the way we were blown out in Lawrence last year.

And, yeah, the team has had its moments where it has appeared lackluster and without inspiration.

But, if these guys can put a complete game together, with your blessing, they could win the conference title!

Whatever!

Now that my little bit of facetious fun is over, it's time to give you a news flash: The Wildcats are good, but there is still a long way to go before the Orange Bowl and K-State football can be mentioned in the same breath.

Yes, the Wildcats are 5-0, but it may be time to temper the great expectations that are running rampant on campus. And I'm not talking about a Charles Dickens novel here.

And I think the next three games are going to do just that.

In the days before Bill Snyder became coach, Stan Parrish called the span where K-State plays Nebraska, Colorado and Oklahoma in successive weeks the "Bataan Death March."

Snyder won't go that far, preferring to look at the stretch one game at a time. But he admits it's not the easiest span of a schedule.

"You got to play them at some time, and I can't tell you that it's good to have all three of them together. But by the same token, we handled it well the last time."

Ah, yes, the last time. Two years ago, when Purple Pride was taking over Manhattan and the state. It was the stretch when K-State lost at Nebraska 38-31, lost to Colorado 10-0 and lost at Oklahoma 28-7. All that after starting the season 4-1.

Oops! Three weeks, three losses, and the record was 4-4.

I'm not saying the Wildcats don't have a chance at Nebraska or at home against Colorado or Oklahoma. I'm just being honest about the situation: Nebraska has won three straight conference titles; Colorado has been right behind them each year, and Oklahoma has gotten over probation penalties to earn a No. 8 ranking in the Associated Press poll.

So, when you start saying, "we expect this" and "we expect that," when it comes to the Wildcat-Husker matchup this weekend, keep in mind the expectation was that K-State would blow out KU.

I'll take the realistic approach. It ends up being less disappointing when things don't go as expected.

City Commission discusses airport

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The Manhattan City Commission looked at plans for $4.1 million in improvements to the municipal airport Tuesday night at a work session.

The improvements would include $1.5 million for a new terminal building.

"The building is just worn out," Mayor Roger Maughmer said. "We built that building 30 years ago, and it was only supposed to last 15 years."

About $3.1 million of the funds needed for the project would be provided in grants from the Federal Aviation Administration.

The rest would be local funds, Bruce McCallum, director of public works, said.

Some parking for the project has already been completed. An access road and signage project are under construction.

The signage project was mandated by the FAA two years ago in an attempt to make all airport signage uniform throughout the country.

The FAA will pay for $117,000 of the $130,000 project, McCallum said.

Commissioners viewed preliminary plans for the terminal at the work session. The 18,000-square-foot building would include three ticket counters, passenger waiting areas, baggage claim and a food-vending area.

Other project costs include extension of utilities to the airport, security fences and additional parking.

McCallum said projections showed the project would be short $522,000 in grant funds and $470,000 in local funds.

He suggested postponing extension of utilities or construction of another access road to make up the funding deficit.

Maughmer said he would like to know the ramifications of closing the control tower and using those funds for the terminal project.

The city pays a contractor $70,000 a year to operate the control tower.

Jim Pearson, city manager, said many airports of the same size or smaller do not have control towers.

However, he said the airport might risk losing traffic if the tower were closed.

LANDON LECTURE

Questions: pagans, gays, tyrants, lies

BOB FLEENER
Collegian

Pat Robertson responded to questions ranging from pagan Girl Scouts to Latin American tyrants during the traditional audience-interaction period of the Landon Lecture on Tuesday.

Jack Martin, a high-school student from Abilene, said in his question to Robertson that the religious broadcaster had referred to the Girl Scouts as environmental paganists during his TV show.

"My sister is a Girl Scout, and I can assure you she is not a paganist," Martin said.

"Are you sure you're not watching Rush's (Limbaugh) show instead of mine?" Robertson said, smiling at Martin.

Robertson said he was a Boy Scout and that he thinks the Girl Scouts are terrific. He said he did not believe anything like that had been said on his TV show.

A woman in the audience yelled out, "Lies!"

"No, I'm not lying," Robertson said. "I just don't believe what he said."

One man said he and Robertson had the same view: that homosexuality is a sin. The man received a sporadic reproach of booing from the audience. His question was, "Does God hate homosexuals?"

"God loves everybody," Robertson said while the audience applauded, whistled and cheered.

"One does not become a 'homophobe', whatever in the world that means, by saying that a lifestyle is contrary to the clear commands of the Bible. That's a different matter. The person is loved by God. The conduct is not," Robertson said.

Robertson also said his organization works actively with homosexuals and lesbians.

"We minister, at our Christian Broadcasting Network counseling centers, to roughly 2,000 homosexuals or lesbians every month," Robertson said.

Al Madrid, graduate student in speech, told Robertson he disagreed with his viewpoints but was glad he came to K-State.

"At the end of your speech, you were talking about that you want to make the use of the word 'tyrant' — something that is no longer used. Yet, I'm almost pretty darn sure that in the '80s you were pretty supportive of some governments in Central America that were dictators. I'd like to know how that's consistent with what you're now saying, one of them being Rios Montt in Guatemala," Madrid said.

Robertson said he knew Efrain Rios Montt was a Sunday-school teacher at a church in Guatemala. He said his organization had done work at Guatemala City and delivered food and clothing to people living in the city dump.

He said he interviewed Rios Montt after the coup that deposed the Romeo Lucas Garcia regime.

The former regime was corrupt, Robertson said, and was taking 30-percent kickbacks on public-works projects.

He said Rios Montt refused to take the million-dollar salary Lucas Garcia had been receiving, living instead on a salary of $1,000 a month.

Robertson said Rios Montt also made government workers sign a paper that said they wouldn't lie, steal or abuse. He said the corrupted elements of the country and the vested wealth couldn't handle this honesty. The result was the coup.

"I've worked in Latin America for many, many years and have friends down there. I don't know where your information about Rios is from," Robertson said.

"I'm from there, and I did research down there," Madrid said.

A student asked Robertson if he really said Christians were more persecuted than Jews, African Americans or Native Americans.

Robertson said he has been to concentration camps in Germany and places in the Holy Land that have honored those who died unjustly.

He said he believed his knowledge of those events prevented him from making such a statement.

"I have never, ever, in my life, said that the current activities of suppression of Christian thought in America could equal what was done in Germany. I do believe I did not say that," Robertson said.

"I think that has happened in relation to the unborn children — however, we have currently destroyed five times more lives of unborn children in America than ... in Nazi Germany."

Free speech arena

Students watched from the sidewalks, windows and even fire escapes to see about 200 people protest and counter-protest Pat Robertson's Landon Lecture Tuesday morning.

With the sound of the Fred Phelps congregation singing hymns in the background, picketers wearing black arm bands walked in front of McCain Auditorium. They were holding signs with slogans such as "pro-choice," "Yes Pat, God is coming, and she is pissed," "Hate is not a family value" and "K-State students deserve better."

Phelps reciprocated with signs that read, "God hates fags" and "Hate is a Bible value."

The protest was sponsored by the Manhattan chapter of the National Organization for Women; Flint Hills Alliance Inc., a gay and lesbian service organization; and Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society. The protest included a picket line sponsored by Theta Alpha Pi.

Nine people gave speeches in protest of Robertson's Landon Lecture. One of the speakers was Beverly Barbo, author of "The Walking Wounded," a book about her homosexual son and his partner, who both died of AIDS.

She spoke about her son and his sexual orientation.

"My family value is to love our son for who he was. He was who God meant him to be," she said.

Barbo called on Robertson to listen to their pain and joy and stop stirring up the hate against homosexuals and women.

"My family values are very inclusive," she said. "We look at everything in love.

She said she was protesting because it is time to stop the prejudice and suffering. We need to recognize homophobia, gender bias and racial discrimination and work to eliminate it, Barbo said.

Talat Rahman, professor of physics and one of the speakers at the protest, said she was angered by the choice of Robertson to speak at the Landon Lecture.

"I think it is a slap in the face," Rahman said. "Is this a challenge that we have to come to protest Pat Robertson instead of helping students?

"It is offensive."

As a woman, feminist and member of the University president's committee on multicultural affairs, Rahman said she felt obligated to speak out against Robertson. She said she was disappointed at the message it sends to K-State undergraduates.

"As a tenured faculty member here, I can fight," she said, "but what does this say to the undergraduates about multiculturalism?

"I think it is in bad taste."

The Landon Lecture committee should invite another speaker who is on the other side, one who represents the poor and the multicultural community, she said.

"I think they owe it to us," Rahman said.

The choice of Robertson can be seen as a challenge to the protesters' beliefs, she said.

"If we are strong in our commitment to multiculturalism, Pat Robertson won't make a difference," Rahman said.

Shabon Abdel Muttalib is surrounded by protesters after the Landon Lecture featuring Pat Robertson. Muttalib was expressing his views, which caught the attention of the protesters on the west side of McCain Auditorium.

Two protesters responded to one of Robertson's beliefs by dressing as witches. They were holding a sign with a Robertson quote that said: "The feminist agenda is about a socialist, anti-family political movement that encourages women to leave their husbands, kill their children, practice witchcraft, destroy capitalism and become lesbians."

Paul Patnode, Manhattan resident, said he was dressed as a witch and carrying the sign to make people take notice of Robertson's views.

"We wanted to draw attention to some of the absurd things he's said," Patnode said.

He said he was disappointed in Robertson being invited as a Landon Lecturer.

"I'm not sure how they can make up for this one," he said. "There's a cut-off line for good taste, and I think the University crossed it.

Not everyone outside McCain was anti-Robertson. On the north side of McCain a group of about 20 people were holding signs that welcomed Robertson and showed their support.

Kent Hampton, research assistant in entomology, said he wanted Robertson to know he has supporters at K-State.

"I'm one person who's happy Pat Robertson is coming here to speak, and I want him to know that," Hampton said.

The Phelps family was also on hand as a counter-protest to the Robertson protesters. The two groups yelled comments at each other such as "Save the gerbils," shouted by a Phelps supporter to the retort of "Save the ignorant" from a Robertson protester.

Deb Taylor, NOW member, said she was trying to keep people from overreacting to the Phelps group.

"I don't even want to dignify him with a response," Taylor said. "You can't teach a fanatic anything."

K-State Police, Riley County Police Department and Kansas highway patrol officers were on the scene of the lecture as a precaution. Campus police officer Mary Williamson said there were no problems despite the protests.

One student was motivated to join the protesters by the presence of the Phelps family.

"I was just going to class, and I just wanted to add my voice because I completely disagree with what they are saying," Dimitri Tamalis, graduate student in biochemistry, said.

Nikhil Taluja, senior in computer engineering and mathematics, was holding a sign that read: "If men could get pregnant, abortion would be a sacrament."

"I'm supporting my wife and the feminists," he said. "I think no one should be discriminated against. God created us all equal."

Following the speech, some of the protesters said they felt angry because they thought Robertson toned down many of his views.

"He masked a lot of his views. In his lecture he said God loves everyone, but on his show he gives a different view," said Al Madrid, graduate student in speech.

Melissa Todd, senior in women's studies and English, and one of the speakers at the protest, said she thought he danced around the questions that were asked.

"If he's so anti-dictator and anti-tyrannical, why is he so against equal rights for women and homosexuals?" she said. "He believes in equal rights for a select group of people. That scares me."

Barbo agreed he masked some of his views.

"He speaks well, but he forgets what he says on the 700 Club," she said. "He thinks he is speaking of love, but it is always with exceptions. He's been doing it for so long I don't think he recognizes it."

Gail Selfridge, NOW member and one of the protest coordinators, said she was pleased with how the protest went.

"I thought it was great," she said. "What a learning experience for students. That's democracy in action," she said. "I think it is good to let people see you stand up for what you believe."

Phelps pickets presence of NOW

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

Witches, picket signs and protesters made for a Tuesday morning at K-State that is unlikely to be seen again.

The sidewalks and lawn west of McCain were busy with more than students shouldering backpacks. Picketers filled the area carrying signs plastered with bold words proclaiming hate or asking for understanding from various organizations. Hymns and scripture collided with speeches in the open air.

While the National Organization for Women was the largest group of protesters by far, another smaller yet vocal group made its presence known.

The Rev. Fred Phelps, Topeka, turned out with about a dozen others to protest NOW and homosexuality.

"We're protesting the fags and NOW hags," Phelps said. "We're not picketing Pat."

On the whole, Phelps said he agrees with Pat Robertson's theology, but he said that Robertson compromises too much on the issues of homosexuality.

Robertson does not take a strong enough or open enough stand against it, he said.

"The faggots are fueling the fires of God's wrath," Phelps said. "Their God is their rectum."

Phelps also attacked Robertson's fund-raising tactics.

"He is a money-grubbing, compromising Baptist preacher," Phelps said.

But Robertson was not the reason Phelps and his followers were protesting.

"They (homosexuals) came out of the closet and wouldn't shut up, so we came out of the closet to shut them up with bible preaching," he said.

Phelps said he appreciated the fact that other groups showed up to protest.

"We're very grateful to them for coming, because we get to sing and preach to them," he said.

Scott Unekis, a senior at Manhattan High School, said he was glad Phelps was there, but not because he supported him.

"I'm glad they're here because it gives us a chance to protest against them," Unekis said. "It's vital for a healthy society to be able to voice other views."

Phelps said he thinks a majority of the population agrees with his beliefs to some extent. He bases this on national polls and letters and phone calls that he has received.

"We're a distinct minority in the approach we're taking, but I believe that the majority, a substantial majority, agree with us, that the homosexuals lead a lifestyle that is morally and legally wrong," Phelps said. "We are living in paradoxical days when that which is a crime is being touted."

Others at the protest did not appear to think that Phelps' beliefs were held by a majority.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

NOW protesters gather as Fred Phelps and his followers prepare to leave the K-State campus after picketing outside McCain Auditorium before Pat Robertson's Landon Lecture

"I think he's crazy," Teresa Schmidt, K-State assistant professor in art, said. "He represents the smallest minority in Kansas, the state which I love."

A member of the NOW organization, who asked to be identified only as Kate, said, "We ignore Fred. The best thing to do is ignore him, because he wants all the attention he can get, even if it's negative. He's a crackpot. There can't be that many people who are like him."

George Stutzman, who protested along with Phelps, said the two were pilgrims of God.

"We're just preaching and showing the word of God," Stutzman said. " We're not out of this world, we're just pilgrim's here preaching the word of God."

Preaching their version of the word of God was only part of their protest. Phelps and his followers sang hymns and punctuated the breaks with the shout of "Save the gerbils."

Several bystanders and protesters offered a variety of opinions about the picketing.

"We just want to drive bigotry out of the place," Nirmal Singh, who attended the protest, said.

"We have as much of a say in the working of society as Pat Robertson does. And Fred Phelps is here to add fuel to the fire."

David Dysart, senior in management, was not sure what to make of it all.

"It's kind of overwhelming," he said. "The thing that bothers me the most (about Phelps' followers) is that they have a kid over there. That's just wrong."

Alternative speaker questions Robertson's views of religion

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

In response to Pat Robertson's Landon Lecture, John Swomley was the featured speaker for the Lou Douglas Lecture at 4 p.m. in Forum Hall Tuesday.

Swomley, an activist, author and humanitarian, primarily spoke against Robertson and several of his claims and ideals, much to the delight of the audience.

"No theological school would teach what he preaches," Swomley said.

Quoting from Robertson's book, "Beyond Reason," Swomley questioned Robertson's alleged miracles and his ability to talk to God.

"Robertson claimed, in his book, to have prayed for God to stop a hurricane from destroying his Christian Broadcast Network station, and, by chance, it did," he said. "If he really does have a pipeline, why doesn't he help stop other hurricanes from killing people?"

Swomley discussed Robertson's political agenda and how the world should operate.

"This morning, you heard that faith in God is essential to democracy," he said. "The trouble is that almost everyone uses the word 'God' to identify with their particular organization."

Swomley said Robertson is against the separation of church and state and would like to see a Christian Theocracy.

"The problem with that is it alienates Jews, Moslems and other religions from the country, and that isn't good for the country," he said.

There is a danger, Swomley said, from political parties — like Robertson's Christian Coalition — that become religious parties. He cited the Christian Democratic Party in Germany as an example.

"No party can really be a Christian party," he said. "A political party must compromise, and theocracies don't compromise with what they see as wrong."

When Robertson didn't gain the presidency, Swomley said he decided to try to gain power through the Coalition in local politics.

"They win seats by deception," he said. "The coalition candidates gain votes through fliers, phone calls and other methods, gaining exposure without ever having to express their views on sensitive issues."

Swomley said Robertson's interpretation of the Bible isn't exactly true and that he uses only the parts of the Bible that support him.

"Robertson claims to believe in Biblical inerrancy and the laws," he said.

"He can quote Paul in the Gospels about homosexuality but overlook Paul's quote about not judging someone yourself, but letting God judge them."

Swomley view's differed from Robertson's in many ways.

"I think everybody, no matter what their lifestyle is, should be treated with respect," he said.

John Swomley Jr., professor emeritus of social ethics at the Saint Paul School of Theology in Kansas City, makes a point about religion during a lecture Tuesday afternoon in the K-State Union Forum Hall. The lecture, which was an alternative to Pat Robertson's Landon Lecture, was entitled, "Defenders of Faith or Threat to Freedom."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Cassie plays match maker

Dear Cassandra,

This is for Tired, Horny and Depressed. There are some older men on campus who know that a relationship is more than just going out for sex.

What happened to going out for companionship or for conversation so you could get to know each other better?

There is an old saying that there is somebody right out there for you, so keep looking. You know what you are looking for in a man and know how you expect to be treated, so don't give up. You will find your significant other someday.

Signed,

Another Lonely, Depressed Student

Dear Another,

Thanks for your words. I know Tired will appreciate your positive thoughts. Read on.

Dear Cassandra,

This letter is in response to the one you printed Sept. 6 from Tired, Horny and Depressed.

I can sympathize with the way she feels. I am a male student who has dated a lot of women and who is tired of the relationship run-around. I am also looking for a relationship that is meaningful. Cassandra, I truly think there could be a possible match in the works here.

Could you please let this lady know that there are men at K-State that would prefer the maturity of an older woman. I, for one, would be very interested in meeting her, and I'm sure there are others here that want more than a sexual relationship.

Signed,

Waiting for a Purpose

Dear Waiting,

How about this ... I hope Tired is reading today so this can work. How about you two meeting this Friday night at the Union Station at 8 p.m.?

Waiting, you wear a blue shirt and Tired, you wear a green shirt. Meet by the pool table and order some coffee.

Chat for a while and see what happens. It seems obvious that you're both looking for the same thing. Maybe you'll find it in each other.

Redd Cross rescues punk-rock music

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

Redd Cross pulls off one of the trickiest maneuvers in the music business: The band sounds mean and happy at the same time.

In its latest release, "Phaseshifter," Redd Cross displays a variety of styles. This is inevitable when a band has more than 15 years of experience and influences ranging from the Partridge Family to Kiss.

Redd Cross got its start in the late '70s when brothers Jeff and Steven McDonald started playing guitar and bass at the tender ages of 13 and 9. Since then, Redd Cross's contributors have included the Circle Jerks' Greg Hetson, Black Flag's Ron Reyes and Tommy Erdyeli, a.k.a. Tommy Ramone.

The band has come a long way since the formative days of punk rock. "Phaseshifter" is professional-sounding, especially for a self-produced album. However, the band has resisted the common temptation to overproduce. "Phaseshifter" is full of honest, straightforward rock 'n' roll.

The band's variety of styles becomes evident when listening to the first three songs.

"Jimmy's Fantasy" is a typical Redd Cross song — brutal guitars and solid drums mixed with catchy, airy vocals. The song has one of those choruses that stick in your head all day long.

Track two, "Lady in the Front Row," opens up with a guitar riff strangely reminiscent of the Beatles' "Ticket to Ride," albeit with hopped-up guitars.

"Monolith" demonstrates a radical twist in sound, hearkening back to late-'50s/early '60s pop. One can't help thinking "Needles and Pins."

Throughout the album, Redd Cross intermixes twangy, reverb-salted guitar with crunchy, post-punk rhythms. On several tracks, most noticeably "Dumb Angel" and "Crazy World," the band sounds an awful lot like Sonic Youth. Droning, repetitive chord changes combine with eerie harmonies for a delightfully twisted sound.

In the album's final song, "After School Special," Redd Cross alludes to its punk beginnings, humorously and violently.

Redd Cross writes pop songs with a bite from hell. Trying to get a Redd Cross tune out of your mind is about as easy as trying to rid yourself of the taste of a good, hot enchilada.

Why try?

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

Pentagon orders Haiti-bound ship out of waters

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon today ordered the USS Harlan County, with about 200 U.S. and Canadian noncombat forces aboard, out of Haitian waters, senior defense officials said.

"She's under way," one official said. "She's steaming."

Two officials, both speaking on condition they not be named, said the landing ship was headed for the nearby U.S. Navy base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. Both officials said this did not mean the U.N.-sanctioned Haiti mission was canceled.

The White House, meanwhile, said the United States will support reimposing economic sanctions on Haiti because military and police leaders have obstructed the arrival of the Harlan County.

"We're going to ask the U.N. to reimpose economic sanctions, those which strike hardest at the individuals who are now holding up the process," White House Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers said.

"Those include things like restrictions on travel, freezing overseas assets and an oil embargo," she said.

"The president does not intend to let the troops sit on the ship offshore indefinitely," Meyers said.

Another defense official said a second troop ship, the USS Fairfax County, would not leave its station at Little Creek, Va., as scheduled Wednesday.

The ship had been scheduled to go to Haiti with additional U.S. noncombat forces.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher said earlier today that Haitian military and police leaders were inviting severe economic sanctions.

Christopher said Army chief Raoul Cedras and police commander Michel Francois violated the commitments they undertook last July when they agreed to allow the restoration of democracy in Haiti.

Under that agreement, ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide is due to return to Haiti at the end of the month.

About 170 U.S. and 26 Canadian noncombat forces were due to land in Haiti on Monday but were blocked by forces opposed to the return of democracy.

"By their actions, Gen. Cedras and Police Chief Lt. Col. Michel Francois are really inviting the reimposition of severe economic sanctions, which would affect their country and also affect them personally," Christopher said.

He spoke during a photo session with Kuwait's deputy prime minister.

International sanctions against Haiti were lifted after the July agreements were signed.

Christopher said the United States has strong interest in seeing that Aristide is restored to power. He said the alternative to the agreement is a new wave of Haitian boat people who would seek refuge in the United States.

Myers said the administration expects Haitian military and police leaders to follow through on an agreement to establish a permissive environment for the U.S. troops and warned that reimposing the sanctions would, "hurt the people who are violating the agreement the most."

Land mine, Serbs block Bosnia relief convoys

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO (AP) — A land mine exploded near a Red Cross relief convoy Tuesday, forcing the trucks to turn back before reaching 150,000 Muslims cut off from aid since June 1.

Bosnian Serbs blocked two other U.N. convoys trying to reach the area for a third day in the northwestern Serb stronghold of Banja Luka. It was a sign of the difficulties workers face in feeding some 3 million Bosnians this winter.

In Sarajevo, a French U.N. peacekeeper suffered head wounds from sniper fire near the old city's Skenderija district. French authorities said he was evacuated to Paris for treatment.

In central Bosnia, Croat and government forces continued their fierce battle for territory. But in a sign of conciliation, the foreign ministers of Bosnia and the neighboring republic of Croatia agreed to exchange all prisoners starting Thursday.

The 14-truck Red Cross convoy carrying blankets, food packages and wheat flour was nearing Tesanj in northern central Bosnia when a land mine exploded near the armored vehicle leading the trucks, the Red Cross said.

No one was injured, but the convoy turned back to Banja Luka for the night, said agency representative Jessica Clark-Hall.

Aid workers estimate there are at least 150,000 Muslims jammed into Tesanj and nearby Maglaj. Neither town has received aid over land since June 1, and packages dropped from planes reportedly have drifted too far away to be safely retrieved.

The last aid convoy was shelled, and two Danish aid workers were killed.

Up to 200,000 people are dead or missing in 18 months of war that started when ethnic Serbs rebelled against a vote by most Muslims and Croats to secede from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

Last month, Croats took Serb-held villages in southwestern Croatia and were accused by the United Nations of arbitrarily killing Serb civilians.

WILDCAT WATCH

OCTOBER 13, 1993 | A COLLEGIAN SPECIAL SPORTS SECTION | KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

ROYAL PURPLE FILE

Corney Davis, a former Wildcat running back, rushes past the Nebraska defense in 1969 in Lincoln, Neb. K-State beat Nebraska 12-0 that season under former Wildcat coach Vince Gibson.

Making history in 1968: Cats beat Cornhuskers

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

It was four years in the making and hadn't been repeated in 25 years.

But on a cold and blustery Nebraska Saturday of Nov. 9, 1968, the K-State football team won its first Big Eight Conference game in four years against the Nebraska Cornhuskers by the score of 12-0.

The win was the first Big Eight win for the Cats since 1964 and the first win against Nebraska since 1959.

According to an article in the 1968 Collegian, the win made believers out of a lot of skeptics.

Former K-State quarterback Lynn Dickey said the win made believers out of some fans.

"It finally gave us some respect," Dickey said. "We went into Nebraska and beat them on their home field."

To make the win even more significant was the fact the game was the Cornhuskers' home-coming game, and more than 66,000 fans were in attendance.

"I have never seen so much red before in my life," Dickey said. "At the time, we didn't think about how big the win was, but now it's been 25 years since we beat them. I guess it's sad for your school to not have beaten a team in 25 years."

The Cats opened the scoring on their first possession. From the 47-yard line, Dickey found split end Dave Jones for a 47-yard completion that put the ball on the 7-yard line.

Two plays later, the Cats punched the ball into the end zone on another pass from Dickey to wingback Mack Herron.

In a story published in the Collegian, Coach Vince Gibson said he praised the efforts of Jones, Dickey and Herron, but offered special credit to the defensive unit.

"Our pass rush helped us more than anything else on defense, and our man-to-man coverage of the receivers was really good," Gibson said.

The defense Gibson talked about limited the Nebraska passing attack to just 68 yards. The defense also shut down the potent Nebraska rushing offense.

"The defense was just flying everywhere," Dickey said. "They just were good all over the field. The defense was just so fired up."

The Cats then tacked on two field goals by Max Arreguin, including a 50-yarder, to give the Cats a 12-0 lead they would never give up.

Dickey said Arreguin was a good kicker.

"Max was a tall, thin guy with a powerful leg — he played back-up quarterback," Dickey said. "He nailed the 50-yarder and made it with ease. We were all pretty excited."

The game was a classic coaching matchup. It matched Gibson, K-State's second all-time winning coach, vs. Nebraska's second all-time winning coach, Bob Devaney.

"Bob Devaney is a good coach," Gibson said in 1968.

"When you shut out Nebraska, you've shut out a good team."

Dickey also said it was fun to play in the snow for the first time.

"It snowed for about 10 or 15 minutes," Dickey said. "I had watched people playing in the snow on television. It was fun, but it wasn't much of a factor."

The locker room was an exciting environment, according to the Collegian story. In the background, the players were chanting "KU, KU, KU" because the Cats would play Kansas the next week for homecoming.

The bus ride back to Manhattan also was fun, Dickey said.

"Everyone was excited," Dickey said. "The bus trip back did not seem as long as the ride up.

"One of our assistant coaches was from Nebraska, and I sat next to him on the way back. He was sure beaming all the way back."

3 K-Staters want to show Nebraska they can play

SCOTT FRITCHEN
Collegian

When seniors Quentin Neujahr and John Butler first suited up in Wildcat uniforms to play Nebraska four years ago, they knew the odds of K-State winning weren't good.

Neujahr and Butler are native Nebraskans, and both of them grew up as Husker fans.

After high school, they faced the possibility of staying in state and attending Nebraska, but Neujahr was denied a scholarship, and Butler just didn't have his heart set on becoming a Husker.

After three years of playing and losing to Nebraska, they said they hope to end K-State's 25-season losing streak to the Cornhuskers and show family, friends and Nebraska coach Tom Osborne that K-State has improved since their freshman season.

"I look forward to playing Nebraska no matter what season it is," Neujahr said.

"We are a lot more focused and have a lot more ability than we had my freshman year. Every game we've played against them has been painful."

Neujahr grew up in Ulysses, Neb., which had a population of 56. Being a two-time all-state center, he was given attention from Nebraska until the signing date, Feb. 6, 1989.

"That was the day they recruited the kid from Colorado instead," Neujahr said.

"I didn't get it, and he got it. He's still there, but he hasn't seen the field yet."

After becoming a Wildcat, Neujahr said he has constantly tried to prove to Nebraska that small-town kids are as capable of playing in the Big Eight Conference as anybody else.

"It did hurt, but you've got to realize that that's the business," Neujahr said.

Butler resided in Hastings, Neb., where he was an all-state selection as running back. Despite attending a couple of Nebraska's football camps, Nebraska didn't pursue Butler, so he came to K-State instead.

Butler said there has been a definite change between his freshman year and this season.

"When I came here, K-State wasn't too good," Butler said, "but now we've really made some strides. It feels good to know you've helped a program.

"We've played them tough the last couple years, but the way we're playing now, we feel we have the chance to beat anybody in the country," Butler said.

Coach Bill Snyder said K-State has gotten closer to the level he hopes to achieve, but Neujahr and Butler — and the rest of the team — must play extremely well to win on Saturday.

"They both (Neujahr and Butler) play hard every game, not just the Nebraska game," Snyder said. "It will mean something more special to them, but every game means something special to them."

K-State has three players who are from the state of Nebraska:

BIG EIGHT ROUND-UP

OSU AT MISSOURI

FAST FACTS: 1 p.m. Saturday, Faurot Field, Columbia, Mo.

RECORDS: Oklahoma State (3-2/0-1) and Missouri (1-3-1/0-1).

ABOUT THE COWBOYS:

Oklahoma State lost to Nebraska 27-13 last Thursday night on ESPN. The Cowboys dropped to second in total defense last week, allowing 301.1 yards per game.

The Cowboys defeated Missouri last year 28-26 in a bizarre game. With seconds left in the first half, Missouri defensive back Jason Oliver blocked a field-goal attempt. The ball fell into the grasp of Cowboy holder Scott Tyner, who lobbed a 14-yard pass to tight end Derek Jones for a touchdown.

ABOUT THE TIGERS:

Missouri fell to Colorado 30-18 last Saturday at Boulder, Colo.

Missouri leads the series against Oklahoma State 21-18 and has a 14-8 advantage at Columbia.

Tiger quarterback Jeff Handy racked up 329 yards through the air on 29-of-43 passing last weekend. His performance moved him to eighth place in school history with 4,153 yards.

Tight end A.J. Ofodile notched his third 100-yard receiving day — the second in as many weeks. Ofodile is second in the Big Eight in receiving yards per game with an average of 69.6.

OKLAHOMA AT COLORADO

FAST FACTS: 1:30 p.m., Saturday, Folsom Field, Boulder, Colo. Live on ABC-Regional.

RECORDS: Colorado (3-2/1-0) and Oklahoma (5-0/1-0).

ABOUT THE BUFFALOES:

Colorado wide receiver Michael Westbrook caught four passes for 36 yards in the Buffaloes' 30-18 victory over Missouri last week.

Buffalo quarterback Kordell Stewart continues to the lead the conference in total offense with 278.2 yards per game.

Lamont Warren and Rashaan Salaam now own the top two rushing spots in the conference with 93.8 and 86.0 yards per outing, respectively.

ABOUT THE SOONERS:

The Sooners ended a four-year losing streak to Texas with a 38-17 win over the Longhorns last Saturday in Dallas. Oklahoma rushed for 275 yards to Texas' 88 yards.

Last year's contest with the Buffaloes finished in a tie when Colorado place-kicker Mitch Berger booted a 53-yard field goal as time ran out. The Buffaloes came back from a 24-14 deficit with 4:27 left in the game.

The Sooners have not beaten the Buffaloes since a 17-14 victory in 1988 at Boulder, Colo. It is their longest winless streak against any team in the Big Eight.

IOWA STATE AT KANSAS

FAST FACTS: 1 p.m., Saturday, Memorial Stadium, Lawrence.

RECORDS: Iowa State (1-4/0-1) and Kansas (2-4/0-1).

ABOUT THE CYCLONES:

Iowa State was idle last week. The Cyclones were beaten 24-7 by Oklahoma on Oct. 2.

Kansas led Iowa State 21-7 after the first quarter in last year's contest. The Cyclones came roaring back to take a 47-21 lead in the second half, only to watch KU quarterback Chip Hilleary run for one touchdown and threw for two more en route to a 50-47 Jayhawk win.

Iowa State quarterback Bob Utter is the top-rated passer in the Big Eight. He is completing 58 percent of his passes and 8.85 yards per attempt.

The Cyclones trail the Jayhawks 37-29-6 in the series. Kansas owns an 18-12-3 advantage in Lawrence. The last Cyclone victory in Lawrence was in 1989 when they beat Kansas 24-20.

ABOUT THE JAYHAWKS:

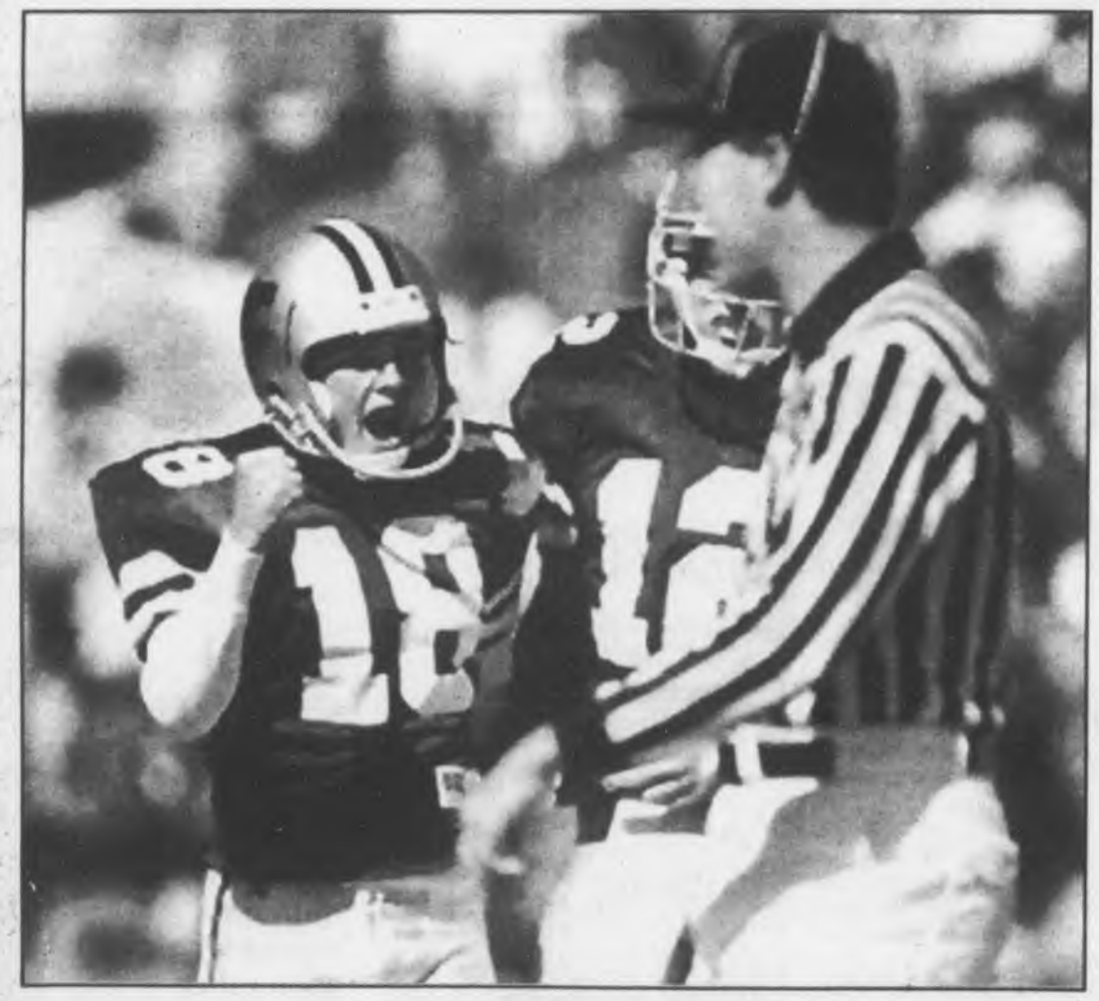
Kansas was defeated by Kansas State 10-9 last week at Manhattan. The Wildcats scored all of their points in the first quarter and held the Kansas offense to no touchdowns. The Jayhawks got all of its points from place-kicker Dan Eichloff, who was 3-of-3 on field goals.

Eichloff's performance extended his career-point total to 279 points — ninth best in school history.



Kansas is next-to-last in the conference with 18.2 points per game, ahead of only Missouri's 12.4 per game.

K-State edges intrastate rival Kanas to remain undefeated

K-State might not have given themselves a 10 on performance, but they got 10s elsewhere.

The Wildcats beat the Kansas Jayhawks 10-9 Saturday at KSU Stadium in front of 44,165 fans to get their 10th-consecutive win at home.

The win gave K-State its first Top 25 poll ranking in nearly 33 years, as the USA TODAY-CNN Coaches' Poll gave the Cats a No. 24 ranking, but the Associated Press put K-State at No. 26.

K-State coach Bill Snyder said the win was important, but six games are still left on the schedule.

"Certainly it's a big win, no doubt," Snyder said, "but it isn't the biggest win. 5-0 is great if you don't have to play anymore. It won't mean anything if you don't do something with the next six games."

Center Quentin Neujahr said the victory was great for the team.

"Definitely, it's a big win," Neujahr said. "We came out and proved we could win it."

Kansas coach Glen Mason said he knew the game would be a fierce battle.

"I thought it was a great football game," Mason said. "Anytime you start talking about rivalries, it comes down to a very tough, close-fought battle.

"You look back to one or two plays in the game, and that's the difference."

One play that made the difference was Tate Wright's 50-yard field goal — a career high — at the 3:17 mark of the first quarter. Wright said he was rushed into the kick.

"My holder (quarterback Brian Kavanagh) said to hurry up," Wright said. "It was really difficult to do. I tried to hit it good and let the wind take care of it. I was pretty scared. After I kicked it, I looked up, and it was going straight. I'm glad I made it."

Wright said the reason he was rushed was because the coaches were deciding who should kick the ball.

"There was a mix-up because of the range of the kick," he said. "I had a range of 50 yards, and anything over, Warren (Claassen) would have kicked. (Special teams coach Nick) Quartaro looked over at me and told me to kick it."

Another factor in the game was the wind, which gusted to 20 miles per hour during the game.

Snyder said the wind played a part in the game.

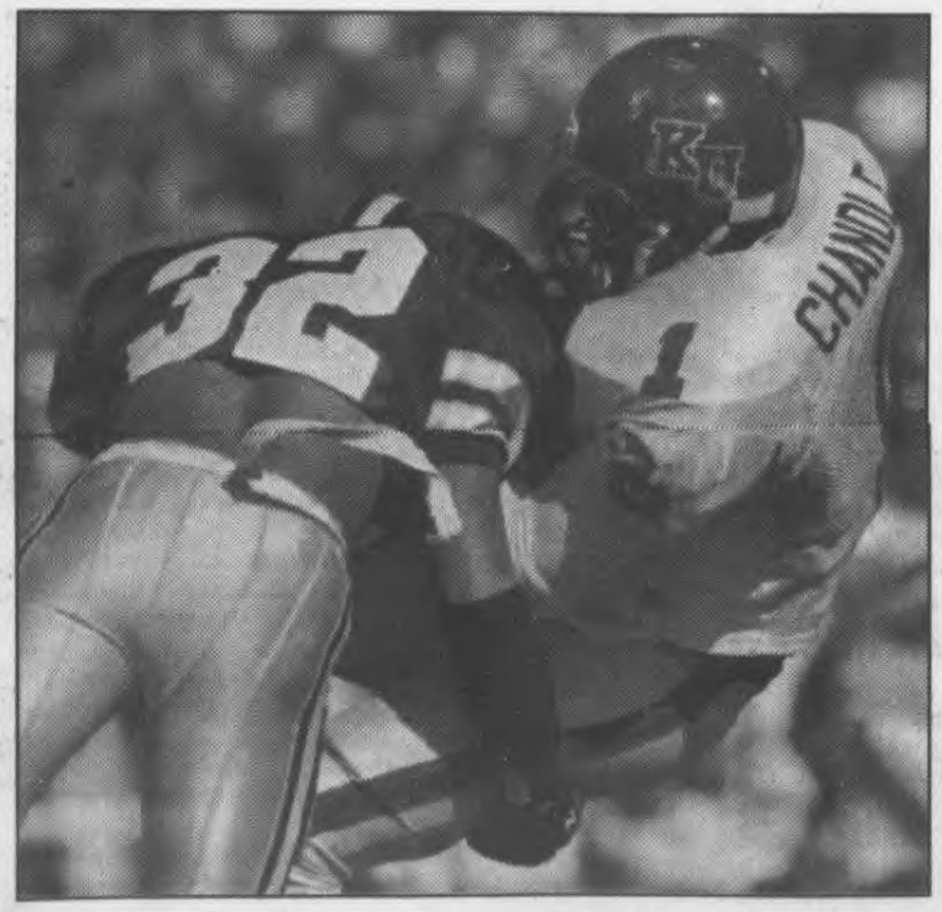
"I wasn't worried about Chad (May) throwing into the wind. I was just concerned about kicking into it," Snyder said. "Even Dan (Eichloff) had some trouble kicking into the wind. I think if we would have had to kick more into the wind, it would have been a different ballgame.

"I felt it was extremely important because every point was scored with the wind," he said.

Mason said he wanted to have the wind to start the third quarter so his team could catch up with K-State.

"Well, I don't think that there was any doubt that the wind was a factor today," Mason said. "At that point in time, if you're going to make your move, you better make it right there. I didn't want to fall any farther behind than we were. So, I figured I'd take the wind right then and there."

Running back J.J. Smith rushed for 135 yards on 26 carries — both for career highs. Smith could have had more if he hadn't fumbled early in the second quarter. Snyder said he took Smith out because Smith was angry at himself.



"J.J. Smith was really upset about the fumble," Snyder said. "My concern was getting him tempered down. He felt like he fell off the face of the earth. I wanted to get him calmed down and back into the game."

After the game, Mason said K-State had a fine team.

"We're playing a team that's undefeated, and we were away from home," said Mason, whose team didn't get a touchdown for the first time against the Wildcats since 1966. "We played a good football team, and we came up short."

Snyder said the Jayhawks' last drive gave him more gray hairs.

"After this game, I feel as if I'm 97 years old," he said.

FOOTBALL

Crowd crazy at game

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The action on the playing field between K-State and the University of Kansas was not the only event going on Saturday involving the game.

Before the game, many of the record-breaking 44,165 fans tailgated in parking lots and partied in their homes.

"We walked around a lot in the parking lot," Trent Schoenberger, freshman in business, said. "We talked and socialized with about everybody. It was like a big party."

Paul Sprague, freshman in chemical engineering, said many people stayed at home and got intoxicated before walking to the game.

"We stayed around and partied some before we walked to the game," Sprague said. "The excitement was in the air before the game."

Along with the people tailgating in the parking lot, several local radio stations, including KMKF-FM 101.5, sponsored tailgating give-aways. K-Rock also had a contest to shoot a Jayhawk with a ping-pong ball gun.

Inside the stadium, the environment was much the same as outside. Bob Jamieson, sophomore in architecture, said the people were having just as much fun inside the stadium as they did outside before the game.

"It was crazy in there," Jamieson said. "The stadium was really packed. It was good to see the crowd into the game and supporting the team."

After the game was over, both of the goal posts were torn down, and Jamieson said it was an united effort by the students to get them down.

"It was really neat. Everyone worked as one," Jamieson said. "It was nice, because if you fell off the goal post, someone would help you back up."

With both of the goal posts down and removed from KSU Stadium, students from the crowd carried them to Aggieville.

"We were just walking down the middle of the street," Jamieson said. "Everyone was honking at us as we were going down the road. They were yelling 'Go K-State.'"

With the win, many people were afraid violence could break out in Aggieville, but Sgt. Michael Quintanar from the Riley County Police Department said there weren't many problems.

"Everyone had a great time," Quintanar said. "Most of the arrests were due to liquor, or to open containers."

Aside from the tailgating and partying, some students got to see themselves on television when ESPN showed some footage of the tearing down of the goal posts and the celebration on the field.

"I was excited," Shaun Stoller, senior in elementary education, said. "I can't believe I saw myself on ESPN, but there I was shaking hands with the KU football coach on national television."

VOLLEYBALL

Saxton serious in new career

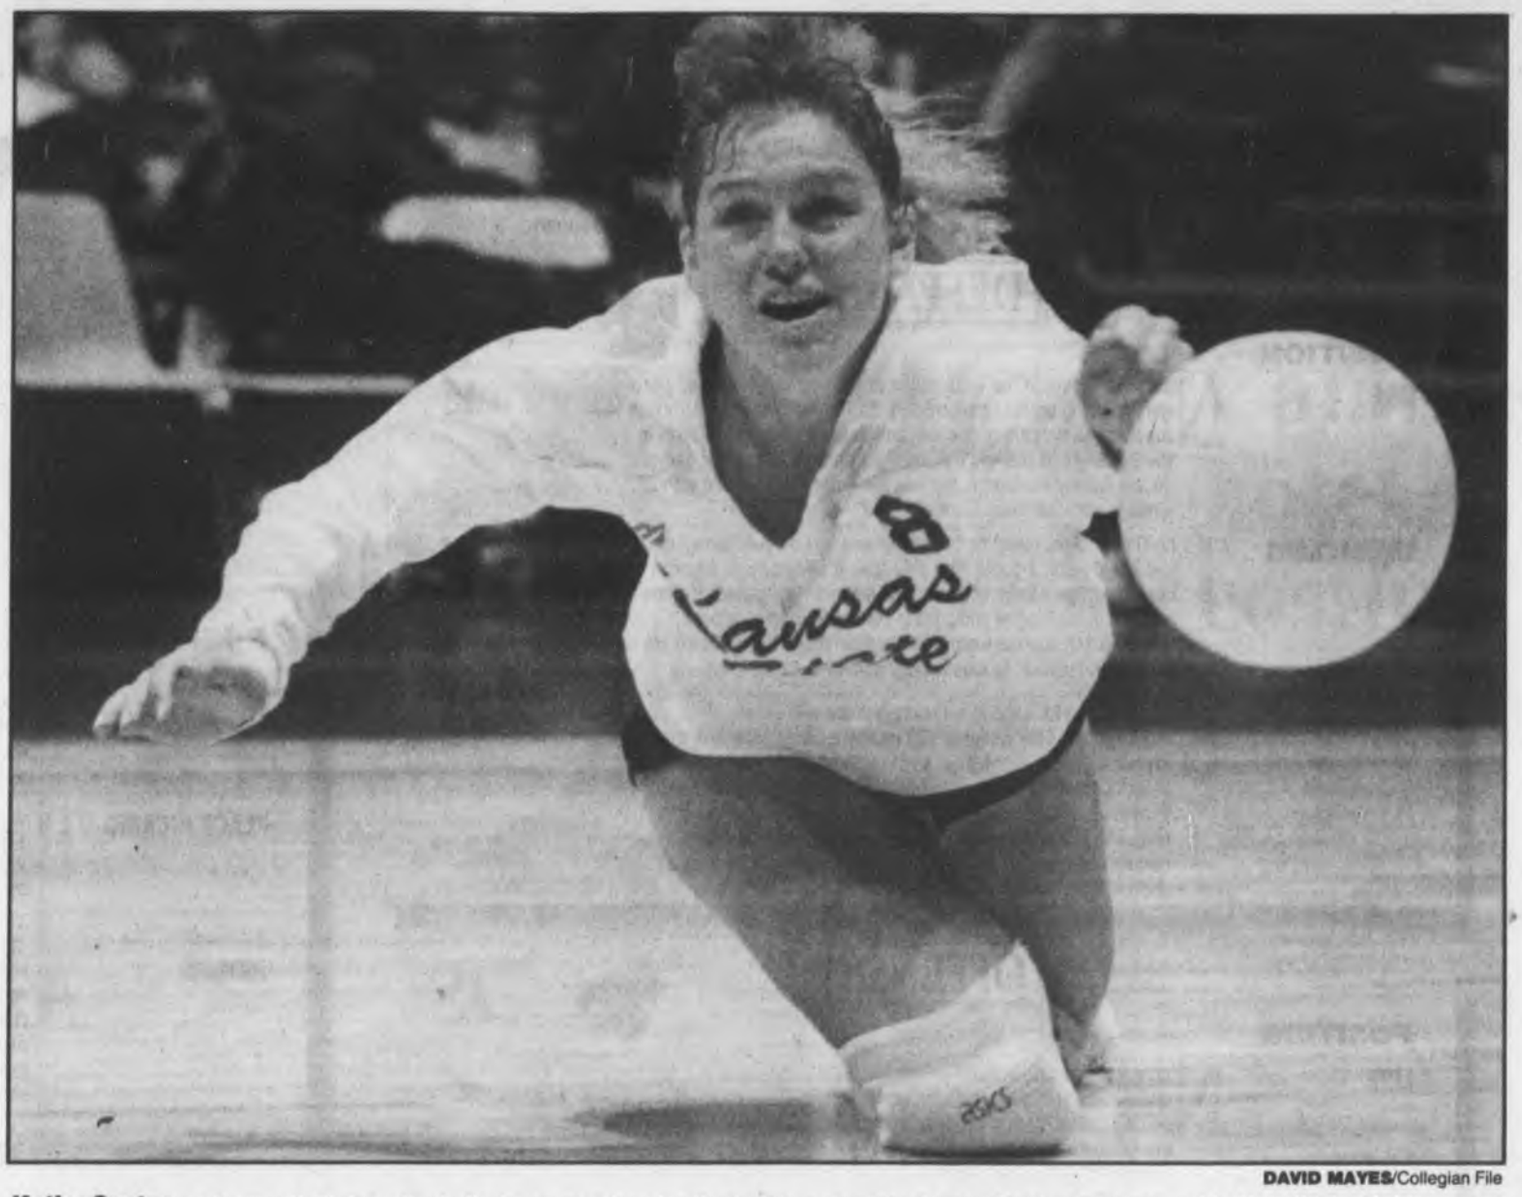
WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Kathy Saxton has found life after volleyball as busy and as challenging as before, only now it is a little more serious.

Instead of pursuing victories on the volleyball court, Saxton finds herself in pursuit of a master's degree in accounting and eventually a job.

"I feel like playing volleyball gave me good leadership skills and competitiveness, and I think employers look for that," Saxton said.



Saxton has been doing interviews with several public and private accounting firms and hopes to find a job sometime before the summer.

During her playing days at K-State, Saxton was named academic all-Big Eight four times and academic all-District #7 her senior year. She graduated in May with a cumulative grade point average of 3.5.

"I really had no choice but to study and make good grades," she said. "I spent so many hours playing volleyball that there was no time for outside distractions."

Saxton said the team had mandatory study hours at the hotels they stayed in during road trips.

"I can remember several occasions where we would ride on a bus all night and still have homework to turn in the next day," she said.

DAVID MAYES/Collegian File

Kathy Saxton, a former K-State volleyball player, reaches for the ball in a game last year. Saxton was named to the all-Big Eight second team in her senior year and to the academic all-Big Eight team four times. She played from 1989-92.

Saxton said the demanding schedule was the biggest adjustment freshmen athletes have to make when participating in varsity sports.

"At first I didn't know what to with all of this free time," she said. "Every afternoon I thought that I should be at practice, but I was home being lazy."

Saxton was anything but lazy during her career at K-State. Her senior year she set single-season records in kills and attacks with 505 and 1,232, respectively.

"Someone told me I broke some records, and I didn't have any idea that I did," she said.

Breaking those records was one her greatest moments as a player, Saxton said. However, her volleyball career wasn't always filled with glory.

Her freshman year she was a red-shirt on the team and barely received a uniform to practice in.

"That was a real shock," she said. "I went from the big high-school stud to a ball shagger in one year."

Now that she is about to enter the business world, Saxton said what she misses most about volleyball is the competitiveness and camaraderie with her former teammates.

Saxton still tries to stay active by playing games at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and helping out the team by keeping score at home matches and assisting at preseason practices.

"Between my work and class schedules, I don't have time to help much anymore, but I like to do what I can," she said.

Instead of being a stand-out in volleyball, Saxton is now standout in accounting.

She was one of four accounting students selected to represent K-State at the Arthur Anderson Tax Challenge at the University of Texas at Austin.

While at the competition, her team will be given an eight-hour test containing various situations involving taxes, and they will be judged on their performance in handling the situation.

"Not playing volleyball is definitely different, but I am looking forward to my career," she said.

Imagine an environment where a dozen people are talking at once, phones are ringing constantly, and you're carrying on three simultaneous conversations. If you're the sort of person who can thrive in such an environment, let us welcome you to the world of grain trading, where you'll spend much of your day on the telephone, talking with elevator managers, buying and selling cash grain, and arranging for the transportation of grain.

During this 6-10 month training program, you'll spend time at our Decatur headquarters, a processing plant, our traffic and transportation department, a country elevator, a river terminal, our accounting department, and on the floor of the Chicago Board of Trade. Afterwards, you'll take a trading position in either our grain division or our processing division. Advancement opportunities are excellent: many ADM managers, as well as the president of the grain division started as merchandisers.

THE MATCH-UP

A position-by-position look at K-State's game Saturday against Nebraska. The Collegian sports staff compiled the information to pick the team with the advantage at each position.

DEFENSE

|---|---|---|---|
| LINE | Nebraska is first in the conference in rushing yards allowed per game, giving up less than 120 yards. Tackle Dwayne Harris has the most sacks of any linemen with four. K-State ranks sixth in the Big Eight in rushing defense, giving up 137 yards a game. Tackle Darrell Harbert is leading the linemen in tackles with 22, while teammate Sean Dabney has 21. | | ✔ |
| LINEBACKERS | The Cornhuskers have the best defense in the league, giving up just 286.6 yards a game. The linebackers are led by all-America candidate Trev Albert, who has nine sacks in five games. K-State is fourth in the league and 23rd in the nation in total defense, giving up 315.4 yards a game. Kirby Hocutt and Laird Veatch are second and third in tackles with 62 and 44 stops, respectively. | | ✔ |
| SECONDARY | K-State is tied for second in the conference with seven interceptions. The Wildcats' 770 receiving yards allowed is the lowest in the Big Eight. Free safety Jaime Mendez leads the team in tackles with 66, while cornerback Thomas Randolph is tied for third in interceptions with two. Nebraska is tied for fourth in the league in interceptions with four. Cornerback Barron Miles was named defensive player of the week after making eight tackles and blocking a punt. | ✔ | |

OFFENSE

|---|---|---|---|
| LINE | Nebraska is second in the Big Eight and 24th in the nation in total offense and first in the nation in scoring offense, averaging 43 points a game. With the exception of the center, every starter for the Husker line weighs more than 300 pounds. K-State is averaging 29.6 points a game and ranks fourth in the league and 62nd in the nation in total offense at 366 yards a game. | | ✔ |
| WIDE RECEIVERS/ TIGHT ENDS | Mitch Running is fourth in the conference in receptions per game with 4.2. He averages 58.8 receiving yards a game, and Andre Coleman is averaging 61. Kevin Lockett is ranked 10th in receptions per game three catches a contest. No Cornhusker receivers are ranked in the top 15 of any receiving category. Their top receiver is Corey Dixon, who has 13 catches for 227 yards and one touchdown. | ✔ | |
| RUNNING BACKS | After being injured a month ago, I-back Calvin Jones returned and ran for 136 yards on 21 carries against Oklahoma State. Nebraska has had two other backs gain 100 yards in a game this season. They are Damon Benning and Lawrence Phillips. J.J. Smith is K-State's leading rusher. He averages nearly 86 yards a contest and has had back-to-back 100-yard games. | | ✔ |
| QUARTERBACKS | Chad May is third in the Big Eight and 42nd in the nation in total offense with 198 yards per game. He is also fourth in passing efficiency. Overall, K-State is third in the league in passing offense with 212 yards a game. Nebraska quarterback Tommie Frazier is sixth in total offense with 147.6 yards a game and is fifth in passing efficiency. The Cornhuskers have the fifth-best passing offense with 156.4 yards a game. | ✔ | |

SPECIAL TEAMS

| POSITION | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| PUNTING | The Cats and the Cornhuskers are tied for third in the conference and 14th in the country in net punting at 39.2 yards per game. Nebraska punter Byron Bennett is fourth in punting with a 40.9-yard average, while K-State kicker Chad Romano is averaging 40.5 yards a kick and ranks sixth in the league. | | ✔ |
| PLACE KICKING | Byron Bennett has the third-best field goal percentage in the Big Eight at 83 percent — he has missed one kick in six tries. Tate Wright is tied for the sixth-best kicking percentage in the league at 70 percent and is fourth is scoring per game at 7.6 points a game. | | ✔ |
| RETURN | Andre Coleman is first in the Big Eight in punt returns (14 yards a return), kickoff return (30.43 yards a return) and all-purpose yards (144.4 yards a game). As a team, K-State ranks first in punt returns and kickoff returns. Corey Dixon is fifth in the conference in punt returns with a 6.71 average for the Huskers. Nebraska is fifth in punt returns and sixth in kickoff returns. | ✔ | |

INTANGIBLES

| AREA | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| MOMENTUM | K-State has won six of its past seven game and looks to start the season 6-0 for the first time since 1910. K-State is also in a national poll for the first time since 1970 (ranked 24th in the CNN/USA Today Coaches Poll). The Cats need two more wins to be qualified for a bowl berth. Nebraska is 5-0 for the first time since 1990, but have struggled against UCLA and Oklahoma State this season. | ✔ | |
| COACHING | Nebraska coach Tom Osborne won his 200th game last week against Oklahoma State, becoming the third active coach to have 200 wins in a career. His record is 200-46-3. He has never lost to K-State in 21 years at Nebraska. Nebraska has been to 24-straight bowl appearances. Bill Snyder is 23-26 in his fifth year at K-State. The 23 wins equal the same number K-State had won in the previous 108 games before his arrival. | | ✔ |
| THE EDGE | Nebraska has had 31 straight winning seasons. Memorial Stadium has been sold out for 192 consecutive games and is filled with Nebraska fans dressed in red. The Cornhuskers ought to be well-rested, having last played Oct. 7, while K-State comes away from a grueling 10-9 win against Kansas last Saturday. | | ✔ |

U.S. won't make deal for release of captive G.I.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — A U.S. presidential envoy made it plain Wednesday that Washington wouldn't bargain for captured U.S. pilot Michael Durant, as his Somali captors retreated to consider the demand that he be freed at once.

"We will not buy prisoners," said Robert Oakley, the former U.S. ambassador to this Horn of Africa nation.

Oakley did not rule out a U.S. rescue mission to free Durant. But he hinted Durant's ordeal was almost over.

Somali fighters seized the chief warrant officer after his helicopter was shot down during a fierce Oct. 3 battle that killed up to 18 U.S. soldiers.

Oakley met earlier with members of the Somali National Alliance, the clan-based political group holding Durant and a Nigerian peacekeeper.

The political group is loyal to warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid, whose arrest is sought by the United Nations for killing 24 Pakistani peacekeepers in ambushes last June. Aidid's people are blamed for killing at least 121 peacekeepers.

The Somali National Alliance met to discuss Oakley's request for Durant's freedom and was expected to make a statement shortly, Alliance sources said.

The Alliance was reported split over freeing Durant and the Nigerian or insisting the United Nations first free 32 Somali prisoners, including four key Aidid aides.

Oakley, who arrived Sunday in quest of a peace settlement in Somalia, insisted Wednesday that Durant be freed without conditions. He said there would be no bargaining or exchange of prisoners to secure the release of Durant or the Nigerian private captured earlier.

But he said, "I believe that the release of both prisoners would indeed be a very positive sign ... There are some optimistic indications out there." He would not elaborate.

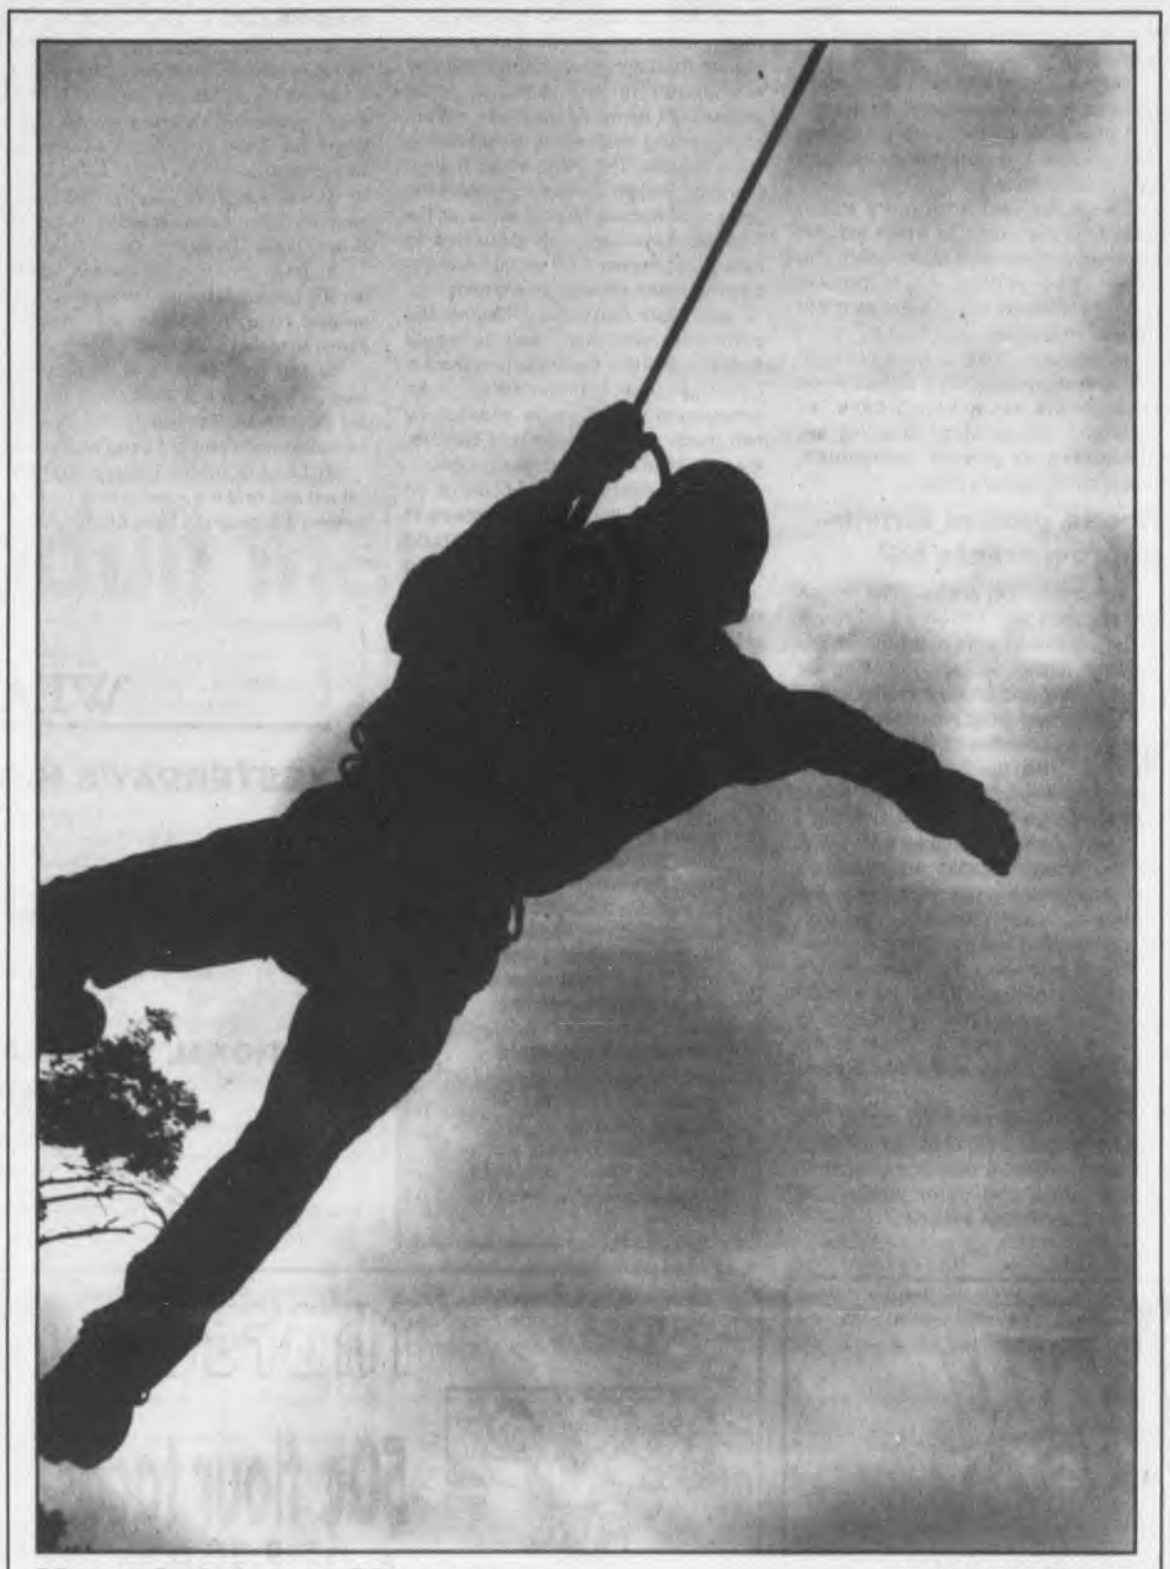
The United States has recently sounded a more conciliatory tone toward Aidid, apparently in hopes of reaching a political settlement here.

A guerrilla war with Aidid's forces has kept about half the U.N. force bottled up in southern Mogadishu.

The rest of Somalia is generally quiet and is recovering from the civil war and famine that killed an estimated 350,000 Somalis last year.

As ambassador, Oakley left in 1991 when the overthrow of dictator Mohamed Siad Barre deteriorated into clan warfare and anarchy. Mass starvation resulted, prompting creation of a multinational peacekeeping operation, now under the United Nations, to deliver food to those starving and restore order.

U.N. efforts to capture Aidid, with the resultant civilian and troop casualties, set off a backlash in the United States and elsewhere against the mission.



President Clinton worked to reassure rebellious lawmakers Wednesday about U.S. policy in Somalia, stressing the humanitarian motives. He has said U.S. forces will leave here by March 31. Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., his chief Senate critic on the issue, proposed Feb. 1 as a compromise Wednesday.

Kofi Annan, U.N. undersecretary-general for peacekeeping, cautioned in Mogadishu on Wednesday that the planned U.S. troop withdrawal could wreck the U.N. mission and send the wrong message to warring parties in other conflicts.

U.N. officials fear other members of the 33-nation coalition also will head for the door once the Americans pull out.

Italy indicated on Wednesday it would withdraw its 2,600 soldiers early next year.

"If the United States leaves, I don't see how we can stay," Italian Defense Minister Fabrio Fabbri said in an interview with the weekly magazine Oggi.

Campus hotel a costly addition

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

In the next 10 years K-State will have an on-campus hotel, parking garage and an expanded K-State Union — if students are willing to pay for it.

A new hotel is needed to accommodate groups who want to have conventions and conferences at K-State, Ed Skoog, student body president, said.

"The convention and visitors bureau concluded we were about 250 rooms below where we should be for a city our size," Skoog said. "Right now if the Alumni Association wants to hold a major event, they have to plan it four years in advance."

A good location for the hotel and garage is within the facade of Memorial Stadium, Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said.

"The ideal thing would be to put upscale hotel rooms and a parking garage close to the Union," Rawson said. "We're going to have to accommodate parking needs."

Hotel and garage construction and expansion of the Union should complement one another, Jack Sills, director of the Union, said.

"If this does all come about, there will be a link between the Union and whatever facilities develop for the hotel," Sills said. "If we have a facility that can better hold conferences, we have a facility that can better serve students and the community."

In order to accomplish that goal, Rawson said the Union staff and the students need to determine if meeting space is being used effectively and if there is a need for expansion.

Regents consider funding

Washburn wants increase for library, salaries

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The Kansas Board of Regents today will consider Washburn University's request for an 11.6-percent or $736,000 increase in state general funding.

Although Washburn is not governed by the regents, requests for state funding for the university have been reviewed by the board since 1991.

The increase in funding includes funds for faculty salaries, library expansion, operating budget and expansion of a program with the Kaw Area Technical School.

With the exception of the Kaw program, all the other appropriations were allowed at the regents schools.

"We are not asking to be treated differently than the other regents' schools. We want to be treated the same," David Monical, Washburn director of government relations, said. "You don't see the budgets of the regents schools looked at in this way."

According to a press release issued by the regents last week, during the past 10 years state funding for regents schools has increased by 46 percent, and state funding for Washburn has increased by 76 percent.

Monical said the percentage of funding for Washburn was high because the school has historically received smaller dollar figures from the state in relation to what regents schools receive.

"Washburn only receives $6 million from the state — that is less than the smallest regents school," Monical said.

Washburn is funded mostly by a 19-mill local tax levy in Topeka, and by tuition, unrestricted endowments and a state operating grant.

"We have no choice but to look for more state funding," Monical said. "We are at our limits."

Caps on the mill levy prevent Washburn from obtaining more money locally.

Monical said Washburn is concerned tuition increases at the school will result in a decrease in enrollment.

Washburn's tuition is already significantly higher than the other regents schools — $90 per credit hour.

"Half of our students are employed full or part time," Monical said. "They are not bank presidents. They are secretaries."

Despite these fears, Washburn is considering raising tuition 3 percent next year, Monical said.

The board developed two other funding options for Washburn in response to criticism that their initial request was too high, Ray Hauke, regents financial adviser, said.

A 9.1-percent increase was suggested by applying some of the regents' budgeting rules to Washburn's request.

The third model was based roughly on the percentage increase at other regents schools of the same size, (Pittsburg, Fort

Jurassic school a prospect for state control

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

Washburn is the last municipal university in the country, a dinosaur of sorts.

What should be done with this state-fed dinosaur has been the object of debate for three decades. With diminishing state funds available for higher education on one hand and 6,000 students on the other, the answer has become progressively more difficult to find.

"Washburn is a dinosaur left over from the '50s. All the other municipals have become state universities," David Monical, director of Washburn governmental relations, said.

Washburn was established in 1865 as a parochial school. In 1941 it became a municipal university. It started to receive state funding in 1961.

"We are already publicly funded — it is just a matter of which public is supporting us," Monical said.

"We realized that at some point Washburn University would be too much of a burden on the city of Topeka and we would have to look elsewhere for funding," Monical said.

About eight years ago, Washburn began to look seriously at joining the regents system, Monical said.

"We decided we would rather work toward that goal while we were still strong, rather than wait until we started having money problems," he said.

The student governing body passed a resolution stating they supported Washburn becoming a regents school, Pat Birkbeck, Washburn student body president, said.

"We are concerned with students' ability to pay," he said. "We would hope that admission into the regents system would result in our tuition not increasing as much."

Monical said there is nothing in an individual budget that would constitute Washburn entering the regents system, but at some point Washburn may reach a point when more state funds would constitute more state control.

Program duplication is one of the issues involved in bringing a new school into the regents

Dime-store chain turns into specialty

NEW YORK (AP) — Woolworth Corp. is slashing 13,000 jobs and closing or redesigning 970 stores, a bold move that will end a century-old dime-store tradition in many North American communities.

The plan announced Wednesday accelerates Woolworth's transformation from a homespun variety-store chain into an urban-centered specialty retailer.

Woolworth Chairman William Lavin blamed the closings on unfavorable economic conditions, increased competition and less consumer spending. The restructuring marks the second time in as many years that Woolworth closed hundreds of unprofitable stores.

Woolworth said it will focus on its profitable Foot Locker stores and expand its World Foot Locker athletic chain, RX Place deep-discount drug stores and the Northern Reflections women's apparel stores.

Some 250 of the 970 targeted stores will be reconfigured into these and other more profitable formats. The rest will be closed. In Canada, about 100 Woolworth stores will be converted to the popular The Bargain Shop concept introduced in 1991.

About 10,000 jobs in the United States will be eliminated and 3,000 in Canada — about 9 percent of Woolworth's total work force.

Indian women injured, die in train accident

BOMBAY, India (AP) — Dozens of women jumped from a burning commuter train into the path of another train bearing down on an adjoining track Wednesday. At least 49 passengers were crushed to death, news agencies said.

Mutilated bodies, empty lunch boxes, wrist watches, shoes and hand bags were strewn on the blood-smeared tracks outside Bombay, Press Trust of India news agency reported.

Many women sat on the ground, wailing and waiting for help, Press Trust said, quoting witnesses. Most of the passengers were returning home from work.

About 70 women were injured, Bombay police representative Avinash Jadhav, said.The incident occurred on a Ladies Special train, one of a number of women-only trains created recently to make commuting safer and easier.

Office involved in AIDS scandal dissolved

BONN, Germany (AP) — The health minister on Wednesday dissolved a federal office that was accused of covering up 373 cases of people contracting the AIDS virus, apparently through tainted blood.

The minister, Horst Seehofer, is fighting for his political life amid one of Germany's worst health scandals. In France, a similar scandal put a top official behind bars and helped bring down the government.

Last week Seehofer fired two senior officials, but no criminal investigations have been opened.

Seehofer said the abolishment of the Federal Health Office would cut red tape and clarify official responsibilities. His decision must be approved by Parliament.

Of the 373 cases, all but 13 were reported to the Health Office by doctors and blood companies before October 1985, when the government began testing blood supplies.

Seehofer said an inquiry would determine the extent to which officials knowingly prevented news about the cases from getting out to protect companies whose blood supplies might have been recalled.

In France, officials were charged with knowingly distributing tainted blood through the state blood bank. In Germany, whose blood supplies are distributed by private companies, responsibility is more diffuse.

House passes airline-improvements bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House on Wednesday endorsed a $29.3 billion, three-year investment in the nation's airway system, including air traffic control and airport improvements.

The bill had broad bipartisan support and was passed 384-42 and sent to the Senate. The measure authorizes spending over the next three fiscal years, a period that began on Oct. 1.

The legislation earmarks $7.9 billion for the Federal Aviation Administration to continue the modernization of the national air traffic control, communication and navigation systems.

It also authorizes the release of $6.5 billion over three years from the aviation trust fund to help pay for projects to expand airport capacity, meet safety and security needs and promote noise abatement.

In completing action on the bill, the House rejected a bid to delete language granting collective bargaining rights to fire fighters and other workers at National and Dulles airports.

Proposed bills to limit mandated programs

TOPEKA (AP) — A legislative committee Wednesday tentatively endorsed two bills designed to blunt the effect state laws have on city and county coffers.

Local officials have complained the Kansas Legislature mandates programs to local units of government, without providing money for them. Some officials have called for a constitutional amendment to prohibit such mandates without state funding.

The Senate Committee on Local Government is considering two bills that lawmakers hope would resolve the problem. One would exempt such mandates from the property-tax lid, which restricts cities and counties from raising their mill levies. It also would require the Legislature to find that any law requiring the use of local government personnel or funds without state funding must serve a compelling state interest. The other would require the State Budget Division to contact the League of Kansas Municipalities or the Kansas Association of Counties to determine whether a bill would have any financial affect on local government.

Sen. Mark Parkinson, R-Olathe, the committee chairman, said he would prefer to address the problem without a constitutional amendment. An amendment would require adoption by two-thirds of the House and Senate, then a vote of approval by the people.

The committee will hold hearings on both bills when the Legislature meets in January, Parkinson said, but he predicted the measure would be taken up by the Senate. Chris McKenzie, director of the league, told the committee he understood its reluctance to consider a constitutional amendment.

Comic books (below) have gone from grocery store racks to specialty stores and range in price from $1.50 to more than six dollars. # Comics feature adult themes

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

Comics are not just kid stuff anymore.

The Master Gamer at 1205 Moro in Aggieville sells different comics to an older audience, not just the typical 10-year-old kid stereotype.

"I would easily say that 50 to 60 percent of my customers are college students, with Fort Riley people and high-school students coming in second and third," Darren Guyton, manager of the Master Gamer, said.

A lot of the business at Fly By Night Comics in Junction City comes from Fort Riley soldiers.

"Roughly 80 percent of our customers come from the post," said Mike McAdams, manager of Fly By Night Comics. "The rest come from Manhattan or the high school."

Guyton, a comic reader himself, said there isn't one type or class of people who come in to buy comics, but customers share some traits.

"Usually, they all tend to be above average in intelligence and communication skills and know what they want in a comic book," Guyton said.

Sandra Hall, owner of Office World and Bookstore, said comic customers that come into Office World are exclusively male and are either high-school or college-aged.

Part of the stereotyped storyline and image comes from the 1940s, when there was a line of very graphic horror comics from a publisher called E.C.

"Congress threatened to enforce controls on the comic industry," Guyton said. "Instead, the comic-book publishers formed a code for the industry to follow, causing the stereotyped image of the hero in long-johns and the little kid reader."

Much of the recent growth in the comic industry is coming from a push to eliminate repeating story lines, break away from the comics code and get a more mature audience through more realistic art and plot lines.

"About 1987, Green Arrow from DC was the first comic to bypass the code and start dealing with real issues like gangs and drugs," Guyton said. "They bypassed the code by printing a disclaimer on the cover to the indicate mature themes."

Not sure what the attraction to comics is, Hall said she thinks a lot of it has to do with what else comic fans read.

"Comics are only a small part of the business, and we haven't sold them for very long, so I'm not exactly sure what the draw is," she said.

"I think that a lot of the comic readers also read science fiction and fantasy books."

Williams said it is definitely becoming more popular in the industry to cater to an adult audience, with Marvel's Frontier line, DC's Vertigo line and independent titles, like Cerebrus.

"There has been a movement in comics to move to a more mature audience," Thad Williams, junior in art and part-time Master Gamer employee, said.

"They have mature themes, dealing with violence and real issues, and are more like mysteries and mythologies and not just plain heroes.

"I like the comics with these themes because they contain stuff that makes you think."

Hall said she has noticed a lot of the new comics have darker story lines and appear to be more graphic.

"They appear to be a lot like a Stephen King novel," she said.

Guyton said the alternative titles and newer comics are more story-oriented and not just superheroes in tights repeatedly beating each other up.

"I'm happy to see that some alternative titles aimed at older readers are taking hold," he said.

Graphic designs and new art processes are some changes made to attract a more selective audience.

"Traditional comic art has been very blocky and unrealistic," Guyton said.

"Now, they use watercolor, painted frames, computer images and many other techniques to make the comics more attractive to an older audience."

McAdams said art is the main attraction for many comic readers.

"I have seen people drop main titles because new artists are used and they no longer like the art," he said.

As an art student, 23-year-old Williams said if the art is good he would read the comic and find a good story."

Chris Ellsworth, senior in park and resource management, said a comic has to have good art and a good story line.

"If it is minus one or the other, it is a lost cause," he said.

Some people buy comics as a hobby, a lot like buying and trading sports cards, but Guyton said not everyone buys them as an investment.

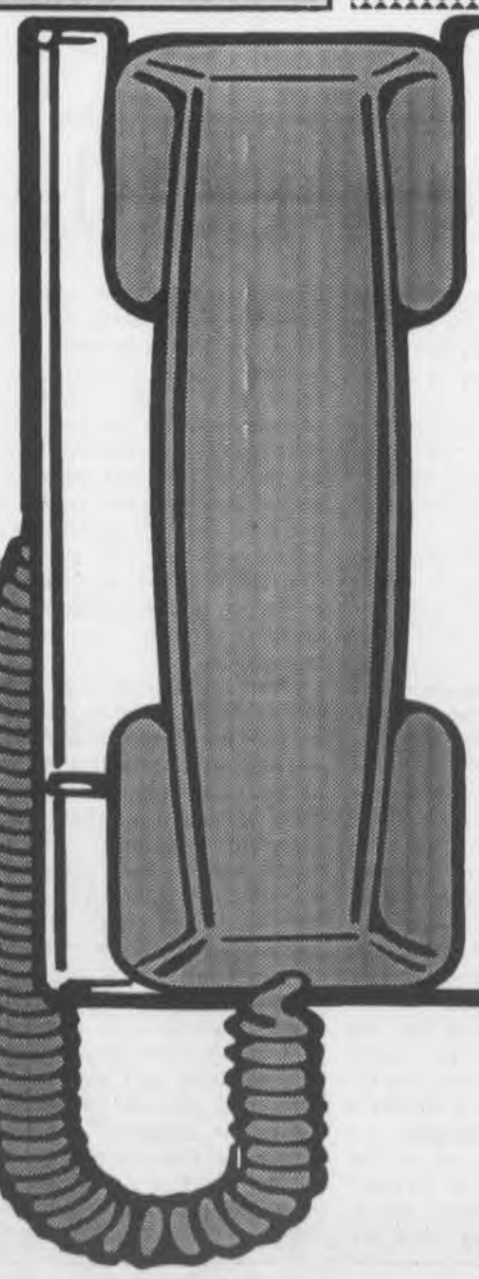
"Some older readers come back to comics they remember as a kid," Guyton said.

"They just look to collect issues they can remember as being favorites, or they may start reading the new series to see what it is like."

For those who might like to collect comics seriously as an investment, Guyton said it isn't necessarily a safe way to spend money. A good example is the death of Robin in Detective Comics from DC.

Guyton said the issue in which Robin was killed jumped to $20-30 before it was released. It peaked at $50, but then it dropped to $10-12 and has been there ever since.

"They are a lot like junk bonds," he said. "If you're not close to the industry, you could lose your shirt.



"They are not something you could probably send your kids to school on."

Department of Justice releases report full of typical ineptitude

Once again, the government's predilection for exonerating itself has taken another pathetic step.

The U.S. Justice Department's report on the Branch Davidian fiasco and subsequent destruction of the compound hems and haws and points few fingers. The report's conclusion is "the fire appears to be an act of mass suicide or an act of mass murder or a combination of the two."

The actions and intentions of Attorney General Janet Reno and top officials of the FBI have gone from "We take full responsibility" to "No one is responsible" — an all too typical bureaucratic response.

More credibility may have been possible had the place not been bulldozed immediately after the fire, most likely destroying valuable evidence that might have made for more substantive conclusions. The report, despite this, never considers the possibility the attacking forces may have started the fire in the compound, even inadvertently.

Or starting the operation on the day when the wind was blowing 40 mph.

Or anytime you pump that much organic tear gas into a confined area, even if it's non-flammable, you are making quite a bomb.

Yes, objectivity is made apparently by throwing in criticisms about lack of communications or using poor tactics. The report even said the size of the FBI "Hostage Rescue Team" should be doubled in the face of how bad it bungled the operation.

However, the report just doesn't cut it. We hope Congress will begin its own investigation into what really happened. And the media has a responsibility to also find the facts that have been conveniently buried among the reports rubbish.

Then we can find who was really responsible for this terrible tragedy.

Plus/minus rewards the hard workers

Because I seem to be picking on the faculty so much lately, I thought I would make a change in direction.

Someone recently brought to my attention the plus/minus grading policy Faculty Senate passed last spring, and how that person was distributing a petition in opposition.

That same person told me there was going to be a nifty ol' meeting to discuss said policy with faculty senators at 4 p.m. Oct. 26 in Throckmorton 313.

I encourage your attendance at that meeting, but think before you sign the petition.

The policy will go into effect in Fall 1994 and is said to be mandatory. But if a professor doesn't want to issue a plus or minus that's up to the professor, just as it up to the same instructor to set an A at 92, 90 or 87 percent.

The plus/minus policy will allow professors to give you a plus if you get a high B, for example, and a minus if you get a low B.

It also allows professors to give you an A- if you earned a high, high, B and a B+ if you earned a low, low A, which under the current policy, you would simply earn a B.

Maybe I'm just a "that glass of water is half-full" kind of guy when it comes to this policy, but the plus/minus policy seems inherently good to me.

My reasoning is this: I have never had a professor in my expansive and expensive six-year college career that wasn't willing to give me the benefit of the doubt.

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

And I think professors in the future will do the same for you. Truthfully, and I believe Faculty Senate admits this, the effects of this policy will be negligible. A few students will benefit, most students won't notice a difference, a few students will be hurt.

Those who will benefit are those who traditionally are right there in the middle who could have done better given a little more incentive, which this new policy provides.

Those who will be hurt include the traditional creme de la creme of scholars at K-State. They will be hurt because the new policy will bump some of those As achieved by those folks to A minuses. Those folks will therefore earn 3.7 grade points for what was previously 4.0 work.

To get that 4.0, students will have to work harder.

Now, I'm no rocket scientist ( as the speech department will testify), but it seems to me that a 4.0 GPA that a student had to work harder for would be worth more on a resumé or transcript than a 4.0 that a student didn't have to work so hard for.

Everybody else, well, they'll just go on being everybody else.

Most professors, because they understand K-State can sometimes be an unfriendly place, are teddy bears. I suspect most instructors will use the new policy to the students' advantage.

Grades, like salaries and jobs and promotions and two-car garages and picket fences, are things that should be earned and not given freely.

One of the arguments against the policy stated on the petition is that students were not aware enough of the plus/minus grading system before Faculty Senate went on and passed that motherscratcher.

Well, folks. You're aware now.

But don't take my word for it. Please.

Instead, take a minute and think about it. If you care enough to make a difference, attend the meeting on Oct. 26. If you like the policy, let it be known. Conversely, if you hate it, fight it.

If you're content, just keep on keeping on.

United States needed to be the keeper of the peace

Editor,

I am writing in response to a very good column by Erin Mansur-Smith (Oct. 12 Collegian).

First, as a professional officer and soldier, I would much rather sit and fire artillery at Fort Riley knowing my wife and child are close by.

The problem here is that the military does not decide where or when to deploy forces, but rather how once they are committed.

The United States is an extremely pluralistic society that provides much international awareness and freedom of speech to its citizens or current inhabitants.

This translates to pressures from society for intervention into Somalia by Somali Americans such as the model Iman.

Protest marches in New York and Washington, D.C., by Haitian Americans, resulting in a presidential campaign promise, now called upon to be fulfilled.

Student protests by Muslim students and its support community outside the K-State Union with petitions for U.S. intervention into Bosnia.

With the collapse of the Soviet Union, the United States is left as the only true super power, and because of our diversity, our country is the world.

The only way to change that is to promote some idea of "true American," close our borders and send all those not encompassing that idea home.

Secondly, I was a college student at the University of Tennessee the last time we had a Democratic president, who by the way is a fellow Georgian.

The issues then were the Iranian hostage crisis, the failed rescue attempt and the Soviet war in Afghanistan.

The new world order has brought us a more volatile world full of two-bit dictators. It is sad to admit, but we are the big boy on the block, and we will be challenged.

It is up to the new administration to pass this key, and yes, lethal test.

It is not a matter of looking better to allies, but keeping terror outside so we can better handle our domestic issues.

Small-scale warlords know we our downsizing our military, dealing with tough domestic issues, and Americans hate seeing their dead.

It is a tough new world order and sacrifices, some human, will be made.

Understand that most soldiers love pizza, family and college football as opposed to killing or being killed.

But we have taken an oath, and we will uphold that covenant to the Constitution, the President and the officers appointed above us.

There's a little soap in all of us

I have a confession to make that I know will shock you, but first I would like to apologize to all of you — family, friends, sexually-confused water buffalo — all of you who have long considered me an icon of masculinity. Forgive me for what I am about to say, but, well ... I am a frequent viewer of TV soap operas.

Actually, I watch only one soap opera, whose name I won't mention here, only to say it rhymes with "The Young And The Ridiculous."

Before you shred my picture in small pieces, hear me out. I used to think, like many of you skeptics, that TV soaps were only for bored housewives, people with severe head injuries who have permanently lapsed into a vegetative state or shut-ins living in state mental institutions. Then I came upon the realization that soap operas are not fictional — they are real. Yes, it is true. These are real people with real problems.

And for the benefit of you and me, they are sharing these problems on national television for only a small fee ... and with only a few commercial interruptions.

I became convinced of the realism of soap operas through watching TV commercials, which, as you probably already know, are also real. For instance, to convince myself of this, I would ask myself (in a convincing manner): "Why would people go on national television and embarrass themselves and a hundred million constipated and pregnant women by talking about a product to relieve hemorrhoids unless they suffered from hemorrhoids and really needed the product?" WARNING: This example does not apply to columnists who ask this question in college newspapers.

Well, the answer is as obvious and as real as the cross-your-heart-tampon-feminine-itch-deordorant-nasal-spray-dogfood-toilet bowl-cleaner-soap-opera-commercial in front of your face. These are not incredibly popular, over-paid, B-movie actors – these are genuine, incredibly popular, over-paid, B-movie actors with genuine, incredibly popular, everyday, real-life problems.

And it is a truly American phenomenon.

I can hear you questioning that last statement so I must ask you: "Are there any soap operas in, say, China for instance?" Ah ha! Of course not! Don't be ridiculous.

No, no. For a realistic soap opera you need names like Cricket and Ridge ... and hair. Lots of hair.

And the Chinese could not possibly do all of the highly technical medical stuff we do in our soap operas. I mean really, who in this country is going to get excited or upset over being stuck with hundreds of needles in insignificant places like your tongue and eyeballs? Our soap opera medical scenes have the appearance of being deadly serious operations because they are in fact real medical emergencies. This is just one example of the extent to which our medical care has degenerated in this country.

BRAD SEABOURN

Yet, seriously folks, this is real-life drama at its best. Put yourself in the place of one of the soap stars: Wouldn't you be emotionally distraught — no, down-right hysterical, about a pending medical operation if you knew a completely unskilled, cross-dressing, five-times-divorced, manic-depressive soap-opera doctor who can barely read cue cards was going to perform real surgery on you?

Of course you would.

And that is what makes the soaps so entertaining. We can honestly relate events in soap operas to things that have happened in our own lives.

Like, I am sure this has happened to you.

You found out the man you were about to marry was actually your brother, or the baby you just had was not really yours but the adopted child of a deranged, psychopathic, homicidal, hospital-laboratory technician who is madly in love with your husband, or you were kidnapped by Moonies as a teenager only to be kidnapped again by your best friend so you could be de-programmed, which caused you to realize your life-long ambition was to be a nightclub stripper, or ...

On second thought, don't answer that.

If there is one thing I can't stand it's having to listen to other people's ridiculous, outrageous problems. I've got enough of my own.

CAMPUS

Volunteers aid communities through summer projects

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

Community service teams offer K-State students the opportunity to apply their skills toward helping Kansas communities to improve and progress.

The 1993 Community Assistance Teams, a branch of the K-State Community Service Program, work in Kansas communities for eight weeks during the summer on projects developed by community leaders.

Last year's teams were composed of four to five students each and were assisted by a faculty adviser, said Mark Ray, student coordinator of the summer teams and senior in speech, history and pre-law.

"The project gave me chance to apply what I'd been studying, and I learned a lot about working with people." Ray said.

The program emphasizes volunteerism and service ethics Tom Burns, K-State Almuni said. These are values many of the team members carry with them into the future.

"The experience broadened my awareness and interest in non-profit agencies," Burns, who is a past student coordinator, said.

Burns is working in the non-profit field as a program director for the Austin, Texas service agency, Austin Groups for the Elderly.

"I never would have dreamed of working in the non-profit field had it not been for my experience here," he said.

The 1993 program included a team working on a project Kansas communities of White Cloud, Meade County, Topeka, Belleville and Wakeeny.

The Meade county team worked on revitalizing the downtown areas of Fowler, Meade and Plains, said Kerri Keithley, member of the Meade county team and senior in geography and pre-planning.

"We proposed a plan to help draw people into the communities and to improve their economic state." Keithley said. "We researched the communities wants and needs. We then drew up a proposal, and worked to get people pumped up, we acted as a catalyst.

The Belleville project focused on a proposal to revitalize the downtown area and to draw in more tourism said Carla Pizzarella, senior in geography and pre-planning.

"The proposal was composed of two parts: improving the downtown area by making it moré estetically pleasing, and bringing in outside revenue." she said.

The team was sometimes plagued by opposition. Ray said.They had to pull together, and learn to deal with the community members.

"During the Belleville project there were times we thought the project had no chance," Ray said. "We attended City Council meetings and worked with an advisory council. At the final meeting, everyone saw the drawings and the cost, and no one objected. Their attitude had changed completely."

A project in White Cloud focused on setting up a foundation for a National Historic Register District register said Laura Kroencke gaduate student in architecture.The services also included work on a project to draw people to a hilltop where one can see four states.

"We did the preliminary paperwork to establish a Historic District, and we also designed a tower for the hill. Now the community must raise the money for the tower and complete the nomination process for the Historic District," she said.

The members of each team were challenged to develop a proposal that would both benefit the community and receive acceptance from community members Ray said. The projects helped the team members to develop resourcefulness, leadership skills, and problem solving.

"The program threw us in a community, on our own. We had to learn to use our own resources and independent problem-solving skills." he said.

Pizzarella said the experience incited determination to pull through the frustrating endeavors.

"It helped me to realize that to get to the positive sometimes you have to pull through the negative." she said.

In addition, some of the female team members had to face gender-related issues and learned how to deal with prejudice Pizzarella said.

"This was a good experience in forcing me to know what the real world is like in terms of being a female." she said. "Being female added limitations. I realized that to feel satisfied, I had to act in a manner that would please me. It hardened me a little bit."

The teams also learned to assemble their talents, and to recognize their own personal strengths and weaknesses said Nellie Modaress, Belleville team member and graduate student in mass communications.

"It enlightened us on our own strengths and weaknesses." she said. "We learned to pool out assets and pull together as a team."

Keithley said part of learning to be tough was knowing she couldn't please everyone.

"In a small town, they fear change — it is their park, their things, they don't want it better, they want it theirs." she said

Part of generating enthusiasm and acceptance, Keithley said, was learning to be more self-confidant.

"I gained total confidence. You had to stick your neck out." she said. "I'm more self-reliant and better at dealing with people."

The members of the teams were required to commit to one year, which included a spring semester preparation class, and a fall reflection class. In addition, each member received a $1500 stipend along with five credit hours and a $400 scholarship.

1994 TEAMS

■ Summer team projects for 1994 will take place in Dodge City, Barnard, Hays, Osage City and Caldwell. Those interested must apply by Nov. 1. Contact Mark Ray in the Community Service Program office at 51 College Court or call 532-5701 for more information.

Union changes need input from students

"The students and Union staff will have to get together and set out a plan for the Union that will bring it up to the 1990s," Rawson said. "The students need to have a big hand in deciding what to do for the Union."

In addition to an expansion, Sills said the Union needs renovations.

"This building was opened in 1956, so some parts of it are pretty dated, although it has been well maintained," Sills said. "Renovation is as important as expansion because of the age of the building."

Sills said even without renovations, the Union is in relatively good shape.

"We offer probably what most college Unions offer," Sills said. "I'd say we're right in the ballpark of mainstream businesses of college Unions."

Skoog said mainstream isn't good enough.

"Mainstream works, but things from K-State ought to be outstanding," Skoog said. "We used to be progressive, and we could be again."

Rawson said talk about a new hotel, garage and an expanded Union is useless unless students are willing to pay for it.

"There aren't any state dollars involved," Rawson said. "We will probably have to sell revenue bonds to pay for it."

Volleyball team falters, loses to Shockers 3-1

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State volleyball team dropped its match against Wichita State 3-1 last night in Ahearn Field House. K-State's record is now 7-11.

After winning the opening game 15-7, the Wildcats went on to lose the next three games 15-7, 15-11, and 15-10. Coach Patti Hagemeyer said the Wildcats weren't tough enough to win against the Shockers.

"In the first game, we played how we were supposed to play," Hagemeyer said. "Wichita State didn't do anything different from the first game. It was all us, simply just us. We were not able to sustain anything consistently in any part of the game.

"We weren't tough at all tonight."

In the second game, the Shockers jumped out to a 12-0 lead by using a strong attack from middle-blocker Kristin Carr. Carr finished the match with 22 kills to lead Wichita State. Hagemeyer said she lived up to her expectations.

"I have to give her some credit," Hagemeyer said. "She played like I thought she would tonight. She is tough in the middle."

Hagemeyer said even with the loss to the Shockers, she will continue to stay with her new line-up.

That new line-up, installed in the third game against Drake, consists of two freshmen and four sophomores.

"I'm going to stick with the combination," Hagemeyer said. "I think that this line-up plays to win and not to mess up. We will work on training for toughness in this line-up because the desire to win is there."

The line-up has freshmen Yolanda Young and Kate DeClerk starting with sophomores Jill Dugan, Chi Dau, Suzanne Hagge and Heather Zoerner.

Young, an outside-hitter, continued to play well against the Shockers. Young finished the match with 19 kills, and 11 digs.

"Yolanda is getting better and better," Hagemeyer said. "She has the ability to elevate her play. Tonight, we asked to get the ball back after a timeout, and she did."

Hagemeyer said she anticipated the team to bounce back and play well after last weekend's loss to Drake in the Drake Tournament.

"I thought that we would play harder tonight," Hagemeyer said. "I anticipated us to have more incentive to win, but we still didn't play tough."

On the positive side, Hagemeyer said middle-blockers Dugan and DeClerk have improved their blocking stills.

"Jill and Kate seem to have improved their skills in the middle," Hagemeyer said. "I guess you could say that was something positive about the match."

"We were not able to sustain anything consistenly in any part of the game."
PATTI HAGEMEYER
VOLLEYBALL COACH

Dugan also had 18 kills for the match, and setter Chi Dau had 12 digs to lead the Cats. Dau also recorded 55 assists to add to her fourth-place ranking on the all-time K-State assist list. Sophomore Suzanne Hagge also chipped in with three kills and seven digs.

The Cats will return to Big Eight Conference play on Saturday, when they travel to Norman, Okla., to play the Oklahoma Sooners. The Sooners defeated the fifth-ranked Nebraska Cornhuskers 3-1, and they are ranked seventh in the region, Hagemeyer said.

"We have our work cut out for us against Oklahoma," Hagemeyer said. "They have some players that are just as big as the Cornhuskers, and they are talented in the middle.

"We will have to be tough if want to compete with them on Saturday."

SPORTS DIGEST

▶GOLFERS PLACE 4TH IN WICHITA

The K-State women's golf team finished fourth out of 12 teams Tuesday at the Shocker Fall Classic at Terradyne Country Club in Wichita.

K-State's top four competitors tallied scores of 347, 333 and 331 for a three-day total of 1,011.

Texas Tech won the tournament and set two tournament records in the process. The team compiled a total of 941 strokes, breaking the previous record of 942 strokes set by the University of Kansas in 1988.

Texas Tech set a second tournament record on the third day with a score of 305. Kansas had the single-day record of 308 in 1988. The tournament was won by Stacey Kolb of Texas Tech, recording rounds of 77, 75 and 74 for a total of 226.

K-State's top performer was third-place finisher Jacque Wright. Her stroke totals of 76, 77 and 80 totaled 233 for the tournament. Wright is averaging rounds of 79 and is on pace to have the best single season in K-State history.

Capturing 21st place was senior SarahAyn Morehead with scores of 93, 80 and 83 to total 256. Denise Pottle secured a 22nd-place finish with rounds of 89, 88 and 80 to total 257. Finishing in the 37th slot out of 61 competitors was Donita Gleason, who tallied an 89, 88 and 88 to finish with 265. Dallas Cox placed 48th with 95, 95 and 90 for a total of 280 to complete the tournament.

FOOTBALL

Ranking causes mixed feelings

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

The 1993 K-State football season has been filled with first-time accomplishments and events that haven't happened in numerous seasons.

The list grows larger with each passing Saturday.

The latest was a national ranking Sunday, after K-State toppled Kansas 10-9 to move to 5-0. The Wildcats jumped in at No. 24 in the USA Today-Coaches Poll, marking the Cats' first ranking since 1970.

The Associated Press Poll moved the Cats to No. 26 with 35 votes.

Despite the recent ranking, wide receiver Andre Coleman said the team still isn't getting its rightful respect. The Cats are the only team that is unbeaten and not ranked in the AP top 25.

"We still don't have the respect that we think we deserve," Coleman said. "We're 5-0, and one poll didn't even have us ranked in the top 25.

"One thing that I like is that the guys aren't too excited about being ranked 24th. I haven't even heard anyone talk about it since it came out. It's not the point of going up, it's just a respect thing. The only way to get that respect is to probably beat a team like Nebraska. We use that as motivation."

K-State travels to Lincoln, Neb., Saturday to face the No. 6 Cornhuskers, then entertains No. 20 Colorado and No. 9 Oklahoma.

But Coleman said that he understands why some people may still be hesitant to respond to the Cat's perfect record.

"We've been here before," he said. "We've come to this road, and we've stumbled."

In 1991, K-State jumped to a 4-1 record, then lost at Nebraska 38-31. The Cats lost the next two games to Colorado and Oklahoma, but won the remaining three to finish 7-4.

K-State started last season 3-0, but then faltered, losing the next six out of eight and ending the 1992 campaign with a 5-6 mark.

Coach Bill Snyder said the ranking doesn't contain much value, considering the Cats still have six games to play.

"When it's virtually all over, then it (a ranking) means something," Snyder said. "It just flat doesn't matter right now. 5-0 is great if you don't have any more to play. But the first five don't mean a whole lot if you don't get something accomplished in the next six."

After last Saturday's 10-9 win against Kansas, cornerback Thomas Randolph said the Cats haven't proved they are worthy of national recognition yet.

"We haven't really played anybody that is ranked right now, so I don't think we deserve to be ranked. We haven't played up to our ability, anyway," Randolph said. "We just want to keep climbing until we beat some better people."

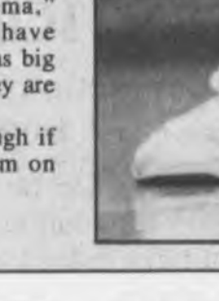
Outsiders kept in the dark about Midnight Madness, campout

As the basketball season approaches, I have come across several things that really disturb me.

First of all, Midnight Madness has been canceled. That's the news from Dale Silvious, chairman of the Athletic Ticket Committee.



I believe canceling the event is a big mistake. Other schools have used the Midnight Madness practice as a recruiting tool.

In fact, many players from other schools have made oral commitments on the same night as Midnight Madness because they see the environment they would be playing in.

Heck, just down the road at the University of Kansas, they have people jammed into Allen Field House several hours before they even start Late Night with Roy Williams, KU's version of Midnight Madness.

They also make a killing off selling merchandise. You see T-shirts everywhere in Kansas City with "Late Night with Roy Williams" emblazoned on the front.

These probably go for $10 a shirt. Just think how much money those T-shirts raise from just one night for an organization.

JEREMY CRABTREE

Why did they cancel Midnight Madness? Did they cancel it because there's a lack of interest for basketball here at K-State? I don't think so, because I remember sitting and watching K-State games on television since I was a kid.

There were always die-hard fans there in Ahearn Field House and Bramlage Coliseum, even against powerhouses like Sam Houston State and Central Connecticut State.

Midnight Madness could also be the determining factor for a high-school all-American to choose between K-State and KU.

He sees what he likes at KU, and goes there because we didn't have Midnight Madness at K-State this season.

Then, I have another problem, and that is the basketball-ticket campout. In my opinion, there is only one word to describe the campout: biased.

Most of the people in the residence halls know nothing about the campout at all. I've had people coming up to me in my dorm room asking me about the basketball campout.

I have also talked to some friends who are members of a fraternity, and they said someone came and talked to them at dinner one night about the event.

Silvious said other members of the committee went and talked to fraternities, sororities and residence-hall floor presidents.

Well, to me it seems those members of the committee need to go back to residence halls again. I say that because most people know nothing at all about the campout in the residence halls.

In my opinion, that's where they need to go first, because most freshmen live in residence halls. At least in a fraternity, there are some older people that know something about the campout. I live on a floor where everyone is a freshman or a transfer student, and they don't know what the procedure is for getting their basketball tickets.

Take some advice, Athletic Ticket Committee — before you raise the flag to start the campout, let the students in the residence halls know a little bit more about the campout procedure.

Also, please bring back Midnight Madness for all of us basketball-hungry fans.

Couples on campus

Married couples share homes, professional environment

DERYL CUNNINGHAM
Collegian

Six K-state faculty and staff members have one thing in common.

Juanita and Reginland McGowan, Susan Jackson and Larry Rodgers and Margaret and Ken Turner are married couples whose lives are intertwined at work as well as at home.

Juanita McGowan, assistant professor of education, is a race coordinator in the Midwest Desegregation Assistance Center.

Reginland McGowan is the director of the Upward Bound Program.

The couple met in Manhattan when, Reginland said, they were introduced by a college friend.

Juanita said she had been working in Manhattan for a couple of years before she met Reginland at a dinner club.

"I thought this was going to be a temporary stop," Juanita said. "I never envisioned I would meet my husband here."

The McGowans are family oriented and like to spend time together, they said.

"We spend a lot of time in Kansas City with relatives, and we attend some of the cultural activities here in Manhattan," Reginland said. "We have experienced about every restaurant there is to experience in Manhattan. We also go to Topeka to shop because my wife loves it."

The couple does not have children, but Juanita said one of the beauties of their relationship is that they both enjoy youth.

"It's a mutual love and goal that we have together," she said.

The McGowans run into each other quite often on campus because they work across the street from each other, Reginland said.

"It's convenient, and we enjoy each other's company," Juanita said.

There are many good points about the couple working in the same environment, they said.

Juanita said they ride to work together everyday, talk on the phone two or three times a day and also go to lunch together.

"We are able to share work experiences and support each the other in our professions," Reginland said. "We serve as resources for one another."

Susan Jackson and Larry Rodgers also share details about each of their professions. Jackson and Rodgers both work in the English department.

"We really understand the interesting aspect of each other's work world," Rodgers said.

Jackson, an instructor in English who teaches Introduction to Creative Writing, is also a published fiction writer.

Rodgers is an assistant professor of English. He has taught American Ethnic Studies, Introduction to Creative Writing, Fiction Writing, American Literature, Afro-American Literature and Introduction to Short Stories classes.

The couple met in the same department they work.

"We met through the English department activities," Rodgers said. "She was a visiting writer in my class before we started dating."

Jackson had been living in Manhattan since 1983 and received her master's degree in 1987 from K-State.

Rodgers came here in 1989 and met Susan one month after his arrival.

"We feel very fortunate after dating other people," she said. "You come to Manhattan not thinking that you are going to find anyone."

Since the two work in the same department, they inevitably run into each other on campus, they said.

"We have lunch together," Rodgers said. "If I forget my money, I can get it from her."

Jackson said they spend a lot of time talking about different methods of teaching.

"If a class isn't going well, we figure out how to make the class better," she said.

There will be a new addition to the couple's world in January, when their first child is due.

Margaret and Ken Turner have professions on campus as well, but they don't run into each other on campus like the other couples.

Margaret is assistant director and program counselor in the Upward Bound Program and advisor and coach for the Classy Cats.

Her husband, Ken, is the top assistant coach in the men's basketball program.

He said he deals with recruiting and is also a floor coach.

The couple met at Southwestern State College in Oklahoma and has been married for 21 years.

They have two children. K.T. is their 15-year-old son, and Kandi is their 9-year-old daughter.

Ken said he tries to spend as much time with his family as possible because he's out on the road recruiting a lot.

"Kandi and I go bike riding for an hour or an hour and a half, and K.T. and I play ball at the Rec center," he said.

Margaret said the family plays basketball together, bowls and also goes out to dinner quite often.

The Turners don't run into each other much on campus, they said.

"I never run into Ken on campus, unless I decide to go over to his office," Margaret said. "But we get together for lunch sometimes."

Both Margaret and Ken said they feel there are many good points about working together.

"It's very convenient if I need to pick up something from him," Margaret said.

"If I need him to sign something, I have no problem getting over to his office."

Ken said some pluses for him are involvement with students on campus and that they deal with the same people.

Visiting ballerina is former dance director

KELLY-ANN GERAGHTY
Collegian

Last Friday K-State students had a rare opportunity to attend a master ballet class given by Roni Mahler, former ballerina and K-State dance program director.

In the late '60s, Mahler began dancing professionally at the American Ballet Theater in New York City.

She said she has taught various choreographic techniques by world-renowned choreographers Agnes DeMille, Jerome Robbins and George Balanchine.

She has performed with Royes Fernandez, Ivan Nagy, Eric Bruhn, and Rudolph Nureyev.

One of the highlights of her career was dancing in the fourth song of "Die Kindertotenlieder," written by composer Gustav Mahler, who was related to her great grandfather Rudolph Mahler, she said.

At ABT, Mahler danced "Swan Lake," "Giselle," "Coppelia," and "Raymonda."

She came to Manhattan in 1974 to raise her son in a country setting, and to teach dance at K-State, she said.

"Starting when I was a dancer, I was always a teacher. A lot of people who teach, start teaching before they stop performing," Mahler said.

When Mahler started teaching at K-State, James McCain was the University president.

He was a ballet enthusiast, and before he left K-State in 1975, Mahler said she danced with native Kansan, Clark Tippet in the Pas De Deux from the "Grand Pas Classique d'Auber," for McCain.

When Mahler came to K-State there were only two full-time dance faculty positions, and Nichols was a shell of a building that was going to be torn down, she said.

Roni Mahler

Achmed Valk, director of the K-State dance program said, now there are more students who are signed up as majors and more full-time dance faculty.

The dance program has two formal performances on campus a year.

The first one is presented in the fall in Nichols Hall, and the second is performed in the spring in McCain Auditorium, Valk said.

After leaving K-State, Mahler became associate artistic director of the Cleveland- San Jose Ballet.

She is now branching out into new territories of ballet instruction through video.

The videos will be used by students who want to clean-up their acts.

Instructors can also use the videos as a tool, Mahler said.

■ Grain science professor is given Award of Merit in Japan

Paul Seib, professor of grain science and industry, recently hit a high point in his career.

Seib was honored with the Award of Merit at the 1993 annual meeting of the Japanese Society of Starch Science, at Fukuyama University in September.

"I've been a professor at K-State since 1970, and this is by far the highest honor for me in my career," Seib said.

The Award of Merit is granted to scientists who have extended an understanding and utilization of starch and related carbohydrates and enzymes.

Seib was honored for his contribution of knowledge regarding the properties and modification of wheat starch.

The society meets annually, but the award is given periodically at the committee's discretion and is decided by recommendations and nominations, Seib said.

"Sometimes, there are actually two awards given, one for domestic research and another for international. This particular award I received was decided over a 10-year period of time in international research."

Seib said the research of starch sciences is big business in every industrialized country because it is a major carbohydrate commodity.

"The Japanese are very productive and well recognized in starch science," he said. "However, modification wasn't a strong area of their's, so I feel I contributed a bit. I introduced our chemical modifications, compared to their enzyme modifications."

Eight other scientists from the United States have won the award, and Seib said he's honored to be added to the list.

"It's a great feeling to contribute to something you work hard at, and I'm glad I could be one of the first 10 in the United States to win such an award."

K-State graduate dies in plane crash

KEN DIEBLE
Collegian

Alwyn Gentry, K-State graduate in botany and physical sciences and Kansas native, had an overwhelming, deep-seated desire to understand nature. He devoted his entire life to the pursuit of understanding the natural world.

However, the pursuit ended with his death on Aug. 3, 1993. He was a passenger in a plane which crashed into a mountain in Ecuador.

"When I first met Al Gentry, I could tell that he was one of these guys who was smart — real smart," Theodore Barkley, professor of biology and Gentry's undergraduate advisor, said. "There was something different about him though. He had a lot of ambition to do something in this world."

Gentry's intelligence and ambition garnered him the reputation as being one of the top field biologists in the world. Several prominent scientists said in a Aug. 6, 1993 New York Times obituary that he was the most knowledgeable person in the world about tropical vegetation. It also said that a book he had recently published was unsurpassed in its field.

Alwyn Gentry

"He knew the biology of the tropics like no one else," Barkley said.

Growing up in Clay Center, Gentry's intense curiosity about nature and living things was evident at a very early age, his sister Sharon McCaslin said.

"By the time he was 4 years old, he had collected and properly mounted hundreds of butterflies," she said. "He really was an expert on Kansas butterflies even then."

Gentry's interest in plants developed while he was an undergraduate at K-State, McCaslin said. He worked in the herbarium on campus and wrote an honors paper that involved studying the vegetation around a radiation-shielding site.

"He became enthralled with studying plants," Barkley said. "He always told me that his experiences at K-State pushed him into his life's work."

Plants and science didn't consume all of Gentry's time while he was at K-State, though.

"He was a real Joe College while he was here," Barkley said. "He was active in a lot of things."

Gentry was a member of the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity and, according to K-State alumni records, he was active in student government, the Union Governing Board and the Union Program Council.

He graduated from K-State in 1967 with a bachelor's of science degree in botany and a bachelor's of arts degree in the physical sciences.

He received his master's degree from the University of Wisconsin and his doctorate from Washington University in St. Louis.

After graduating, he began working for the Missouri Botanical Garden, where he remained until his death. Most of Gentry's work was in tropical countries. He made more than 86 expeditions to at least 35 countries.

In addition to his research work, Gentry was an excellent teacher, Barkley said.

"He had an unflagging enthusiasm for training students," Barkley said. "He was the focal point for the graduate program at the Missouri Botanical Garden.

"The scientific community has lost a major resource. He was an affable, articulate person with a wealth of experience in the tropics."

Research on neutering may give solution to pet overpopulation

JEFF GAMBER
Collegian

Imagine taking your new puppy home from the pet store already neutered, without hassle, expense or a recovery stay later on in your pet's life.

Bill Fortney, assistant professor of clinical sciences, hopes to make this possible by researching the effects of pediatric neutering on pets.

Fortney said this research is important because an estimated 20 million dogs and cats are euthanized each year in the United States because there is a problem with pet overpopulation.

Fortney is beginning research this fall to study the effects, if any, of early neutering on puppies. He said the project will focus three criteria: the effects on behavior, physical characteristics and possible medical consequences.

"Until we answer those three questions, I don't see how our profession could advocate early neutering," Fortney said. "There's been some debate on this issue, but no one has the facts, and we're trying to get the facts."

The initial study, which has already been funded, will consist of 20 dogs from the Kansas Specialty Dog Service, a non-profit organization that breeds and trains dogs to assist the handicapped.

Fortney's research involves neutering animals at seven weeks of age, just after they have been weaned and just before the animals would be placed in a pet store.

If pets can be safely neutered at this age, it should help reduce pet overpopulation and also help pet owners to be more responsible for their animals by reducing some of the hassle and expense involved in traditional neutering, he said.

"Most people want to get their animals neutered so they don't have pups or breed," Fortney said. "It's just that they don't get around to it."

Betty Townsend, chairman of welfare and cruelty investigation with the Riley County Humane Society, indicated there may be some initial resistance among society members, she said.

"If you're going to hold a seven-week-old puppy in your hand, it seems a little young to put them to the knife."

However, she said, as long as early neutering doesn't cause harmful effects, the society doesn't object if it will help end unwanted litters and harm to animal.

Judge instructs business

LISA STAAB
Collegian

Twice a week James Johnson is addressed in class as Professor Johnson. The remaining part of the week he is addressed in the court room as Judge Johnson.

Johnson, instructor of business law, has served as a judge in Abilene since 1990. Prior to that he served as a lawyer for 30 years. Johnson also has taught at K-State since 1969 with the exception of three years when he was busy with his law practice.

"I've always enjoyed teaching," Johnson said. "When I got out of law school, I was contacted by Continuing Education to teach a correspondence course of business law. They wanted practicing attorneys to teach rather than a professor."

Johnson makes the 45-minute drive from Abilene twice a week and has only missed classes twice because of bad weather.

"I don't have a problem making it to K-State. The only problem is scheduling conflicts that sometimes occur at work with different trials, but I often schedule the trials around my class," he said. "I hustle right out of class so I can begin to hear most of my cases by 10 a.m."

Johnson said he enjoys both careers.

"I enjoy teaching and being a judge. There is more stress with my judicial duties. I definitely enjoy teaching at K-State because it doesn't rob me of my judicial commitment, but it's not a fair comparison to say I like one more than the other."

His interaction with the law allows him to share personal incidents that relate to the students' curriculum, he said.

"I want the students to gain practical, hands-on concepts. For all the years I've been teaching, I've included personal stories," he said.

Dan Short, dean of the College of Business Administration, said Johnson is an asset to K-State.

"I think there's a real need in today's world to blend the academic and practical side."

KSU grad wins series trip

DERYL CUNNINGHAM
Collegian

The Kansas City Royals will not be going to the World Series this year, but one lucky fan, who just happens to be a graduate of K-State, will be on his way to the big game.

Steve Kent, a programmer consultant at Lab Conoco Corporation, has won tickets to the 1993 World Series.

MCI, which introduced the Fan of the Year program in 1991, selected 21 winners at random among the millions of baseball fans in attendance at various games. These random picks were at 21 of 28 major league baseball parks.

"I was the Fan of the Game," Kent said. "I was in complete disbelief when I won the Fan of the Year."

Kent said he was not even planning on going to the game where he won the fan of the game honors.

A friend convinced him to go, so Kent took his sons to the game.

Six or seven weeks later, Kent received a liability release form and a letter that asked him to give MCI a call about the contest.

"I thought it was just formality. I had already been chosen as the winner, and I didn't know." Kent said.

"I thought someone was pulling my leg."

He would later receive another call from an MCI worker in New York, and a couple of nights later he threw out the first pitch at a Royals game.

Kent and his family met Herk Robinson, general manager of the Royals, and Jeff Reid, an MCI representative, before the game for a tour of Royal Stadium.

"They gave us tickets for four, right behind home plate. They were perfect seats," he said.

Kent said he would rather attend the World Series game at the home of the American League Champions. If he had his choice, he and his family would rather go to the Skydome in Toronto, rather than Comiskey Park in Chicago.

As part of the package, MCI arranged for plane tickets, accommodations for three days and two nights, a meal before the game, tickets to the game, spending money and a surprise gift.

Kent is a 1981 graduate of K-State in the college of business. He is an all-around sports fan who grew up in Winfield.

CAMPUS

Parking violations costly

LORI ARMER
Collegian

When students continually ignore campus parking tickets, they end up owing more than they imagined. Not only do they receive tickets, but eventually the campus police will put on a wheellock.

"A wheellock is a vehicular-immobilization device used for detaining a vehicle because of a stolen permit, excessive amounts of outstanding unpaid tickets, or a problem with registration of a permit," Dwain Archer, manager of Parking Services, said.

Archer said five unpaid, past-due tickets would constitute a wheellock, and that removal fee is $20.

Susie Werner, sophomore undecided, discovered first hand the consequences of excessive parking tickets.

"I was parked legally in (Lot) B3 last semester. They wheellocked it there because I'd had five tickets from parking in front of Ford (Hall)," Werner said. "They told me I had to pay for the wheellock and all my tickets at once, but when I proved that the check was in the mail for my tickets, they took off my wheellock without making me pay the fee."

Werner escaped the towing fee by immediately going to the K-State Police.

"They put three wheellocks on my car, which I didn't understand because you can't move your car with just one on," she said.

Aaron Green, junior in landscape design, received a wheellock on his car for reasons not mentioned by Parking Services.

Last semester, Green, who at the time was on crutches and had a handicap permit, parked in staff parking and received a wheellock.

"I parked in staff to go in and see an instructor. I didn't have any unpaid tickets but ended up paying around $45 anyways," he said.

"Wheellocks stay on until the end of a business day, and then cars are towed by an independent wrecking company," Archer said.

This, of course, means that in addition to a wheellock fee and a ticket, a towing fee has also been added.

The only wrecking company in Manhattan that said it towed vehicles from campus was Manhattan Wrecker Service.

An operator from Manhattan Wrecker Service explained the business only tows cars from campus when they have been contacted to do so by campus police.

The towing fee is $50, and the cars are held for a couple of months.

Mayor vetos anti-picket bill

Ordinance may be overridden within 30 days

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A group of churches' effort to block picketing near religious services hit a roadblock when the mayor vetoed an ordinance that would have banned the pickets.

Mayor Butch Felker announced his veto at Tuesday night's council meeting, saying he had concerns about the proposed ordinance's constitutionality.

Under city law, the council may override Felker's veto if it acts within 30 days.

The ordinance, which would have prohibited picketing within 100 feet of a church or other religious facility from 30 minutes before to 30 minutes after a service, was introduced by two council members after a group of Topeka churches petitioned for such a law.

During debate on the picketing ordinance, most in attendance refrained from naming the Rev. Fred Phelps and his Westboro Baptist Church as the group they were trying to control with the ordinance. But references to specific incidents involving Phelps' anti-homosexual picketers were clear.

Phelps and his followers have had anti-homosexual pickets outside the funerals of AIDS victims.

In a prepared two-page statement, Felker, a lawyer, cited several U.S. Supreme Court rulings. In each, the court ruled that a local governmental entity had repressed someone's right to practice their religion.

Phelps didn't attend the Tuesday night meeting. He said earlier Tuesday he was confident he could get the new ordinance declared unconstitutional simply by showing it was targeted specifically at his church.

Before the meeting, as they learned of Felker's planned veto, council members said they agreed that no override vote should take place at Tuesday's meeting. But they didn't rule out a vote at a later date.

Councilman Jim Reardon, a co-sponsor of the proposed ordinance, said the churches collected more than 6,000 names on petitions. The ordinance was adopted by the council last week on a 6-3 vote.

Overriding a veto requires six votes.

A poll of the six members who initially supported the ordinance showed most weren't sure if they would override the veto. All three members who voted against it the first time said they would not override the veto if a vote was taken.

▶YELTSIN ANGERED BY RUMORS OF EARLY ELECTIONS

MOSCOW — A smoldering political dispute between Boris Yeltsin and at least two top aides burst into open conflict Wednesday, with the Russian president threatening to fire anyone favoring early presidential elections.

It was just the latest indication of discord inside the Kremlin since Yeltsin last week ordered tanks and troops into the capital to oust his hard-line opponents in parliament.

Yeltsin, during a news conference in Tokyo, was asked about comments by a Yeltsin aide that there could be simultaneous elections for parliament and president.

"I don't keep such aides," Yeltsin said.

Buying, selling, loans all pawnshop options

LORI ARMER
Collegian

When a person needs a little extra cash, the options are not always desirable. The fastest way to unload something is not to advertise or to have a garage sale, but to take possessions to a pawn shop.

Selling items at a pawn shop can be permanent or temporary, depending on whether one chooses to sell the object or just needs a little extra cash, Pat Livingston, owner of Pat's Pawn and Gun Shop, said.

"We give a cash loan on a personal item in exchange for the customer signing a contract saying that the item is their's," he said. "The person has 90 days to retrieve their item at a 10-percent interest rate to buy back. So, for example if someone brought in a VCR, and we gave them $40, it would cost them $44 to get it back."

Though people pawn their possessions for a number of reasons, Livingston said shops often give small, temporary loans for people needing a little extra cash.

"The small loans are to get people through to the end of the month, and usually they come back in at payday and retrieve their items," Livingston said.

While the items are in the store, different methods are used to decide on selling prices.

"The price depends on the new price. There is no set formula," Bruce Michal, owner of Manhattan Pawn Shop, said. "Items are valued at different percentage rates depending on supply and demand and also on their condition."

Charlie Clack, manager of Cash Pawn and Gun, said sometimes shops have to rely on their knowledge of the items to price them.

"Sometimes we refer to the blue book, but we don't always agree with what the book says," Clack said.

Most pawn shops offer the same basic items such as jewelry, guns and cameras. However, if people are going to pawn their possessions or are looking to buy, it's important to know what certain pawn shops purchase, because some have restrictions.

At Cash Pawn and Gun, the size of the store determines what objects are accepted, Clack said.

"We do not take large bulky objects, such as rowing machines, because of the small size of our store," Clack said. "We also only sell new car stereos, not used because we have not had good luck with them. Bicycles are not for pawn either."

Michal said Manhattan Pawn Shop will not take personal items such as clothing, knickknacks and small kitchen appliances.

At Pat's Pawn and Gun, items are limited by overall quantity.

"We take most everything — however, we won't take things that we are loaded up on," Livingston said. "We need to wait until we sell the items we already have."

Though a variety of kinds and ages of people are enticed by pawn shops, the Manhattan area often specializes to the nearby college and military communities.

"With our location we bring in about 50-percent students, and 50 percent of the local community," Michal said.

Ice Cream

Even though it's fall, this frozen favorite hasn't lost its appeal

Manhattan has a variety of ice cream, yogurt

KELLY-ANN GERAGHTY
Collegian

Although the dog days of summer are over, and the cooler autumn days are here, any time is a good time for ice cream and frozen yogurt desserts.

For the ice cream purist there's Johns Ice Cream & Video located at 1123 Westloop Drive.

Established in 1913, Johns' homemade hard ice cream and waffle cones are prepared on the premises.

"Customers buy ice cream and then look at the videos," Scott Burnett, employee, said.

The flavors favored frequently by the customers are quadruple chocolate, rocky road, and rainbow sherbet, Burnett said.

Johns Ice Cream & Video has several dessert items on the menu. Customers can select from shakes, malts, sundaes and banana splits.

These desserts are sold by the ounce, and customers can take home pints or half gallons of their favorite ice cream, sherbet, and yogurt.

Johns remains virtually the only off-campus establishment where one can purchase hard ice cream.

Soft-serve ice cream enthusiasts can visit the Dairy Queen, located at 1015 N. Third St.

Serving vanilla, chocolate, and vanilla chocolate twist ice milk, customers have several desserts to choose from.

These choices range from cones, dipped cones, sundaes, parfaits and blizzards.

"Our cookie dough blizzards and peanut buster parfaits are very popular with K-State students," Wendi Murray, night manager, said.

Dairy Queen offers customers the opportunity to take home pints, half quarts and quarts of their favorite ice cream.

For the customers' convenience, Dairy Queen has a drive-thru window.

"About 40 percent of our business is handled at the drive-thru window," Murray said.

For calorie conscious individuals interested in maintaining their low-fat diets, there are low-fat and nonfat frozen yogurts available at several stores.

I Can't Believe It's Yogurt! located at 705 N. 11th St. in Aggieville, offers several types of flavored yogurts.

They serve Yoglace, sugar-free nonfat, and nonfat yogurt. All of these yogurts are nonfat and cholesterol-free.

However, the original yogurt has a low-fat and cholesterol content.

"The favorite flavors of customers are French vanilla and chocolicious," Maggie Irvin, employee, said.

The most popular dessert items on the menu are the fruit and berry shakes. These shakes can be made with fresh bananas, peaches and strawberries, Irvin said.

I Can't Believe It's Yogurt! also has a line of frozen yogurt pies and cakes. These desserts can be made with sugar-free crust and can be topped with fat-free fudge.

TCBY located on North Manhattan Avenue in Aggieville, also offers a variety of nonfat and sugar-free yogurts.

"Because we're close to campus, most of our customers are K-State students," Melanie Kempton, employee, said.

At TCBY, smoothies are the most popular yogurt desserts. Smoothies are scoops of yogurt that come in small, regular, large, super, and giant cups, Kempton said.

People who would like to spice-up their smoothies can top them with an assortment of fruits, candies, nuts, and hot toppings.

"The most requested topping is chocolate chip cookie dough, which we are out right now," Kempton said.

Like their competition,TCBY has a selection of frozen-yogurt gourmet cakes for special occasions. Customers can choose the frozen yogurt, cake flavors and toppings they desire.

High court grapples with sexual harassment

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court tackled the sensitive question Wednesday of when off-color workplace behavior — such as a boss asking a female employee to take coins from his pocket — becomes illegal sexual harassment.

"This is not simply a hurt-feelings situation — it makes it tangibly more difficult to do the job," Clinton administration attorney Jeffrey Minear argued in the case of a Tennessee woman who said her boss sexually harassed her.

In another closely watched case, the administration argued that a 1991 civil-rights law should apply to thousands of employment-bias cases that were pending when it was enacted.

The 1991 law provides "new remedies ... for old wrongs" and should not be restricted to cases where the alleged discrimination occurred after the law was enacted, Solicitor General Drew Days III told the court.

The sexual-harassment case was heard by the first Supreme Court to include two female justices — Sandra Day O'Connor and new arrival Ruth Bader Ginsburg, a former leading women's-rights advocate.

The issue has received heightened attention in recent years, partly because of Anita Hill's accusation during Justice Clarence Thomas' 1991 confirmation hearing that he harassed her years earlier.

Thomas, who strongly denied any such conduct, sat silently during Wednesday's arguments.

The high court ruled in 1986 that on-the-job sexual harassment is illegal if it is sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of the victim's employment.

Interpreting that standard must depend on the perspective of a reasonable person who is the target of alleged harassment, Irwin Venick argued in behalf of Teresa Harris, who sued her ex-boss after resigning in 1987.

Harris said Charles Hardy, president of Forklift Systems of Nashville, Tenn., asked her to retrieve coins from his pants pocket, suggested they start "screwing around" although he knew she was married, and asked if she won a sales contract by providing sexual favors.

Attorney Stanley M. Chernau, representing the company, said rulings that denied Harris any remedy should be upheld. "I don't think that offensive conduct automatically alters conditions of employment," he said.

Chernau conceded that the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals went too far when it said Harris must prove actual psychological injury to win a sex-harassment case.

Nobody defended that standard, and it appeared to be doomed. But the justices seemed less sure of what to do about the 1986 standard.

Justice Antonin Scalia said that previous guidance is "utterly meaningless to me." A more sensible rule might be to require people to prove harassment harmed their performance at work, he said.

But Ginsburg suggested that sex harassment can create a hostile work environment even when a woman continues performing well. The question, she said, might be whether one sex has to put up with something that the other sex doesn't have to put up with.

"You certainly could have a hostile work environment that makes it very difficult for the female employee to continue working there," O'Connor said.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES By Gypsy Rose

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Give up "90210" and "Melrose Place." They rot your brain.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Plan ahead. Look into joining the American Association of Retired Persons. You can never be too young to plan the future.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Take up a hobby. Start collecting belly-button lint. Store it in a heart-shaped box.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Keep your mind blank. You should be expecting a deep thought.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Remember the old Chinese proverb: What you step in today, you'll be scraping off your shoe tomorrow.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Try doing chin-ups while hanging from your feet on the shower curtain rod.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Get all your friends together and act out your favorite Monty Python flick. Be careful when banging those rocks.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Experiment with new cuisine. Eat that mystery dish in the back of the fridge. Keep the poison-control number handy.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Consider marriage. If you're already married, consider moving to Utah. This will expand your possibilities.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Try to listen to a BeeGees tune without falling down laughing. Good luck.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The answer to 21 down is "Fred Phelps." Do us all a favor and just skip him. He gets too much publicity anyway.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Paint a mural on your ceiling and see if your landlord will take $100 off your rent.

The key Word is ignorance

Dear Cassandra,

In reference to Word's letter of Oct. 11, we, the members of the African American family here at K-State, are deeply saddened there are still people at an institution of higher learning suffering from a common disease called ignorance.

Before we offer a cure for this terrible sickness, we will address the issues that you, Cassandra, were unable to.

The first issue: loud and vocal inner-city youths. We do not feel this should even be an issue. Not all African Americans are loud. The members of our family outside of your window do not fully represent every African American you see. We hope you can intelligently take up matters with these particular people and not stereotype all African American youths — inner- or outer-city — you come in contact with.

Secondly, the issue: our English-speaking abilities. Word fails to realize that in today's society, the use of slang is not uncommon. Unfortunately for the African American, what we term slang is often noted as improper English. Yet, the growing trend around the world is to emulate the African American.

Thus, we find it difficult to believe even Word has never used slang, especially if he or she has the audacity to end the letter with the use of the slang — "Word."

The cure to ignorance as we see it is positive education, because it has been proven positive education always corrects errors.

Zappa tribute keeps world off center

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

The rock 'n' roll world becomes weirder every day.

"Zappa's Universe" showcases several artists celebrating the music of Frank Zappa. Filled with 14 rearranged originals by Zappa, this November 1991 recording celebrates both Zappa's 50th birthday and his enormous influence upon rock music.

Honoring Zappa at the Ritz in New York, arranger/conductor Joel Thome gathered the Orchestra of Our Time, The Persuasions and various artists to perform selected works from Zappa's long-lived career.

Zappa has been a leading musical pioneer by fusing jazz, classical and rock music beginning in the 1960s and by testing various musical combinations for more than 25 years.

Unfortunately, Zappa wasn't present for this performance. The liner notes blame the mysteries of the organism for his absence.

The album begins with the quick, comical number "Elvis Has Just Left The Building." Using the rock opera-style that Zappa helped invent in the '60s, Thome and the Orchestra effectively pay homage with controlled chaos and discord. Although funny, Zappa's trademark lyrical satire shows through well.

"Brown Shoes Don't Make It" takes the audience back to 1967 and the world's first rock opera. Like the original from the Mothers of Invention album "Absolutely Free," Thome displays his own freestyle talents along with the Orchestra of Our Time.

One of the favorites to make "Zappa's Universe" is "Jazz Discharge Party Hats." Like the original Zappa viewpoint, guitarist/vocalist Mike Keneally dives into a story about life on the road.

This version is just as funny, but Keneally sounds too much like Zappa. The jazz/fusion mood is kept intact, but the vocals make the listener wish for the original singer.

In addition, guitarist Steve Vai makes a brief appearance on two tracks from "Zappa's Universe."

Vai, who worked with Frank Zappa in the early '80s as a stunt guitarist, shows devotion and respect for his former employer. Speed and dissonance combine with grace and beauty to re-live the tune "Sofa." This song demonstrates how much talent Vai learned in his years spent with Zappa.

Zappa's son, Dweezil, also joins Vai to perform a raucous version of "Dirty Love." This seven-minute version rolls from one blistering solo to another. It shows how each guitarist is improving and expanding Frank's innovative approach.

This album is hard to describe even when Zappa originals are performed by someone else.

The best part of this tribute is the continuing support for musical experimentation and growth.

"Zappa's Universe" will provide a different angle from which to view future stars of rock 'n' roll.

system.

Gary Schmidt, Washburn representative to the board, said Washburn's mission statement was to have an excellent undergraduate program. He said that goal complemented the programs at the other universities in the state.

Schmidt said he supported Washburn entering the regents system, if the merger would benefit both Washburn and the other regents schools.

Washburn offers 70 degree programs and about a half dozen associate programs. It is one of the first universities in the state that offers a degree programs with vocational-technical schools.

Regents' universities are prohibited from offering associate degree programs.

Monical said the geographic location of Washburn was important to students who work full time and students in vo-tech programs.

Ed Skoog, K-State student body president, said having a local university made it easier for students in that area to get an education by cutting travel time.

Aruna Michie, president of K-State Faculty Senate, said the regents system does not need another university.

"We are not in an under-served area," she said.

Monical said Washburn being outside the regents system has been a stumbling block for higher education.

"We would not have to keep looking over each other's shoulders. We could work together for the benefit of students and faculty," Monical said.

He said the regents schools should not be looking at individual university budgets, but at the elements of the state budget as a whole that cut into higher education.

"The universities would have more political strength if they worked together," he said.

Skoog said all higher education including Washburn and the community colleges could be managed more efficiently under one state agency.

"I don't think the students are that concerned about it," he said. "It won't affect our generation of college students."

However, he said the Student Advisory Council to the regents is trying to involve Washburn students in higher-education decisions.

Monical said there would be disadvantages to state agency control. He said the university's position allows it more flexibility in purchasing and allows them to operate with less administrative staff than similar colleges.

"Washburn has had to operate efficiently due to our budget constraints," Monical said.

Washburn wants funding increase

Hays and Emporia) and then adjusted for Washburn's specific needs. This model originally suggested an 8.4-percent increase but was revised to a 7.2-percent increase.

The Council of Presidents and the Student Advisory Council recommended the third and smaller funding increase for Washburn at the regents' September meeting.

Ed Skoog, K-State student body president, said he supported the increase in funding for Washburn.

He said it was inevitable that Washburn would become a member of the board.

State funding increases, such as the option the SAC suggested, would over time bring Washburn closer in relationship to tuition and salaries to the other schools, he said.

"If Washburn becomes a part of the system, it cannot be inferior or superior to the other schools in the system," Skoog said.

Aruna Michie, president of the K-State Faculty Senate, said the increase concerned faculty.

"It is not clear to us where the money will come from," Michie said.

Michie said she and other faculty also were concerned about state general funds being used for Washburn faculty salaries.

"The average salary for Washburn is already higher than the regents' schools," she said.

The University would need $6.5 million to bring its salaries up to those of its peers, Ron Downey, director of institutional research and analysis, said.

Gary Schmidt, faculty representative to the regents from Washburn, said the Washburn faculty has a higher average faculty salary than the other regents institutions in part because it is has a law school.

He also said Washburn's faculty does not receive the same benefits as regents' faculty.

Opinions differ on how the funding increase for Washburn will affect the other regents' schools.

Hauke said the increase should not affect the funding for the other universities.

Tom Rawson, K-State vice president of administration and finance, said over time Washburn could cut into funds for the other schools.

"The budget pie is only so big," Rawson said. "If Washburn gets a bigger piece it could cut into funding for other universities."

Michie said she questioned the need for another university in the state system.

"We have been bleeding so long. Do we need to add Washburn to the burden?" Michie said. "I think we need to do some serious thinking about where this is taking us."

Monical said there was nothing in this budget that would trigger regents affiliation, but it was Washburn's long-term goal to enter the regents system.

He said he thought the state higher-education budget would grow to accommodate Washburn.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Senate discusses Union rental fee

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

The K-State Union was accused of charging outrageous equipment rental fees at the Student Senate meeting Thursday night.

The Union charges student organizations $25 for use of a television and video recorder. The Rainforest Action Group requested $75 from Senate for television and VCR rentals so it could order and screen three films.

Aaron McKee, engineering senator, said the fee is too high.

"This is an outrageous fee," McKee said. "There's no way I'm voting for this."

Trent LeDoux, Senate intern coordinator, said the Union is charging students for something they have already paid for.

"I feel like the Union is a monopoly," LeDoux said.

"I have a real problem with everything being subsidized here, and students still being charged more."

If organizations want to show films, they have the option of bringing their own television and VCR, LeDoux said.

"I don't see why we should be doing it for $75 when we could be doing it for nothing," he said.

Stacy Dalton, business administration senator, said by refusing the request, Student Senate will send a message to Union director Jack Sills.

"It just means everyone goes knocking on Jack Sills door and tells him what a bunch of b.s. it is," Dalton said. "Maybe Jack Sills has a VCR we could all use."

Sarah Caldwell, arts and sciences senator, said Senate should not penalize student groups because the rental policy is unfair.

"What this all comes down to is that we don't want to give the Union the money," Caldwell said. "I don't want to punish any groups because the Union policy stinks."

The equipment rental request was approved by Senate.

In other business, Senate allocated $53.20 to Alpha Phi Omega national service fraternity. Senate also approved $659 for use by the Asian American Students for Intercultural Awareness and approved $884.60 to the Rainforest Action Group.

Survey shows faculty morale low

More than half would leave

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

A survey of K-State faculty morale conducted in fall 1991 shows more than half of the respondents are somewhat likely or very likely to seek jobs elsewhere in higher education.

According to the 1992 Report on Faculty Satisfaction and Morale, 60 percent of faculty members indicated they would likely seek jobs elsewhere in higher education, and 42 percent indicated they were somewhat likely or very likely to seek jobs in industry.

The report was developed and administered by an ad-hoc committee appointed by Faculty Senate.

These results were similar to a survey conducted in 1990.

In general, the colleges of Architecture and Design, Arts and Sciences, Human Ecology and Veterinary Medicine tended to score lower in terms of general satisfaction.

Faculty in these colleges were more likely to have a higher expected turnover rate than those in other colleges or administrative jobs.

Areas receiving lowest indicators of satisfaction were all-University leadership, relationship between administration and faculty, travel support, support services, computer resources and unclassified salary.

Lane Marshall, dean of the College of Architecture and Design, said he was not surprised faculty in his college consistently expressed themselves as unsatisfied.

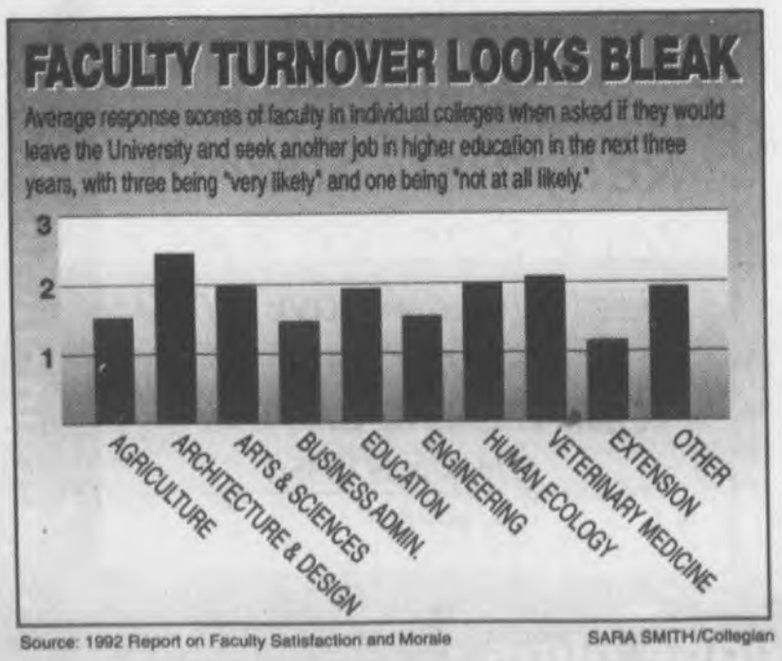
"I would be surprised if they weren't," Marshall said.

"My faculty's view of the world is that they work harder than anyone else and get fewer rewards for it."

In 1990, the University told the College of Architecture and Design it would be eliminated, Marshall said. The resulting reorganization nearly wiped it out, he said.

"Many of the faculty are still burning from that signal we got from the University about the kind of work we do. It's hard to wipe out some of those recollections," Marshall said.

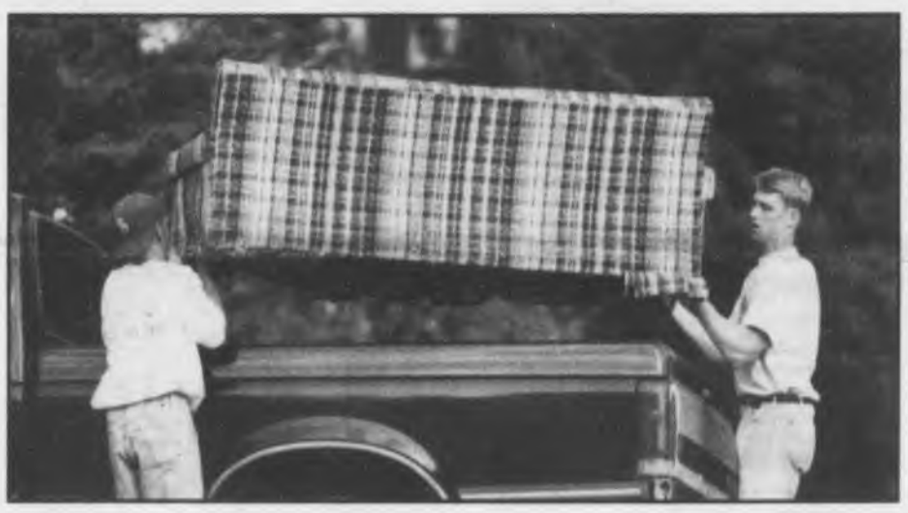
In 1989, the College of Architecture and Design instituted an enrollment plan that brought the student enrollment down from 1,220 to 750 over a four-year time period, Marshall said.



"The purpose of that was to bring number of students into sync with the teachers," he said.

Faculty salaries have also increased since the survey to be within range of the average K-State salary, Marshall said. This was done by re-allocating money from open teaching positions to existing faculty salaries.

The faculty members are working harder, but at least they are getting paid more, Marshall said.



"Today, the faculty realizes we're going to be making progress," he said. "By the next survey, there should be an improvement. Hopefully, there is some light at the end of the tunnel."

Faculty members in general reported being somewhat satisfied with the University's general reputation and mission, according to the report.

Rob Zienkewicz, freshman in electrical engineering, laughs with friends while sitting on a couch Thursday afternoon outside of Ahearn Field House (above photo). Zienkewicz and other members of the Delta Tau Delta Fraternity heard the flag for camping out for basketball tickets had been raised. They brought their couch and flag, only to find the official flag hadn't been raised. After sitting on the couch for more than an hour, Zienkewicz and Jason Fornshell, freshman in milling science, decided to load the couch into a friend's truck and head home (left).

Campers wait for flag

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

Many students rushed to the front of Ahearn Field House this week as false rumors circulated around campus that the flag was being raised for the annual basketball ticket campout.

"This is it, right here. We are positive," said John Schwein, sophomore in accounting and member of the Pi Kappa Alpha campout group. "We could be wrong, though, and then we would be positively wrong."

The Pikes have been keeping vigil every day from 8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. outside Ahearn since Oct. 1, the first possible date the flag could be raised, Schwein said.

"Pre-campout campout is half-tradition, half-rumor," he said. "The pre-campout is the action. And the fun."

The Delta Tau Delta fraternity was also represented by some house members lounging on a couch.

"We got a prank call that the flag was out," said Rob Zienkewicz, member of the Delts and freshman in electrical engineering. "So we loaded up the couch and came out."

A group of students not affiliated with a greek organization were camping out for general admission tickets because they said they feel ICAT is not a desirable organization, Christian Tonn, junior in industrial engineering, said.

"We are GDI, and we've been here every day. This is die-hard. We're real fans," Tonn said.

"K-State used to have the greatest students. They were die-hards. Now people can walk in five minutes before a game and get front row. That's crap."

This group of students creates fun while waiting for the flag to rise.

"We stay until it's so dark that we get hit in the face while playing catch with a football," Seth Bell, junior in chemical engineering, said. "Only the second time a football hits one of us in the face is it dark enough to go home."

The group watched as the Delts loaded up their couch and left.

"Those aren't real fans," Bell said.

"I can't believe they are leaving. They are long-haired, hippie, pinko, commie-lover, weak-sister KU fans."

Durant released from captors after 11 days

Soldier taken to Germany; full recovery expected

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Michael Durant has a broken back, a broken leg and a broken cheekbone. But he shed tears of joy, not pain, as he tasted his first moments of freedom Thursday after 11 days in captivity.

The U.S. Army pilot's ordeal ended almost as quickly as it began on Oct. 3, when a rocket-propelled grenade blasted the tail off his helicopter during a day of horror that killed 18 Americans and wounded more than 70.

Fellow soldiers cheered and flashed thumbs-up signs after Durant was brought to the United Nations compound for treatment of his battered body. At the 46th U.S. Army Field Hospital, officers wept when he was carried in.

The 32-year-old Durant underwent a checkup that detailed his injuries. Then came a call to his wife, Lorrie, at Fort Campbell, Ky., who will be flying to meet him when he is airlifted Friday to Landstuhl, Germany, for further treatment.

Military officials said President Clinton would telephone Durant later Thursday.

It was graphic television footage of Durant's frightened, injured face and triumphant Somalis dragging an American soldier's body through the streets of Mogadishu that led Clinton to reassess U.S. involvement in the United Nations' peacekeeping mission in the East African nation.

Capping a week of rumors that Durant would be freed, warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid came out of hiding for the first time in four months to hold a news conference Thursday morning, saying the release was imminent.

The Red Cross was given the same message from representatives of Aidid's faction, which had been holding Durant and Nigerian Trooper Umar Shantali, 22. They escorted a six-vehicle convoy to a nondescript walled compound.

Two Red Cross delegates, accompanied by a Swiss surgeon and mediators from Ethiopia and Eritrea, went inside. Durant and Shantali were there, spruced up as much as possible.

Shantali, dressed in new clothes and having been allowed to bathe for the first time since his capture Sept. 5, limped out using a cane and leaning on a Red Cross worker. He looked relatively fit, his left ankle apparently broken.

"They told him he was going to be a free man today," U.S. Army Sgt. 1st Class Dawn Kilpatrick said of Shantali. "He said he didn't want to get his hopes up."

Local Somali workers gingerly carried Durant out on a stretcher, a clean flowered sheet over his splinted leg.

His teeth clinched against the pain, he clutched a note from his wife and parents the Red Cross had relayed just before his release. He made no comment and declined to speak to reporters.

Then came the agonizing trip in the back of a four-wheel-drive vehicle, bouncing along the pot-holed streets to the U.N. compound.

Durant declined pain medication before the trip but asked for it after reaching the field hospital.

Dr. John Holcomb, who examined Durant, said the pilot appeared to have been treated fairly well by his captors.

He said Durant had developed diarrhea a few days earlier from drinking local milk.

Holcomb said most of Durant's injuries probably were sustained during the helicopter crash, although Durant said in an interview while he was in captivity that he had been badly beaten by a crowd and stripped naked after his capture.

"Mike is fine, basically," Holcomb said, adding that Durant cried a little bit — tears of joy.

Although the worst appeared to be over, Durant's pain isn't. Since his broken leg was not set properly, it will have to be redone. Still, Holcomb said there were no signs of infection or neurological damage from the back injury.

"I think he'll make a full recovery," Holcomb said.

Student dies in Tulsa car accident

K-State student Sam Winnett, 21, died early Sunday morning as a result of injuries sustained in a car accident in Tulsa, Okla.

Winnett, senior in animal science and industry, was a member of the Livestock Judging team and was competing with the team in Tulsa.

He was visiting friends and family, prior to the accident at his hometown in near by Coweta, Okla. Livestock Judging coach Scott Schaake said he was returning from his home when he lost control of his car.

The funeral took place Oct. 12 in Coweta Okla. Schaake said about 35 K-State students attended the service.

The team recently finished first place in the Mid-America Livestock Judging competition in Tulsa. The team judged beef, sheep and swine at the competition.

"He was an extremely out-going and personable kid," Schaake said. "He will be missed by all of the faculty and students who knew him."

Investigation reveals cause of accident

A Porsche that crashed into a railroad pole Saturday evening was traveling at a speed well in excess of the speed limit, an investigation by the Riley County Police Department has found.

Ronald Rigdon, the car's driver, apparently lost control of his car while driving north on Fort Riley Boulevard, RCPD Lt. Adam Angst said. The car began a counter-clockwise spin and left the road, colliding with the pole, he said.

Rigdon, 56, Olathe, was killed instantly. A passenger, Carol Newth, Overland Park, was thrown from the vehicle. Newth was transported to Memorial Hospital to receive treatment for multiple compound fractures and head and abdominal injuries.

Newth was transferred Sunday to the University of Kansas Medical Center.

The investigation did not reveal how fast the car was traveling. Angst said RCPD will not know for several weeks if alcohol was involved in the accident.

Collegian chosen as Pacemaker finalist

The Kansas State Collegian is an Associated Collegiate Press Pacemaker finalist — and among the top-10 daily college papers in the country.

Only 15 national Pacemakers will be chosen from a possible 40 finalists, including daily and non-daily newspapers. Winners for the award will be announced during the Fall National College Media Convention, sponsored by ACP and College Media Advisers, Oct. 27-31 in Dallas.

Ron Johnson, Collegian adviser, said this year was different from past years in the way finalists were chosen.

"No longer are papers broken down into regions for judging," he said. "Instead, the competition has gone national, where everyone is in one competition. It's kind of a challenge sending what they want at a given time. Naturally, we want to send our best work, but they don't set it up for us to decide."

The issues sent in by the Collegian for judging were from the fall of 1992, led by editor Samantha Branson, and the spring of 1993, led by editor Jodell Lamer.

The Collegian is a veteran finalist, including regional wins in 1985, 1986 and 1987. It won national Pacemakers in 1984 and 1987.

Johnson said he feels being chosen as a finalist for the award is a good measure of a newspaper's ability to reach its audience.

"Being chosen as a finalist shows that we are blessed with strong student leadership, and that translates to a quality paper," he said. "It also shows that we are serving our readers well, and because of that, we're pleased. We produce newspapers to serve our readers, not just to win awards."

Weekend highlights Hispanic culture

Hispanic Awareness Month activities will expose K-State students to aspects of hispanic culture this weekend.

The weekend will be highlighted with the annual Latin American Cultural Night from 6-10 p.m. Saturday at the International Student Center.

The evening will feature food, socializing and entertainment. A potluck dinner will feature traditional Hispanic dishes from a variety of Latin American countries.

"This will be a friendly get-together, providing an opportunity to mix food, a chance to hear music and see dancing in a relaxed atmosphere," Laura Grabhorn, coordinator of multicultural student organizations, said. "We also hope to provide an awareness of the cultural elements of the hispanic and Latino people."

Slated to entertain is the folklore dance group Puerto Rico Baila. The group will perform three dance routines: Plena, Bomba and Carribean Merengue, said Arlene Baiges, Manhattan resident and member of the dance group.

Also scheduled to perform is the musical group Trio Aztlan. The group's performance will include Latino party music.

"Music and dance are an important element of hispanic life," Grabhorn said. "The night will get people to socialize and to learn about other hispanic cultures."

DB92FM 91.9 also will feature a program from 4-5 p.m. on Sunday with an international forum of topics related to the different Hispanic cultures.

The program will include a panel of students from Panama, Ecuador, Puerto Rico, Bolivia and Mexico, Baiges said.

The discussion topics will include language differences used, and the variations of music and social life of the different Latino countries.

SOMETHING SPICY

Students gathered around and grabbed a partner as they learned the basic steps to the Salsa and Merengue dances in Union Station Thursday night.

Arleen Baiges, co-director of Puerto Rico Baila and Mike Bennett, graduate student in counseling, led students in the dance lessons in conjunction with K-State's Hispanic Awareness Month.

Baiges and Bennett first demonstrated the Salsa and Merengue dances, and then they instructed the students in the steps.

"I've been doing this for 20 years," Bennett said. "It's difficult to do."

Baiges said she first started teaching dances at parties.

A group of friends would get together, and many times people would want to dance, but they did not know how to, she said.

Students danced to Hispanic songs like "Hacer El Amor Con Otro," "Ovedate Conmigo" and "Papi, Tu."

The Spanish Club put the event together along with help from Puerto Rico Baila, a folkloric dance group at K-State.

The dance was not only formed as a part of Hispanic Awareness Month but also to create a friendly atmosphere within the K-State community, said Juan Vera, junior in accounting and president of the Hispanic American Leaders Organization.

"It's teaching people about our culture," Vera said.

Esperanza Andresen, graduate student in modern languages from Colombia, teaches a Spanish class, and she invited her class to the event.

She said many of her students came to the event, and she promised to teach them the dances.

Some students were having trouble with some of the new steps, but Bennett said that was to be expected.

Rex Kindall, sophomore in political science, said he had been stepping on people's feet all night.

Many of the students who attended the event came to learn more about the Hispanic culture.

Mike Flory, senior in management and Spanish, said he became interested in more Hispanic experiences after he attended summer school in Mexico with a Spanish club.

"It's a lot of fun. I just came here to learn a little more about their culture and dancing," he said. "I'm planning on going back next summer."

Cyndy Larson, freshman in pre-med, also spent a summer outside of the states in Guatemala.

"I've been fascinated with the Spanish culture," she said.

Hispanic culture was evident throughout the event, including the clothing.

Lisa Tamayo, junior in advertising, sold T-shirts that read "En la Union Esta la Fuerza," which means "In the union their is strength."

She said HALO was trying to raise money for the event.

HALO will have a dance contest at Latino Night next week. There will be prizes for the first-, second- and third-place winners. Some participants who do not get a prize or who decide not to enter the dance contest will receive Hispanic Awareness Month T-shirts.

Even a small child was fascinated with the big event going on.

Andrew Andresen, the lively 6-year-old son of Esperanza Andresen, said, "Yeah, I'm having a good time. I'm dancing."

Students practice Salsa and Merengue dances in Union Station Thursday evening. More than 30 people attended the lessons, which were sponsored by the Hispanic American Leadership Organization and the Spanish club. The dance instruction was given by the Puerto Rico Baila.

Instead of blaming MTV, child's mother should look in mirror

Last week, an Ohio 5-year-old started a fire that killed his younger sister. Now the child's mother is blaming the MTV series "Beavis and Butt-Head" for introducing her son to fire.

The real question in the Ohio tragedy should concern itself with the 5-year-old's parental supervision. What was a 5-year-old boy doing home alone with matches?

The first episode of the "Beavis and Butt-Head" series appeared last May.

The half-hour program chronicles the lives of two dim-witted, teen-age boys who spend most of their time sitting on a couch and critiquing everything from women to the latest music videos.

Controversy seems to be a constant companion for the series. "Beavis and Butt-Head" T-shirts are being banned from schools all around the country.

Many communities in America, including Kansas, have pulled MTV from their cable listings because of the "Beavis and Butt-Head" series.

MTV has issued a statement denying responsibility for the Ohio tragedy.

Yet, MTV spokeswoman Carole Robinson said all future references to fire by Beavis and Butt-Head will be banned.

To blame a tragedy caused by lack of parental supervision on a TV show is to take an easy way out.

"Probably only one out of 15 of these people has ever read or heard anything he (Pat Robertson) said."
Ed Skoog (Student Body President)
Outside McCain Auditorium
October 12, 1993

Well, the three-ring circus has left town, leaving the ashes of free speech in its wake. Now it's time to sort through what was said, sung and chanted.

Yes, it's true. Fred Phelps does have quite a nice singing voice, and the best part of the protest outside McCain was the dueling round robin that was the Peace and Love singers vs. the Fred Phelps 15. Although the singing was harmonious, it was not easily understood, and therefore much more tolerable.

Meanwhile, the National Organization for Women had the obligatory witches holding a quote by the man himself, Pat Robertson. One of the sane moments seemed to be when Kevyn Jacobs said for everyone to listen to all sides and decide, asking people not to disrupt the lecture.

The lecture itself was slightly anti-climactic, except for the well-placed support groups in the auditorium. I think I received enough of my dose of the "Amen" chorus to last me the rest of my life. It would have been more interesting to see people rolling in the aisles and kissing snakes.

I must say Pat Robertson lived up to and exceeded my expectations of a conservative white evangelical preacher. What disturbed me was the number of people who were so dead set against his speaking here. I guess I shouldn't have been surprised, though. Given the opportunity, even the most liberal of groups will try to prevent freedom of speech on occasion. I know I do, and if anybody has been accused of being part of the "looney left," it's me.

The problem with trying to prevent free speech in any form, from Pat Robertson to the American Civil Liberties Union, is that only part of the message gets out, and that is the part the people in power want you to hear.

And that's when the sins of omission happen.

Say Pat Robertson was the only one to speak and there were no opposing viewpoints. People wouldn't know if he was telling the truth or not. Same with any other speaker, from Jimmy Carter to Gunga Din. With opposing viewpoints, you can find out all the varying facets of the story, then you decide for yourself who to believe.

If you're a well-informed person, you won't be afraid to hear "the rest of the story." (Apologies to Paul Harvey.) You won't feel the need to sign petitions stating you don't want speakers ever brought here who disagree with your views. If you don't listen to people you don't agree with, you don't learn anything.

And if you don't learn anything, you stagnate — or even worse, you believe anything you're told.

And this is the way the people in power want it. They want people to follow along blindly, unquestioningly, never wondering if there is another side to the story. Never asking if there were arms sales for hostages, why the governor unilaterally decided to have gambling casinos on reservation land or why students keep losing parking to faculty/staff.

If people don't ask questions or listens to both sides of a story, they don't know what the full story is. They are ignorant.

And, most importantly, they are wrong.

I didn't buy season tickets for my health

Editor,

I was at the University of Kansas/K-State game last Saturday along with 44,000 other Wildcat fans, and I'll tell you something — it sure seemed like all 44,000 fans were in the student section at the stadium.

It's a bunch of crap that there are only two sections for the students at the football game. I bought season tickets, and damn it, I expect to get into the student section and not be forced to stand at the end of the field during the whole damn game. It pisses me off that people feel it's OK to plop their asses in the student section even though they don't belong there.

Why can't they make different-colored tickets for the student sections and enforce the tickets with some ushers who actually do their jobs instead of the people in yellow shirts who stand around and do nothing.

I know it doesn't cost too much to have two separate tickets for students and people in assigned seating; they can get location slips for students and tickets for assigned seats. It doesn't cost a lot. Even if it did, they charge $105 for season tickets, and that times at least 1,000 is $105,000. That's ample to help alleviate the problem.

Why has this never been addressed? I think it's because the people in charge don't give a damn. They're too busy counting all the money we shell out at games to worry about the same people who pay their salaries and keep the team supported. You know it's bad when we play crappy teams such as University of Nevada/Las Vegas and Western Kentucky and it's way too crowded.

Another thing is, where in the hell are all of the security guards during these games? There were at least six fights in the area I ended up in, and there were five guards at the gates arresting some guy for painting a chicken. Give me a break! Are animals more important than the well-being of us?

At other times, the security guards were laughing with the spectators and not giving a damn about what was happening around them.

This must stop — all of it. If you feel the same, write to the Collegian and Student Senate, and tell them how you feel!

▶ GOALPOSTS

Wasting so much cash doesn't score points

Editor,

I would like to say something about the carrying away of the goalposts after the football game last Saturday.

I think the important thing is not "Where, or when do the goalposts go?" but "Why do they have to go?" Almost every student I met on Monday was talking about the football game in which the Cats ate the "Chicken." However, when the conversation went to the goalposts, it seemed no one had a reasonable explanation about why they did that. In addition, I was very surprised when I heard it costs about $5,000 to replace the goalposts and that the Athletic Department pays for them.

It might not be big money in light of the size of all the expenditures of K-State; however, when some of the K-State students are working hard to earn less than $5 an hour to pay rent and tuition, it is big money.

Someone might say I don't understand because I was born and reared in a different culture. It is not a matter of cultural difference. I do not believe all of the American students will fully support the irrational behavior even if they do not know a part of their fees is going to be spent for it.

I am one of the K-State students who love to see the Cats play. Nevertheless, I cannot understand why the goalposts should go, wasting such a lot of money.

Faith in God doesn't exercise your gray cells

Editor,

I am writing in response to John Hart's column in the Oct. 13 Collegian.

First, spiritual renewal is not a need of America. It is a need of Americans. Spiritual renewal by nature implies renewal by a specific religion, and for America, the country, to be spiritually renewed would violate the First Amendment.

Second, government's purpose is not to fulfill spiritual issues, but to resolve conflicts and protect the views and opinions of all citizens. In fact, the government protects Mr. Hart's right to have his opinion and protects the rest of us from having the likes of Mr. Hart and Mr. Robertson impose their spiritual opinions upon the rest of us who have the ability to think for ourselves. Religion has no place in government except within the individuals who make up that government.

Third, I must state Jim Slattery was wrong when he said, "There isn't anything anti-intellectual about faith in Christ." This is because faith (in Christ, and hence God) by nature is anti-intellectual. If it were not, then the miracle of faith would be non-miraculous, entirely rational, and intellectuals would unanimously agree that Christianity is the one true religion.

It is so obvious we face incredibly difficult problems in our nation today. The longer we hold onto the artificial dream of solving our problems through spiritual institutions, the longer we will continue our cycle of despair.

I'm not satisfied with allowing suffering to be the force that unites us as Americans. By putting our faith in ourselves and renewing the foundation of freedom of our personal lives and then in our nation, we can turn our suffering into perseverance, perseverance into character and character into hope.

Thankfully, the American Constitution and the Bill of Rights protect our hopes to remain able to worship as we please, without would-be tyrants imposing their values on us. The opinions of all shall be heard before problems are solved, and when they are solved, no one shall have their rights diminished.

Surprise: We live in an inter-IQ world

Editor,

In the Oct. 12 edition of the Collegian, columnist Sara Smith expressed her feelings on what she called "inter-IQ dating." Now, I would like to share on Ms. Smith's column and sadly admit I go to a school where such a narrow-minded and cynical student is allowed to write for the campus paper. I guess every paper has to have someone on staff like this to keep things interesting.

I have read many of Ms. Smith's columns, and a few have been almost worthy of publishing. However, this latest one, along with the article on perfume and advertising, belongs in the miscellaneous trash file.

Talk about a slow news day. One must really be pressing a deadline to come up with a piece on choosing a friend or date because they have a lower IQ than oneself.

If we all had the same IQ, this world would be as dull as Ms. Smith's world. I have many friends and acquaintances who have a lower or higher IQ than myself. Yet, when I look at our relationship, IQ isn't even a factor. And I don't get an ego boost knowing some of my friends have a lower IQs than I do. Most people don't pick their friends or dates by IQ, but rather by personality.

Ms. Smith, I am sorry your life is so boring you spend your time writing such nauseating articles. Here is my advice to you — get an enema, and get a date.

▶ PERIODICAL CUTS

Endowments might give "lasting value"

Editor,

In the Oct. 13 Collegian article titled "Faculty Senate opposes cuts in periodicals," the dean of Farrell Library is reported to have stated, "It is difficult to raise money from alumni for something like periodicals because they would rather put money in things of lasting value." Well, if periodicals are not of lasting value, why do we have stacks and stacks of bound periodicals going back many years in our library?

Why don't we instantly make periodicals have "lasting value" by soliciting endowments for periodicals and prominently displaying the endowers' names in the cover when the periodicals are bound?

▶ PERIODICAL CUTS

Is this how we improve the library system?

Editor,

Can students at this institution be so blind not to see what the central administration is doing to their library system? Are you gullible enough to believe the tuition hike you voted for last year is really going to improve your library system?

The truth is that again Farrell Library is being forced to make cuts totaling more than $200,000 from periodicals and serials alone, at a time when we should be experiencing real growth in access to new technologies. The fact is K-State's library system is ranked at the bottom of all Big Eight schools, and this latest move will irrevocably entrench us in that position.

It is a disgrace this library system, so vital to the well-being of our University, can be allowed to assume a second-rate status, which apparently is unacceptable for our other "scholarly" activities. Administrators, alumni, faculty and students so committed to excellence should not allow our library system take these additional hits.

▶ GUN CONTROL

Legislation needs to shoot for restriction

Editor,

In response to Glenn Pendlay's Oct. 13 letter regarding gun control, I feel there is a need to separate the facts from Mr. Pendlay's opinions.

First, almost one-third of all murders in which guns are used are cases of domestic violence, not the act of some lifelong criminal. Most guns used in these impulse crimes are purchased legally and easily by anyone, regardless of prior record.

Secondly, assuming guns are outlawed and U.S. domestic production ends, gun prices will soar, not decline as Mr. Pendlay would like you to think.

Unlike drugs and alcohol, where people could easily and cheaply cultivate or distill their own supply, guns require costly metal casting along with precision calibration, which is not very practical for the home do-it-yourselfer. By reducing the supply, society will be be able to keep guns out of the hands of potential assailants, especially the growing number of juvenile offenders who find it very easy to come by a gun today.

Mr. Pendlay also finds it ironic that the states with the lowest crime rates are those with the least amount of gun regulation. The comparison of these low crime states (Idaho, Iowa, Maine, Montana, North Dakota and South Dakota) with high crime areas is flawed by nature.

One cannot compare the amount of crime in these states, which have a total population of 7.1 million people, to New York City, with a population of 7.3 million in almost 600-percent less area.

Population density influences all factors of life, especially crime. The correlation of gun-control policies to crime rates is not that in which high crime results from these policies; rather, these policies result from high crime. To believe gun-control policies are the only solution would be overlooking the root causes of crime in our society.

Therefore, to conclude that crime has increased in these states despite the strict regulations is misleading. Crime rates have grown substantially slower than the national average where strict regulations have been implemented. In fact, per capita, crime is growing much faster in rural communities, which largely lack gun-control legislation, than in urban areas. Topeka, for example, recorded their 111th shooting of 1993 on Monday, a new record, despite having three months remaining in this year. Topeka now has a higher crime rate, per person, than cities such as San Diego and Denver.

Guns are not a deterrent to crime, nor do they make one any safer. In a study that was released last week in the New England Journal of Medicine, it was found that "people keeping guns to protect themselves nearly triple their chances of being murdered." This is not the first study to conclude guns at home only lead to more violence, not less.

Legislation needs to emphasize gun restrictions, not the contrary. If the National Rifle Association were so supportive of waiting periods and background checks, then they should have backed a bill that was debated by Congress nearly two years ago that would have achieved such a policy. Instead, they bullied legislators to kill the measure and spent countless millions of dollars in the process.

Finally, if the boy in Louisiana who was accidentally shot by an armed homeowner on his way to a Halloween party because he knocked on the wrong door, or the growing number of similar victims, are the "criminals" Mr. Pendlay is so proud of having been killed by armed civilians, then I can think of no greater argument for gun control.

REGENTS

Board of Regents approves Washburn budget

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The Kansas Board of Regents unanimously recommended a 7.2-percent, $457,000 increase in state funding for the Washburn University 1995 budget.

"We will live with whatever the Board of Regents recommends," Hugh Thompson, president of Washburn, said prior to Thursday's vote.

The University had requested an 11.6-percent increase. The lower increase was based roughly on the increases of other regional universities (Pittsburg, Emporia and Fort Hays).

Washburn's budget is reviewed annually by the regents, but the University is not controlled by the board.

In other business, the regents reviewed 20th-day enrollment figures.

The regents schools had a .9-percent drop in students this fall. K-State, Wichita State and the University of Kansas all had slight enrollment decreases.

There were slightly fewer freshmen, sophomores and juniors at the regents universities. The number of seniors and graduate students increased slightly.

The regents voted to ask for a $1.9-million supplement from the state to make up for the drop in tuition revenues.

"As more and more of our financial base comes from tuition, enrollment has a more significant effect," Ray Hauke, regents financial adviser, said.

Hauke said estimates based on 1993 enrollment figures predict a slight decline in enrollment again next fall and then an upswing the following year as the anticipated number of high school graduates increases.

Considering these projections, he suggested the regents delay a plan to change tuition to per-credit-hour pricing in 1995.

Per-credit-hour pricing would result in an estimated $3.8-million decrease per year in tuition revenue for the regents universities, Hauke said.

The per-credit-hour pricing plan will be considered by the regents at the next meeting.

The board also re-evaluated budget priorities for 1995.

Faculty salary increases were given No. 2 priority under the basic operating budget. A $1.3-million program to attract minority graduate teaching assistants to the regents schools was part of that budget recommendation.

Regent Rick Harman moved to prioritize the minority program. He said programs to attract more minority professors had not been too successful, adding it was time to take another approach.

"Our minority faculty representation is practically zero," Harman said. "This way, we can grow some of our own faculty members."

On a matter relating to K-State, the board approved $317,000 for K-State to purchase land for the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station.

The purchases would consist of 80 acres in Shawnee County and 120 acres in Labette County that the University now leases.

The purchase will be financed over 10 years and will be paid for through restricted fees and the KSU Foundation.

Regents chairman John Montgomery said the search for a new executive director for the regents has been narrowed down to five people. He said the search committee should have a recommendation for the position at the November regents meeting.

Kansan speaks on Hispanic issues

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

One of the featured speakers of Hispanic Awareness Month was chosen partly because she is from Kansas.

Eva Pereira will speak at 3:30 p.m. Monday in the K-State Union Little Theatre.

Pereira, the first female director of the Kansas Advisory Committee on Hispanic Affairs, will speak on the topic of "Background, History and Profile on Hispanic Kansas."

Laura Grabhorn, coordinator for Multicultural Student Organizations, said the lecture will give historical background, current issues and future trends for Hispanics in Kansas.

Speakers were selected by a committee of people who organized the entire month's activities, including the speakers.

"The committee looked for speakers who could talk about cultural elements, demographics and political elements in Hispanic life," Grabhorn said.

"They also wanted someone who would be of interest to the widest possible number of students on campus," she said.

Pereira has been involved with several different organizations and is currently involved with the United Way of Topeka and the Kansas Citizens' Committee on Alcohol and Other Drug Abuse.

"One of the reasons Eva was selected to speak was because she is a Kansan," Grabhorn said.

"Since most of the students on campus are from Kansas, we thought they might be interested in what she has to say," she said.

Grabhorn said Pereira's position here in Kansas made her a good candidate to be a speaker for Hispanic Awareness Month.

"We wanted to focus on Kansas issues, not just those of national interest," Grabhorn said.

"Since all of this is going on at K-State, we felt it was important to have someone from the state committee come and speak here," she said.

One of the goals of the Awareness Month is to educate people about Hispanic issues and get them interested in what is around them.

Cats' next test: No. 6 Nebraska

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State coach Bill Snyder is a realist.

Even though K-State sports an unblemished record, Snyder said it will take a concentrated effort and a few miscues by Nebraska to come out of Lincoln with a win.

The Cats (5-0) travel to Lincoln, Neb., Saturday to face the No. 6-ranked Cornhuskers. Kickoff is set for 1 p.m. at Memorial Stadium.

"We're going to have to play extremely well," Snyder said. "We'll have to have some good fortune, and Nebraska will have to stub their toe a time or two.

"I have great respect for our football team, but I also know that Nebraska certainly is one of the finest football teams in the country."

Both teams are 5-0, with Nebraska leading the series 65-10-2. The Cats' last win was 25 years ago, a 12-0 victory at Lincoln.

What exactly is it that separates the two programs?

"Five-thousand wins, I think," Snyder said. "It's the tradition and how the program has been built and the consistency of the program and just the fact that it is very paramount in college football right now."

The two teams met last year in the final game of the regular season in the Coca-Cola Bowl in Tokyo. Nebraska jumped out to a 21-0 lead and held on for a 38-24 win.

The victory marked the Cornhuskers' 24th-straight nine-win season and established them as the Big Eight champions.

"I think, physically, it's a mismatch in certain respects," Snyder said of Saturday's contest.

"They've got six guys that they can line up across their offensive line that are 300-pounders, and we lost most of our big guys," Snyder said. "Most of the ones we do have are on offense, but we don't have that kind of size or brute strength, so we're going to have to supplement that in some other ways."

Snyder did say the Cats' team speed, along with some seemingly built-in features, might be used to avoid the overpowering Huskers.

"I'd like to think that some intrinsic things will come into play because we don't have some of the physical tools they possess," he said. "Can we do it for 75 or 80 snaps in a ballgame? I don't know. We'll find out real quick.

"I'd like to think that we'll be able to do it because our players want to and because they will fight and scrap and won't give up."

Wide receiver Andre Coleman said this K-State team differs from previous years.

"We are definitely confident that we can win," said Coleman, who scored the only touchdown in the Cats' 10-9 win against Kansas. "In the past, I think K-State teams have gone up against the big three (Nebraska, Oklahoma and Colorado) and just keep it close, deep down not thinking they could win.

"This year, I don't think it's a question if we can win," Coleman said. "We know we are capable of beating them. It's right out there to grab. We just have to go out there and do it."

Coleman said that if the Cats play sporadically Saturday, they might not be as fortunate as the last five weeks.

"We just need to be able to put together four quarters of football," he said. "We've played in spurts all year, and it's been good enough to win. I don't think if we play in spurts this week it will be good enough to win."

Nebraska leads the Big Eight in scoring offense, averaging 43 points per game, while K-State ranks fourth with 29.6 points per contest.

Nebraska's 27-13 win against Oklahoma State last Thursday marked the first time quarterback Tommy Frazier and running back Calvin Jones played a full game together.

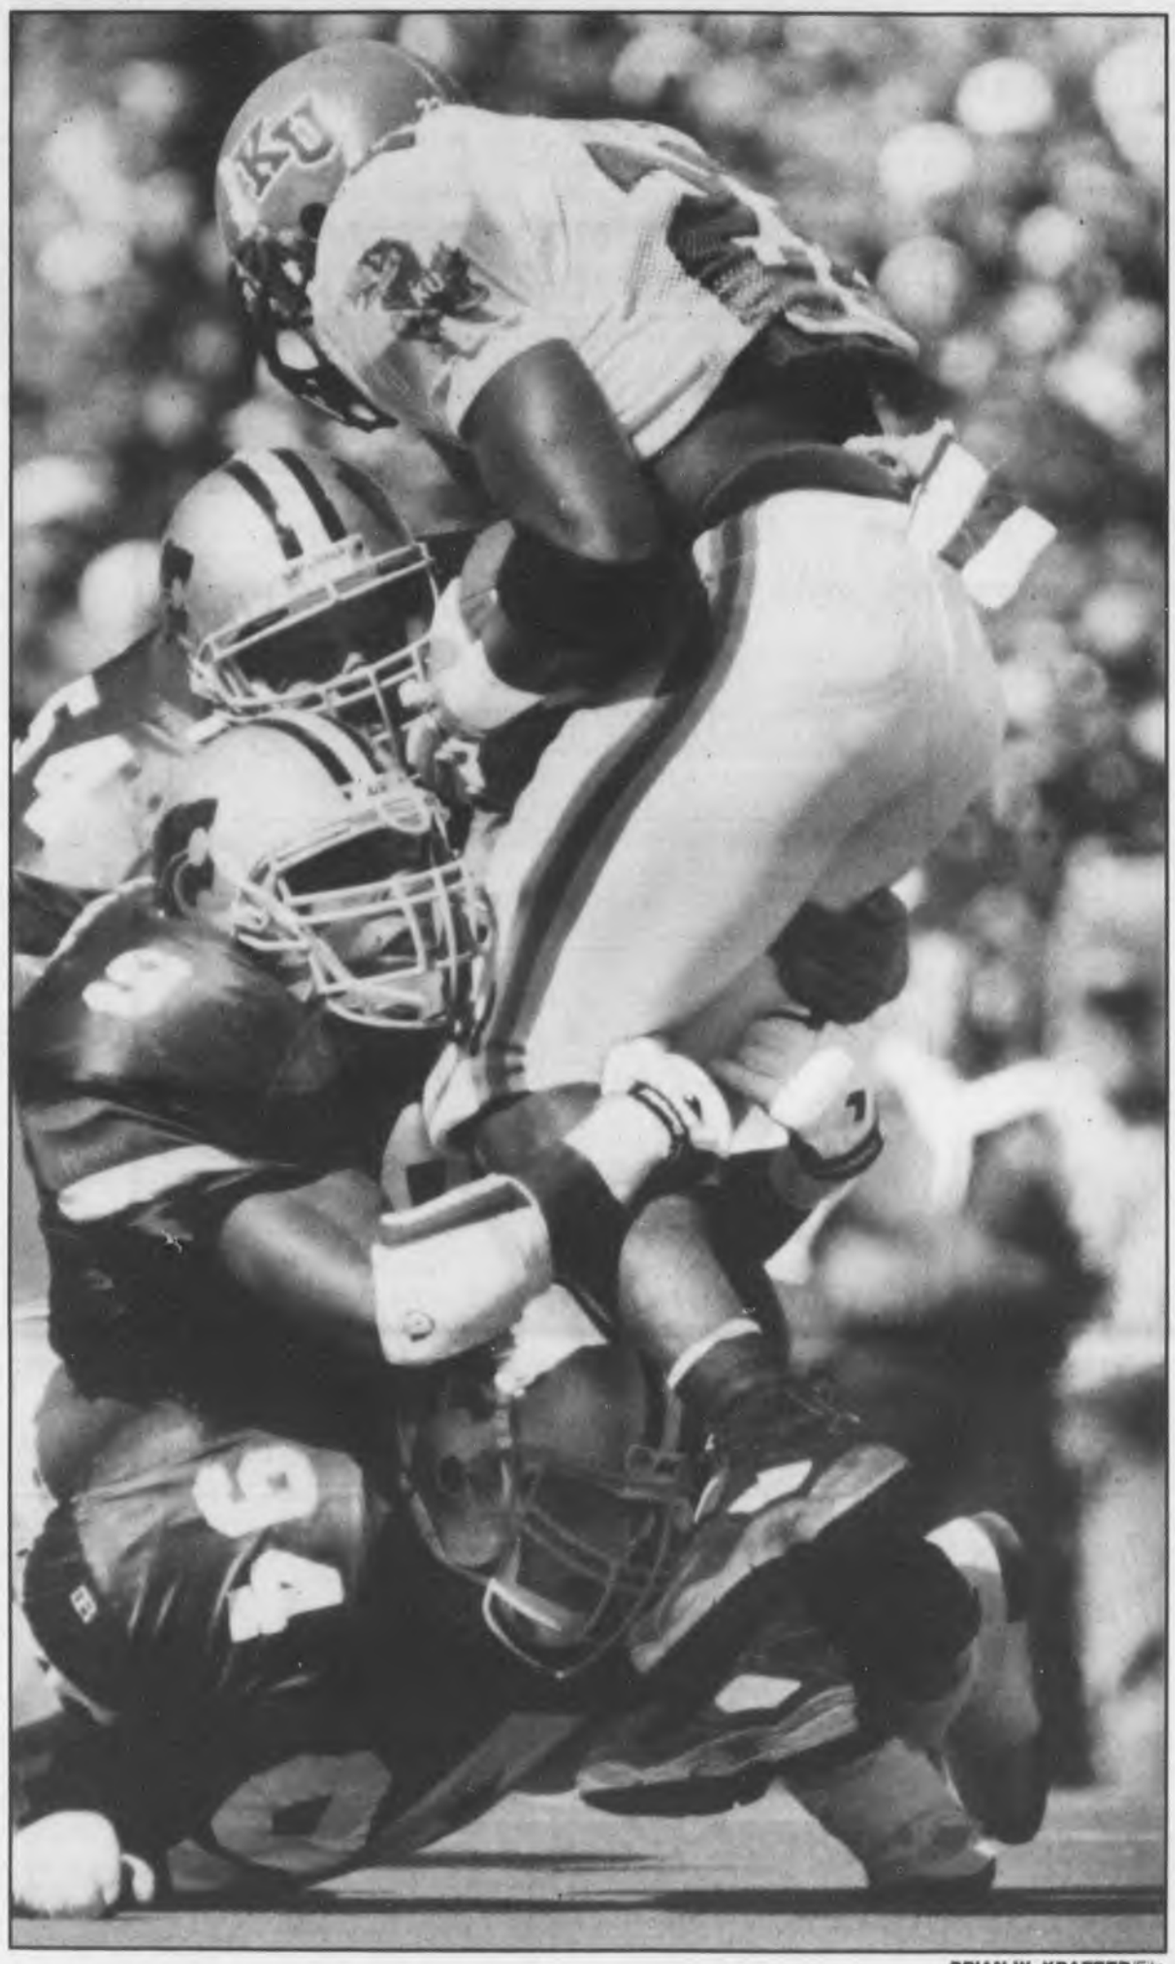
Frazier went down in the first game of the year with a sprained ankle, and Jones is recovering from the same injury.

"Calvin Jones is as fine of a running back as they've had there," Snyder said. "Tommy Frazier offers as great a threat as any quarterback they've had there. I don't see any glitches in their armor right now."

Defensively, K-State is in second place, allowing 15.4 points per game. Nebraska ranks fourth, allowing 16 points.

Nebraska coach Tom Osborne, who is now the nation's winningest active coach with a 200-46-3 record, said he isn't sure how good his Huskers really are yet.

"It seems kind of strange after five weeks to still be saying you really don't know how good you are, but I'm afraid we're in that position," Osborne said. "I'm kind of anxious to see how well we can play."



Osborne said he foresees another hard-fought battle.

"I expect to be involved in another very tough ballgame," he said. "Their quarterback is playing well. They've got some receivers that are excellent players, and their running back is playing well. We think they are a very good football team."

Snyder said any questions about what the Cats can and can't do should be resolved in the next three weeks. After the Nebraska game Saturday, K-State returns to Manhattan to play No. 20 Colorado followed by No. 9 Oklahoma.

The Cats went through the same series in 1991, losing all three games.

"I think this stretch of games will create some answers for us," Snyder said.

Realignment of baseball divsions a plus

With the World Series teams now decided, it seems an opportune time to take a look at how things are going to be this same time next year.

It is generally accepted by most baseball purists that baseball's realignment of divisions and expanded playoff system are going to have detrimental effects on the game. I am not so sure.

BOB LEHMAN

I am as much a baseball purist as anyone. I think pitchers should bat for themselves. I think there is no adequate replacement for natural turf. I believe Wrigley Field is the most natural setting for a baseball game, right up until the Chicago Cubs come out of the dugout.

Because of my traditional leanings, realignment isn't a big deal to me. Baseball is still going to be baseball. That is what is important. There isn't a whole lot that is going to change except for how teams are listed in the newspaper.

Under the present system, the objective is to go out every day and beat the other team. This primary quality will not change. You are still going to have to beat everyone else to win your division and get into the postseason.

As far as not seeing any great pennant races like we saw this past season any more, that's probably true. But there will be races. Races to get into the playoffs will still happen. There will still be races for the top spot in each division, and there will be a secondary race for that fourth at-large playoff spot.

What it comes down to is this: when the season winds down, the competition to get into the playoffs will intensify. That's what happens now, isn't it?

It is also true certain divisional rivalries no longer will exist. That is a shame, but it is not the end of a great part of baseball.

A rivalry is still a rivalry. Whether that other team is in your division doesn't really matter. You still want to beat them just as much. Perhaps divisional standings will not be at stake, but pride will be.

Would we want to beat KU any less if either of us were no longer in the Big Eight?

Is anyone else sick and tired of seeing the Toronto Blue Jays and the Atlanta Braves every October? I know I am. The expanded playoffs will allow two more deserving teams to vie for their respective league pennants.

The addition of San Francisco or Texas to this year's fray would have made things interesting.

Expanded playoffs also make the road to the World Series more demanding. Having to survive an extra five-game series forces a team to to prove itself all the more worthy of the title World Champion.

These three extra victories also will cause managers to do their jobs better. Knowing you have to win 11 games instead of eight will cause change in strategy throughout the playoffs. This inevitably will make things more interesting to watch.

All in all, I think this realignment deal will turn out to be a positive move for baseball.

Besides, all these same things had to be discussed when divisional play first started in 1969. Baseball survived that change, and it will survive this one for the same reason.

It's baseball.

The K-State/Ed Chartrand Soccer tournament will take place this weekend at Frank Anneberg Park in Manhattan.

Chartrand, who passed away in 1979, was on the soccer team while he was at K-State, and his family started the tournament in his memory.

Competing in the tournament will be a team from each of the Big Eight schools and a team consisting of former K-State players.

The tournament will be a round robin, with the championship game scheduled for 2 p.m. on Sunday.

Contributions from spectators will go to Big Brothers and Big Sisters.

The Missouri Tigers have provided the only competition for the soccer team so far this season, as the Cats recorded a 3-2 victory.

Last year, the Cats finished the season with a 6-0 record.

This weekend's 15th-annual tournament includes teams from K-State, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa State, Oklahoma State, Iowa, Oklahoma and a special K-State Alumni Soccer team.

The evening exposition games will also feature play by K-State's women's Soccer Club.

Community volunteers along with K-State's Delta Upsilon fraternity and Alpha Chi Omega sorority are leading the fund-raising efforts.

CROSS COUNTRY

Long weekend ahead for coach

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Coach Terry Drake will log plenty of miles this weekend when his men's and women's cross country teams go separate ways.

Starting Friday afternoon, Drake will leave for Ankeny, Iowa, for the Iowa State University Classic where his men's squad will compete at 11:15 a.m. Saturday.

He will be dropped off at Des Moines International Airport where he will board an airplane bound for Philadelphia. He will reach his final destination, University Park, Pa., at about midnight.

The women's cross-country team will be competing in the Penn State Invitational on Sunday.

"It is definitely going to be a long weekend," Drake said.

However, it could be a fast weekend for the harriers. The men will face a 10-team field that includes Iowa State, ranked second in the nation, as well as District V, and conference foes Northern Iowa and Oklahoma.

"I'll see what the conference competition will be," Francis O'Neill, K-State runner, said. "We have only seen one team so far."

Teams from Michigan State, Mississippi, Illinois State, North Dakota State and Southwest Missouri State will round out the field.

"Iowa State should be in front," Billy Wuggazer, K-State runner, said. "It will be interesting to see. I still hope to compete well."

Topping off the Wildcats' worries, David Haskell, the team's No. 2 runner, will be out for the rest of the season with a knee injury. Drake said no positive diagnosis has been made yet, but a torn anterior cruciate is suspected.

The women, who are ranked 25th in the nation, will face fifth-ranked Penn State, 14th-ranked Georgetown and 16th-ranked Cornell Sunday.

"I feel like this meet will help us going into the conference meet next weekend," Paulette Staats, K-State runner, said.

The women are coming off their second-straight, first-place finish at the Oklahoma State Jamboree. Staats led the way by finishing third. She ran the 5,000-meter trail in 17 minutes and 46 seconds.

"It was nice to get the win, and I feel we made the statement that we are a team to be reckoned with," Drake said.

"I feel ready to go," Megan McGrath, K-State runner, said. "It's all coming together now."

'Look, Ma — no fear, no teeth, no brains!'

Defying age, his children and, more importantly, common sense, S.L. Potter recently bungee jumped from a 210-foot tower.

Then he asked for his teeth back.

Potter, who is 119 years old, was hoping to become the world's oldest bungee jumper.

Potter's children, who range in age from 68 to 74, opposed the jump. They feared Dad would actually die in flight and might even be harboring a death wish.

In fact, Potter himself seemed a bit unsure.

"If I die, I die," he said prior to the jump.

And in what Weekend has rated the most gruesome quote of the year, Potter said afterwards, "I told everybody to bring a shovel and a mop, just in case."

After the big event, he simply asked for his teeth back (he had decided at the last minute to jump sans dentures.)

"I'm going home to go to bed," he said.

Weekend has no desire to know what a 119-year-old bungee jumper does there.

No one accused him of eating like a King

Elvis Presley's four basic food groups, it would appear, were meat, vegetables, tobacco and over-the-counter drugs.

Elvis' dietary needs are the topic of "The Life and Cuisine of Elvis Presley," a no-rolls-barred account of the food that composed the King's meals. It was put together by an avid Elvis fan who invested his time and effort (far too much, perhaps) to such essential research.

Elvis had a list of items that were to be kept in the Graceland kitchen "AT ALL TIMES — EVERY DAY."

- At least six cans of biscuits.
- Cans and cans of sauerkraut (don't ask).
- At least three bottles of milk.
- Potatoes and onions.
- Fresh, lean, unfrozen ground-round meat.
- Gum (Spearmint, Doublemint, Juicy Fruit — three each).
- Cigars.
- Cigarettes.
- Dristan.
- Super Anahist.
- Contac.
- Sucrets (antibiotic red box, of course).

The King's favorite dessert was Del Monte fruit cocktail with coconut flakes, raisins and mini-marshmallows. His favorite snacks included Brownies, Girl Scout cookies, Eskimo Pies and Nutty Buddies.

Suddenly, it's easier to understand why Elvis — at 5 feet, 11 inches — had a not-so-svelte 255-pound frame when he died.

There's Hope for em all

Not to be outdone in the "I Have No Life — Why Don't I Write a Senseless Book?" department is Arthur Marx, son of Groucho.

It seems that Bob Hope, he of the 59-year marriage, led quite an extensive life outside of the friendly confines some folks call matrimony.

"Hope and Bing Crosby used to trade girlfriends," Marx wrote. "You know — the bimbo, one-night stand types so common in studio lots.

"If Crosby found a girl he thought was particularly good in bed, he'd promptly introduce her to Hope, and vice versa."

Want more?

"It's believed that Bob Hope has made love to more beautiful women than Errol Flynn, my Uncle Chico and Bing Crosby combined," Marx wrote.

Wait a minute. Wouldn't the above comment insinuate that "Uncle Chico" actually made love to beautiful women? Uncle Chico?

Scary thought.

A. "Yeah."
Q. What are you doing at the library tonight?
A. "I came to work. I came with my study group, and I better go back. I better make my call and go back (I love you, too)."
Q. Well, who were you calling?
A. "I have to call a friend who has a car. I have to do my groceries. I have to ask somebody if they can give me a ride to the shopping center so I can get some groceries."
Q. You would mean the grocery store and not the shopping center, right?
A. "That's right (maniacal laughter here). Unless I want to eat clothes and televisions."
Q. Well...
A. "(to somebody else) Hey – the Collegian is talking to me over here!"
Q. I don't know if that's something to brag about. Was that your study group?
A. "Yes. I have to go."
Q. Well, you have fun tonight with your study group and at the grocery store.

LOOK INTO MY EYES

Greg Potter dispels myths about hypnotism

STORY BY: STEPHANIE FUQUA DESIGN & ILLUSTRATION BY: BRITTON HARPER

A gold pocket watch dangles in front of your eyes, back and forth, back and forth. A voice comes out of the dark room.

"You're eyelids feel heavy. You are getting very, very sleepy."

The watch becomes a blur, and the evil hypnotist plants suggestions into your subconscious.

This scene, often displayed in the movies and on stage, is how most people typically picture hypnotism.

Hollywood, however, does not mirror reality.

Here's reality:

A corner office. The furniture is familiar, slightly dinged, slightly nicked. It contains things found in a family room. An overstuffed couch and mauve recliner dominate the room. A portrait of an eagle flying hangs on the wall next to inspirational phrases.

No black cape is in sight. The hypnotist wears a dress shirt, tie and slacks. He has a master's degree in psychology from Pittsburg State and got his doctorate in counseling from K-State. His name is Greg Potter.

You lean back in the recliner as Potter talks to you. As you imagine and relax, your eyes slowly close. He talks. You gradually slip into a trance.

"We create a safe environment, a trusting environment," Potter said. "Then I assist the person in focusing their attention. I enlist cooperation and spark the imagination."

Hypnosis in a nutshell. Get those four ingredients together, in a clinician's office or driving down the highway, and a person enters into hypnosis, Potter said. Hypnotism is a natural state, he said. A state that people spontaneously enter six or seven times a day.

"If you've ever caught yourself staring at a window and your mind was 1,000 miles away, then you've entered into a trance," Potter said.

Potter doesn't hypnotize all his clients, nor is hypnotism the basis of his practice. He is a registered counselor who only uses hypnotism in 30-40 percent of his cases. People come to his Poyntz Avenue office for help with stopping smoking, losing weight and dealing with anxieties and phobias.

"Hypnotism has been portrayed in movies and on stage as some magical phenomenon," Potter said. "In working with individuals, I try to diffuse the magic. The more people understand the functioning of their own mind, the better they are able to use trance states."

But how does hypnotism work? Good question.

Potter stressed that scientists don't know how hypnotism works. Instead, he offered a metaphor.

"Liken your subconscious to a computer. The subconscious takes what you give it. If you give it 'I am no good as a human,' it creates 'I am no good as a human.' Hypnotism alters self image, alters perceptions. As we begin to view ourselves in different ways, it becomes easier to act in those ways."

Although Potter said the gold watch or candle is unnecessary, some traveling hypnotists use those objects to hypnotize volunteers from an audience. This is showmanship, Potter said.

Is that real hypnotism? It depends on who you talk to, Potter said.

"Anytime you get in a situation like that, there's going to be some hypnotism, because its a natural mindset," Potter said.

A stage show is comparatively easy to do, Potter said. Anyone who has any knowledge of showmanship can do it.

"If I was going to do a stage show, I'd usually begin with some sort of info about hypnosis," Potter said.

He would ask for volunteers from the audience. This gets the more gregarious, more extroverted people on the stage. Then, Potter would explain that some people can't be hypnotized.

"This lets me off the hook," he laughed.

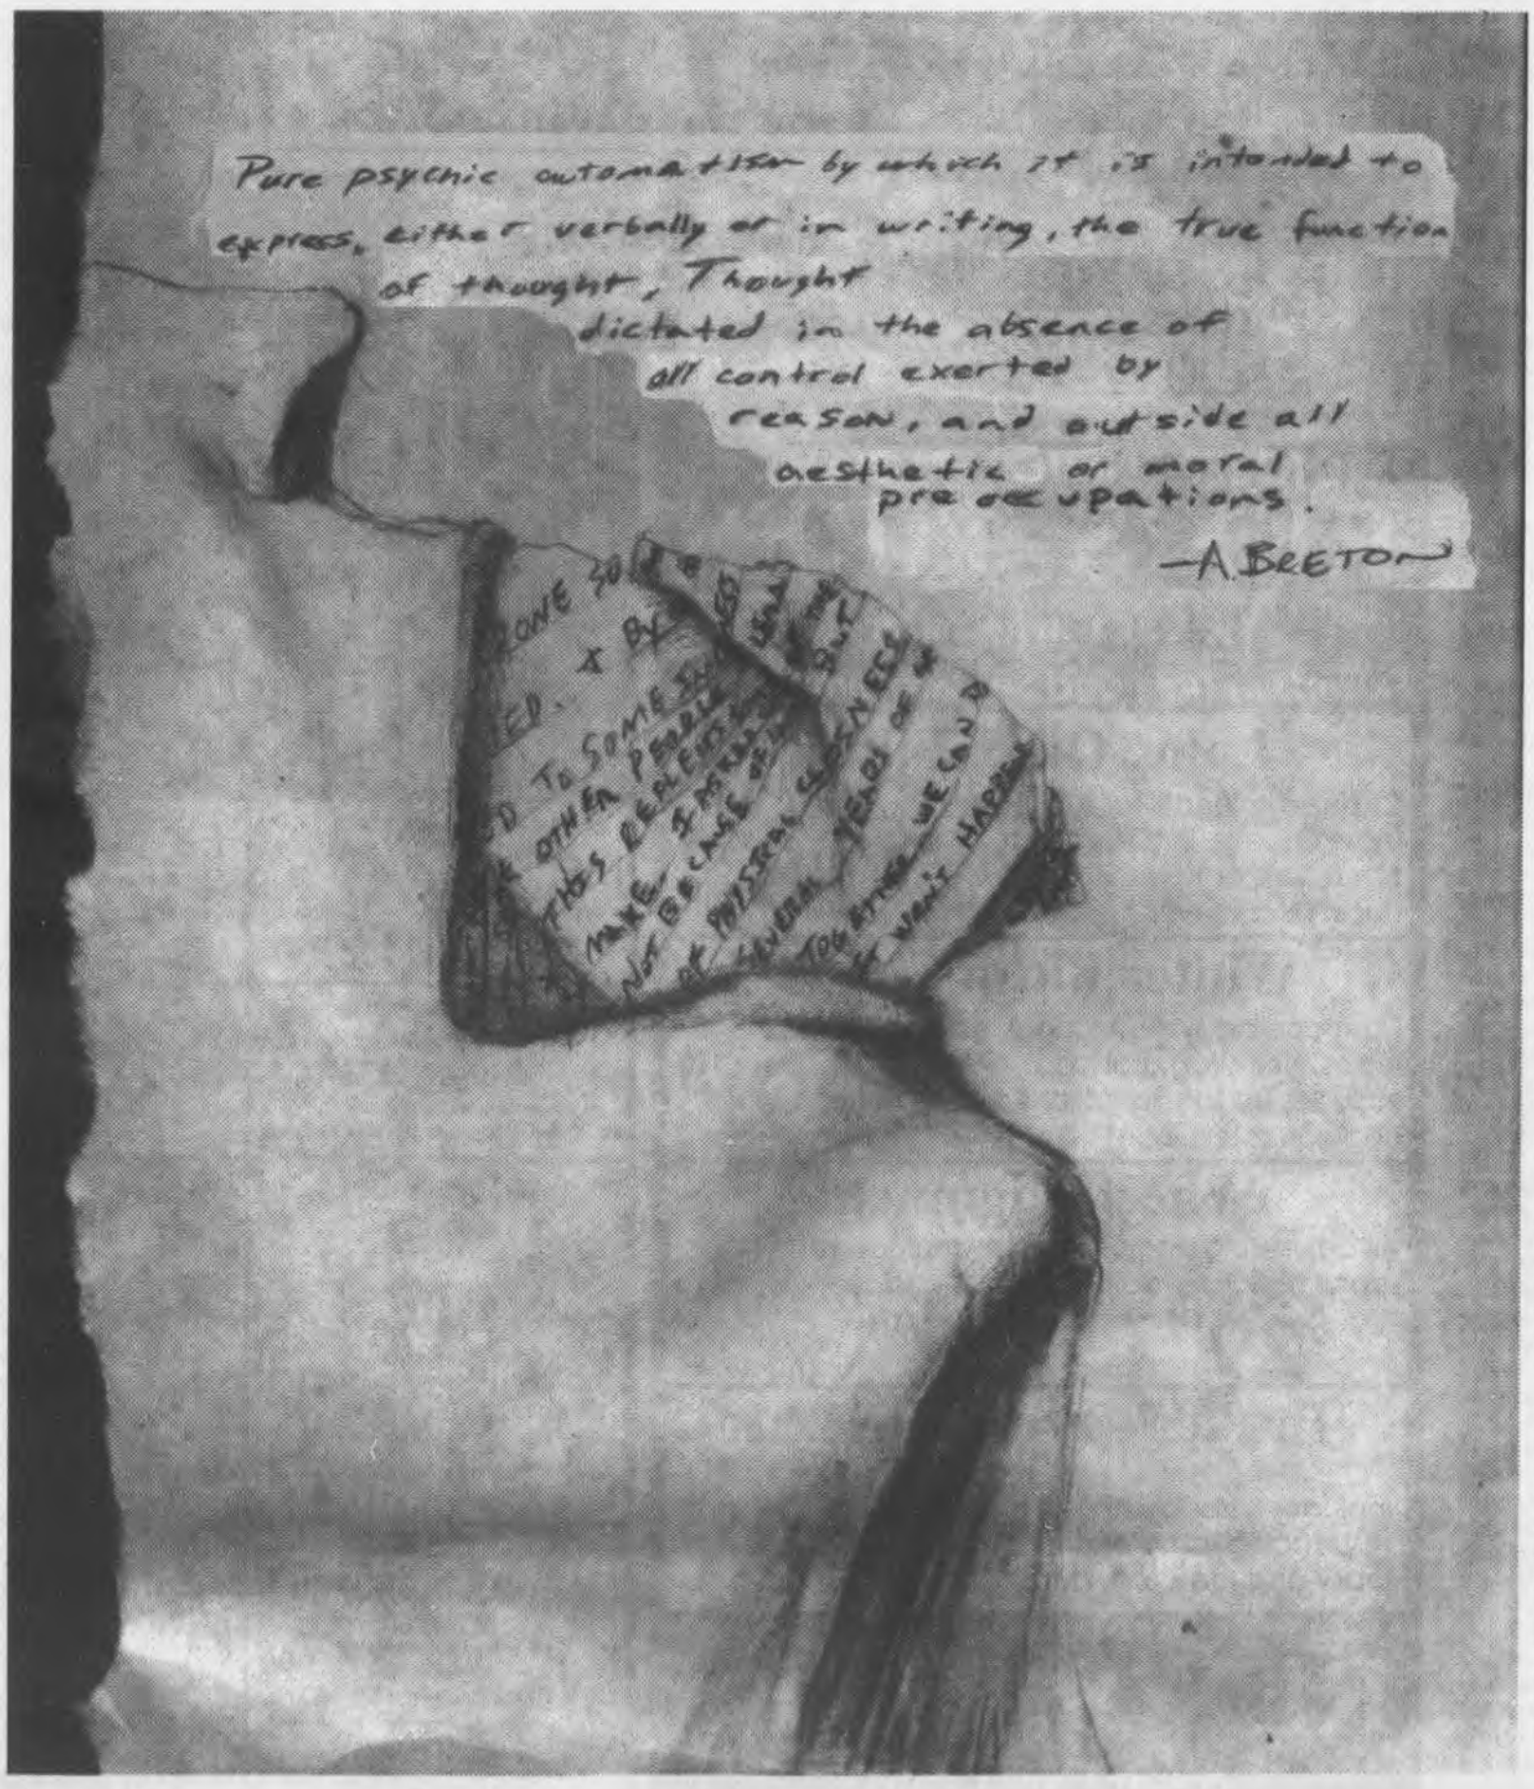
The people then look at a candle or something similar. Potter would start talking, suggesting that their eyelids are getting heavier. The people who are helping too much, the ones whose eyes automatically shut or are wide open, are dismissed.

The rest of the people he would use in the show.

"You could tell these people to jump over a building, and they would give it a good show," Potter said.

Hypnotism shows won't harm people, Potter said.

"Being in hypnosis is safe. Not a lot can happen," Potter said.



Hypnotism shows are a double-edged sword, Potter said.

"It creates an interest in hypnosis. But it creates the wrong image of hypnosis, the image that people control your mind."

The mind is a powerful thing, Potter said.

"I've seen tremendous changes in a rapid period of time. I've seen three-pack-a-day smokers just throw them away.

"Hypnosis is a natural mindset that, used properly and effectively, can be a valuable tool, an effective way to use the brain."

New fraternity, sorority being formed

TORI NIEHOFF
Collegian

Promoting cultural awareness is an emphasis of a newly formed social fraternity and sorority.

Informational meetings for the Hispanic organizations, Sigma Lambda Gamma sorority and Sigma Lambda Beta fraternity, were conducted last spring. The new groups have had several meetings this fall.

"We will be the first chapter in the state of Kansas," said Juan Vera, former president of Sigma Lambda Beta and current president of the Hispanic American Leadership Organization.

The initial chapter was founded at the University of Iowa. The fraternity is a national organization with many chapters nationwide. The sorority is relatively smaller, with four chapters.

Ian Bautista, senior in modern languages, was the founder of both the fraternity and sorority here at K-State. At the Hispanic Leadership Conference last year, he attended an informational meeting about forming a chapter. He said he thought the idea was good and started the process.

There are three stages to become a chapter. The organization first is registered as an interested group. It usually takes 30 additional days to become a colony and another six months to become an official chapter.

Sigma Lambda Gamma sorority will be inducted as an official colony at the 11th annual National Hispanic Leadership conference at the end of this month.

"As a chapter, our goal is to unite all Hispanics and Latin American people by bringing together both those born in the U.S. and Latin America," Jeannette Torres, co-president of Sigma Lambda Gamma, said.

CHAPTER STAGES

- An organization must register as an interested group to become a chapter.
- In 30 days, the group becomes a colony.
- In another six months, it becomes an official chapter.

Members of the brother fraternity, Sigma Lambda Beta, will attend a hearing at this same conference to see if it qualifies as a national interest group.

"The fraternities have more steps and forms to complete, so the formation process for them takes longer," Lisa Tamayo, co-president of Sigma Lambda Gamma, said.

Both organizations plan to have weekly meetings and other activities, including a dinner.

Like all other fraternities and sororities, they too will do community service and philanthropy events.

"We want to promote both cultural and academic awareness," Tamayo said.

Each organization now has about 20 members, and recruiting procedures are still taking place.

"We want to see more Hispanic people together, interacting in a concentrated organization," Juan Bayolo, newly elected president of Sigma Lambda Beta, said.

"There are other Hispanic organizations, but the fraternity and sorority provide a different kind of interaction, with more of a social scene," Vera said.

U.S. committed to Somalia mission

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton said today there was no deal made with Somali warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid to secure the release of Army pilot Michael Durant. The president said it was a mistake for the United States to play the role of police officer in Somalia.

Clinton indicated he was open to a compromise that could halt efforts to arrest Aidid for his role in the killing of 24 Pakistani soldiers.

He said the United States ought to pursue a U.N. resolution calling for the arrest of the person responsible.

"Now, there may be other ways to do it, and I am open to that," he then said. The U.N. resolution doesn't name Aidid, but the U.N. envoy in Somalia has issued an order for Aidid's arrest.

"The U.S. experience in Somalia would make me more cautious about having any Americans in a peacekeeping role when there was any ambiguity at all," the president said.

Durant was released in Mogadishu after being held nearly two weeks by Aidid's forces.

Reacting to the release, Clinton appeared in the White House briefing room and said he had talked to Durant's wife and to U.S. special envoy Robert Oakley. He said Mrs. Durant has had an extended conversation with her husband. He said Durant would be flown to Germany for medical care.

When asked about criticism that his administration was dealing with foreign-policy questions in a naive and disorganized way, Clinton said, "It's easy to second-guess."

He went on to question whether the United States should have become involved in the effort to capture Aidid.

"The United States being a police officer in Somalia was turned into the waging of conflict and a highly personalized battle which undermined the political process," he said.

The president insisted that the United States made no deals to secure the release of Chief Warrant Officer Durant.

Clinton said it was a U.N. decision whether to release 32 Aidid aides captured by U.N. forces. Their release was a condition demanded by Aidid while Durant was being held.

Clinton called the release of Durant one of the hopeful actions that indicated U.S. policy in Somalia was moving in the right direction and making progress.

As for what happens next, he said, "Now we have to maintain our commitment to finishing the job we started."

The United States sent troops to Somalia last December to restore order and alleviate mass starvation. By January, more than 25,000 U.S. troops were in the area. The force was later reduced, but after the killing of 18 American troops in a firefight on Oct. 3, Clinton announced he was sending more than 1,000 additional soldiers.

Clinton said it would be up to Somalis to reestablish a viable government, but we have to give them enough time to have a chance to do that, to have a chance not to see the situation revert to what it was.

Clinton said the United States was not in Somalia to win a military battle. He added that there was no doubt the United States has the ability to wipe out Aidid's forces in Mogadishu, but that is not the mission.

At the Pentagon, one official said Durant was being given medical care but looks pretty good. Officials in Mogadishu said he suffered leg, arm and back injuries.

Clinton heard about Durant's release between 6 and 7 a.m. while getting ready for the jog. A military aide, who had just gotten the word from the White House situation room, told the president.

"The release of Durant is most heartening, and the Pentagon is working to get some of his family members to Germany to greet him upon his arrival from Somalia," Defense Secretary Les Aspin said.

The Pentagon said that Durant, a 32-year-old Blackhawk helicopter pilot, was initially turned over to representatives of the Red Cross, who took him to the Swedish Hospital in Mogadishu.

He was then transferred under Army Ranger escort to a military hospital at the U.S. Embassy compound in Mogadishu, and he is expected to be flown later to the Landstuhl Army Medical Center in Germany.

On Capitol Hill, House Speaker Tom Foley said, "This is very good news, and it indicates, I think, a winding down of the military confrontation in Somalia, with a hope now that further political progress can be made."

The release of Durant ended nearly two weeks in captivity.

Turner's life makes for an inspiring film

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

"What's Love Got To Do With It," is intense and snaring. This event-filled time-line movie brings many emotionally engrossing moments in its journal-like approach to the shaping of rock star Tina Turner.

The movie orchestrates its story to the rousing, big-band blues sound created by Ike Turner and illustrates the shaping of Anna Mae into a big-time music star. The transition was not an easy one, and it illustrates the sometimes high price of fame.

The relationship between Ike and Tina was one plagued with dysfunctions, power struggles and abuse. Some on-screen moments brought emotional tension. The audience witnesses the horror of repeated beatings and emotional abuse. Ike is portrayed as a monstrous, unfeeling man.

"I just believe anything is possible. Everything in life is cause and effect," Tina said.

The story is inspiring as Tina gains the strength and courage to be the star and to leave the abuse behind to create a life all her own.

Ike Turner is portrayed by Laurence Fishburne, who provided an intense and seethingly realistic characterization of Ike. He created a horrifying, demented man incapable of seeing beyond himself. Angela Basset's portrayal was awe-striking. She transformed Anna Mae, a sheltered country girl, to Tina Turner, the worldly, experience-hardened rock star.

NOW SHOWING
■ "What's Love Got To Do With It" is playing at 7 and 9:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday in Union Forum Hall.

Basset and Fishburne worked together to bring the screen to sizzling intensity. There were moments in which every element came together, and the emotions were so painfully real they left from the screen to haunt the audience.

Another highlight of the movie is the on-stage footage. The music is riveting with a prominent brass section blaring, and lively choreography draws in the audience. The vivacious air created caused this reviewer to groove with the tunes.

If anyone is looking for a way to kill a few hours while viewing a good flick, go check this one out.

Clinton redefines role abroad

Deadline set for U.S. troop withdrawal

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON— President Clinton, struggling to define America's role abroad, expressed new caution Thursday about sending forces overseas and said it had been a mistake for Washington to take on a military mission in Somalia from the United Nations.

The United States erred in Somalia by allowing its U.N.-directed assignment to become the waging of conflict and a highly personalized battle which undermined the political process, Clinton said.

"That is what was wrong and that is what we have attempted to correct in the last few days," said Clinton, emphasizing a political settlement is what the United States is promoting rather than the arrest of Mohamed Farrah Aidid.

He said the experiences in Somalia make him more cautious about sending U.S. soldiers overseas unless they're under American command with direct accountability to Washington. Under pressure from Congress, the president has set a March 31 troop-withdrawal deadline for Somalia.

As for other possible deployments, he said any U.S. troops sent as part of a peacekeeping force in Bosnia, for example, would be under the control of NATO, which has an American as its commander.

"It is a much more coherent military operation," the president said. "And I would have a far higher level of confidence about not only the safety of our troops but our ability to deal with that as a NATO operation."

Clinton made his remarks at a news conference as tensions in Somalia eased with the release of American flyer Michael Durant, captured 11 days ago when his helicopter was shot down in Mogadishu in a battle with Aidid's forces.

Clinton said the setbacks in Somalia should not encourage opponents of democracy in Haiti.

He said opponents would be sadly misguided if they thought their resistance — or U.S. problems elsewhere — had weakened his resolve for the return of ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

Clinton pledged to take additional steps to help restore democracy to Haiti and hinted that he might consider some form of naval blockade.

The growing U.S. casualty toll in Somalia, coupled with questions about the use of American force in Bosnia, have raised doubts about Clinton's handling of foreign policy.

However, Clinton said, "We have a good record on issues most important to the United States."

He cited U.S. policy toward Russia, the Middle East and Japan, as well as with Western allies, as examples of success.

"We are living in a new world," the president said. "It's easy for people who don't have these responsibilities to use words like 'naive' or this or that or the other thing.

"The truth is ... we've got to try to chart a course that is the right course for the United States to lead, while avoiding things that we cannot do, or things that impose cost in human and financial terms that are unacceptable for us."

Expressing limits on the U.S. role, Clinton said, "When you're talking about resolving longstanding political disputes, the United States as the world's only superpower is no more able to do that for other people than we were 30 years ago, or 20 years ago."

In a veiled criticism of the Bush administration, Clinton said there was no way American troops could have been withdrawn from Somalia last January, as once promised, because of the political instability there. And the longer the troops stayed, the greater the risks became, Clinton said.

Noting reports that 300 Somalis were killed in recent fights with U.N. forces, Clinton said, "That is not our mission. We did not go there to do that.

"We cannot let a charge we got under a U.N. resolution to do some police work ... to arrest suspects turn into a military mission," the president said.

Lafene sponsors cancer support group

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

The Health Education and Promotion office at Lafene Health Center is willing to sponsor a Cancer Support Group for students who express an interest.

Cindy Burke, a registered nurse and staff assistant in student health, said the group is not currently together because a couple of key members have graduated and moved on.

"If a student would like to be a part of the group, they need to come to the health-education office and express their interest," she said. "We will work with them to advertise the group and get people involved. We would need at least three to five people to get it going."

Burke said the group originally began in the spring of 1992 at the request of a student who had been diagnosed with cancer.

"After he had surgery and came back to school in the spring, he felt he could use a support group," she said. "He didn't feel he could talk to his friends about it all the time."

The group was very unstructured, Burke said, and was not a therapy or counseling session. It was just for personal support and sharing through an open discussion.

"We met once a week for about an hour," she said.

"It was just a time to share personal situations and struggles that each member had faced. This helped each of them get through some difficult times."

Burke said people work through problems at different speeds. Some members who had been through more could help those who were just beginning to go through the feelings.

"The difficulty is that most students see an idea of invincibility in their life," she said. "They don't think that they or someone they know or love might get sick or die. That kind of a revelation could completely disrupt their life."

One of the things Burke said the group wanted to do before it quit meeting was to educate students.

"The group would have liked to put out some flyers and do other things to educate people about cancer," she said. "This might help them so they wouldn't wonder how to get through the problem. It would show help is available, and they aren't alone."

Burke said other options are available to students if they don't want to use a support group, or if the interest wasn't enough to start it.

"I would encourage students to go to University Counseling Services and get help through a counselor," she said.

Shuttle launch delayed

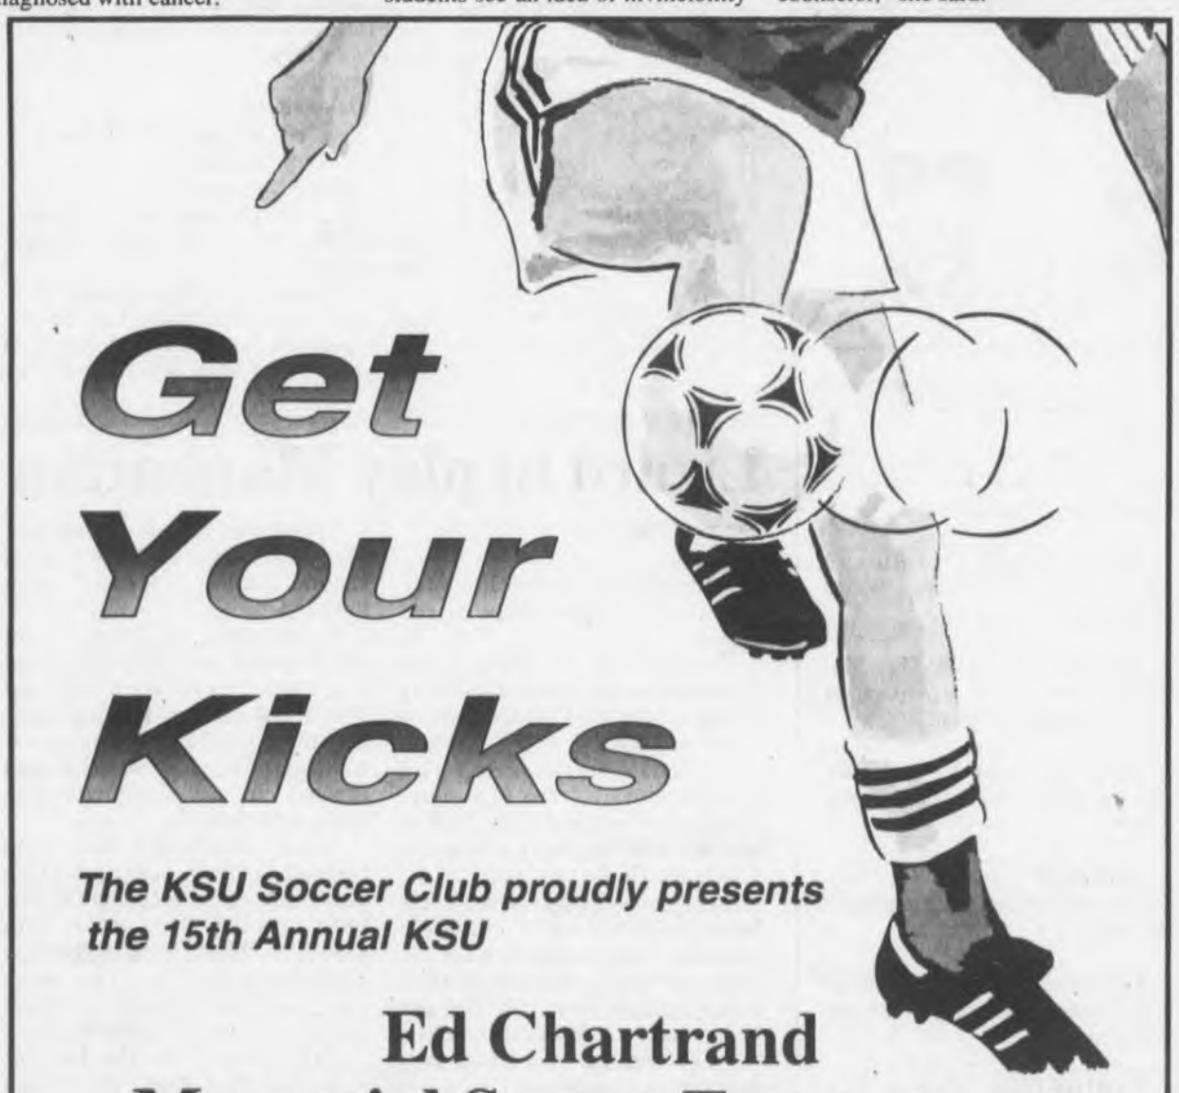
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — A last-minute glitch in a computer system that monitors shuttle takeoffs to ensure people's safety on the ground forced NASA to scrub Thursday's launch of Columbia on a medical research mission.

NASA said it would try again Friday morning despite a forecast calling for more bad weather. Thunderclouds were among Thursday's many problems.

After waiting two hours for the skies to clear over Kennedy Space Center, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration resumed the countdown but had to halt it for good at 31 seconds, about a minute and a half after the computer trouble struck.

The problem occurred in a 13-year-old computer system at a nearby Air Force station. If Columbia veered off course and was headed toward populated areas, the Air Force would have to send commands to ignite on-board explosives and blow up the spaceship.



Air Force Col. Bill Sample said one of two computers monitoring the radio link to the shuttle registered a failure in that link, even though engineers quickly determined no problem existed. But by then, it was too late in the countdown to confirm everything was working properly.

Tests conducted by the Air Force through the afternoon verified that all equipment was ready to support a Friday launch attempt.

The seven astronauts had been aboard the spaceship for five hours by the time the launch was scrubbed. A few of them looked weary as they crawled out.

Adding to NASA's problems Thursday were intermittent clouds and rain at the emergency landing sites in Morocco and Spain, and a temporary communications problem at a shuttle-tracking station in Bermuda.

Columbia's 14-day journey — the longest shuttle flight ever planned by NASA — is intended to help scientists learn more about how the body changes in weightlessness. It will be only the second shuttle mission devoted to medical research.

Butt-Head inspires amorous feelings

Dear Cassandra,

I am writing to you today about a serious problem. This problem concerns my favorite MTV personality, Butt-Head. This is, however, no normal problem.

My roommate seems to be obsessed with "Beavis and Butt-Head." This alone is no big problem, but it gets much worse. One morning, after watching "Beavis and Butt-Head" at 2 a.m., I finally went to sleep.

That morning, I had the most troubling dream: Butt-Head was real, and I was his date. We met at a bar. I noticed his brunette pompadour from across the room and fell in love.

The dream didn't end there as . We left the bar and went to "his place." There was just something so stimulating about the way he uttered, "Come to Butt-Head." Words cannot describe the passion that flowed between us that magical night.

For every girl out there who has ever wondered: Butt-Head is a real man. I can't get over the excitement of that night and that wondrous dream. He's been a part of my dreams ever since.

I know this infatuation is not healthy, but what can I do about it? How can I control a matter of the heart? I realize he's a cartoon, but tell it to my heart.

Is anyone else out there attracted to Butt-Head's raw animal magnetism? This is a cry for help.

Signed,

I'm in too deep

Dear Too deep for the shallow end,

I'm feeling your pain.

Oh, how your heart must ache.

His brunette pompadour, that animal magnetism, that "Come to Butt-Head" line — choke ...

But seriously, you really should try to curb that crystal-meth habit. I do believe it's beginning to damage those vital reality-discerning brain cells of yours.

REVIEW

Greta fails to entertain

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

It reads like a bad soap opera.

High-school buddies Josh and Paul start playing guitars to get popular. They start a band and get strung out on heroin.

Meanwhile, Kyle and Brad are in another band with a singer named Eddie. Eddie quits to join a band called Pearl Jam.

Kyle and Brad meet up with Josh and Paul, who are now clean and sober. They form a new band. However, Brad, the drummer, soon quits to join a band called Rage Against the Machine.

Josh, Paul and Kyle pick up a new drummer named Scott. A band called Greta is born, and they immediately sign with Mercury Records.

That's an awful lot of trouble to go through to set up a band that sounds this dull.

The first two tracks on Greta's first release, "No Biting," are really not that bad. They feature syncopated, choppy acoustic guitars punctuated with mean, electric growls and screams. Some Jane's Addiction influence is obvious here.

From here on, though, the album goes downhill fast. Sappy, tired, acoustic garbage is punctuated with sappy, tired, speed-metal garbage for an overall nauseating effect.

The lyrics are inane and stupid, but not Ramones-style inane and stupid, where they are done tongue-in-cheek for a happy, party effect. Here they are sung for an "Is this guy serious?" effect:

"I never learned a thing at school/Teachers taught, Teachers rule/And I didn't read no stupid books/Teacher's pet, Teacher's fool."

For Chrissake.

To top it off, the singer, Paul Plagens, needs to learn to sing with some balls. He makes Geddy Lee sound like Wolfman Jack. Plagens has been known to wear a dress on stage. This must really confuse the audience.

Maybe these guys should start doing heroin again. It couldn't hurt.

Lizard to play Manhattan

JEREMY UNRUH
Collegian

Manhattan's newest venue expects its biggest show of the season.

Tonight at 8 p.m., The Warehouse will present Jesus Lizard, a band the Chicago Tribune calls "angular and angry. A blend of virtuoso musicianship and cathartic singing." The four-piece, bass-heavy, stage-diving band is intense, Stacy Conde, publicist for Touch and Go Records, said.

Lead vocalist David Yow has been described as "a complete madman with no concern for his own well-being that continually comes back for more," by Thrasher magazine's Jon Widerhorn, and a "savage vocalist who brings new meaning to the phrase 'balls-out rocker'," by Kerrang magazine's Mike Gitter.

Yow formed the Jesus Lizard in 1987 after his old band, Scratch Acid, broke up. He picked up bassist David Sims and guitarist Duane Dennison to record the band's first album, "Pure."

Lizard then picked up drummer Mac McNeilly, and the band's second album, "Head," soon followed.

In February, the Jesus Lizard and Nirvana collaborated on the song "Puss," to release a single for Touch and Go that Rolling Stone magazine dubbed "a pile driver with cascading guitar swirls around agitated vocals — a perfect fit with the Nirvana track."

"Liar," the band's fourth and best-selling album, sold a whopping 40,000 units for Touch and Go. The band recently released its fifth album, "Lash," a six-track extended-play CD. This busy band's schedule includes an album due out this spring, Conde said.

Other bands on the bill for Friday are Manhattan's own Roach Factory, Touch and Go Records' Girls Against Boys and Redemption Records' Ritual Device.

"All four bands are awesome. We've sold a ton of advance tickets," Mitch Ulrich, The Warehouse owner, said. "We expect our first sell-out."

More arrested in Moscow revolt

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Trying to flush out opponents more than a week after a hard-line rebellion, authorities shut down 15 opposition newspapers Thursday and said they arrested eight more people suspected of taking part in the revolt.

Soldiers, a police officer and a neo-Nazi were among those arrested. They are suspected of taking part in the Oct. 3 attacks on government offices and a TV station that led to a bloody putdown of the rebellion the following day.

Maj. Gen. Sergei Balashov, the Security Ministry's investigations chief, said five of those arrested operated under the direct orders of Vice President Alexander Rutskoi, a leader of the uprising. He did not identify them.

Russia's Press and Information Ministry shut down 15 hard-line newspapers and a television show Thursday that it said made a significant contribution to destabilizing the situation.

President Boris Yeltsin had earlier suspended publication of the newspapers, which face a criminal probe.

The ministry also fired the editors of the opposition Pravda and Sovietskaya Rossiya newspapers and said the newspapers would be given new names.

Employees at Sovietskaya Rossiya said they still consider the fired editor their boss and will fight the dismissal order in court.

Alexander Ilyin, named by the government as Pravda's new editor, said many journalists leaned toward accepting the government demands to preserve their newspapers.

The government says 187 people died in two days of fighting in the Russian capital, including 43 inside the parliament building.

Fifteen people were arrested as organizers of last week's events, and at least 34,000 have been detained for curfew violations and minor offenses.

Rutskoi, parliament speaker Ruslan Khasbulatov and three ministers are still in custody. Several rebellion leaders and their supporters remain at large after fleeing the parliament building.

Lt. Gen. Sergei Stepashin, a deputy to Security Minister Nikolai Golushko said 18 former ministry officials were at parliament during the uprising.

U.S. blockade enforces U.N. embargo on Haiti

BRIEFLY

■ The Canadian embassy urged 2,000 Canadians to leave
■ nearly all U.N. personnel have been evacuated

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — A U.S. warship rode the horizon off the capital Sunday — to some Haitians an omen that a foreign invasion was imminent, to others a harbinger that democracy might soon be restored.

The USS Sterett was one of six dispatched by President Clinton to enforce a U.N. arms and oil embargo that is to take effect at midnight Monday unless Haiti's military leaders cooperate with a U.N.-brokered accord on bringing back ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

It was the first one spotted by the capital's fearful residents, although a Pentagon representative in Washington, Maj. Steve Little, said all six were in place Sunday.

Army commander Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras, whose resignation is part of the U.N. accord, indicated Sunday that the army does not want to challenge the United States.

"The Haitian people do not want to confront the American might," he said to CNN. "We do not have the intention of defying the United States."

Cedras also repeated his call for a national conference of all Haitian sectors to resolve the crisis and the army's displeasure with the United Nations as mediator, and said that a papal representative would be a good alternative.

In Washington, Aristide representative Gwen McKinney in Washington, said it was totally unacceptable and outrageous for Cedras to propose a new negotiator.

The Vatican gave Cedras and other leaders of the 1991 coup that overthrew Aristide their only international recognition. It also accused Aristide, a former priest, of fomenting class divisions and withdrew the papal nuncio after Aristide's election, sending him back only after the coup.

Aristide, the country's first freely elected leader, was to return Oct. 30 under an accord he and Cedras signed in July. A pro-Aristide prime minister had taken office to ease the transition, which was to be aided by a 1,600-person U.N. military mission.

But Cedras refused last week to step down due to a dispute over amnesty for human-rights violators. A U.S. warship carrying troops for the U.N. mission turned back in the face of unruly port workers and protesters. The country's justice minister was assassinated in broad daylight.

As the tensions grew, U.S. Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole said Sunday he will offer legislation restricting Clinton's authority to send troops to Haiti.

Dole, speaking on CBS' "Face the Nation," said he will offer an amendment early this week requiring congressional authorization for sending American troops to Haiti unless the president certifies certain conditions, such as a threat to national security, exist.

"I wouldn't risk any American lives to put Aristide back in power and try to force democracy on Haiti," he said.

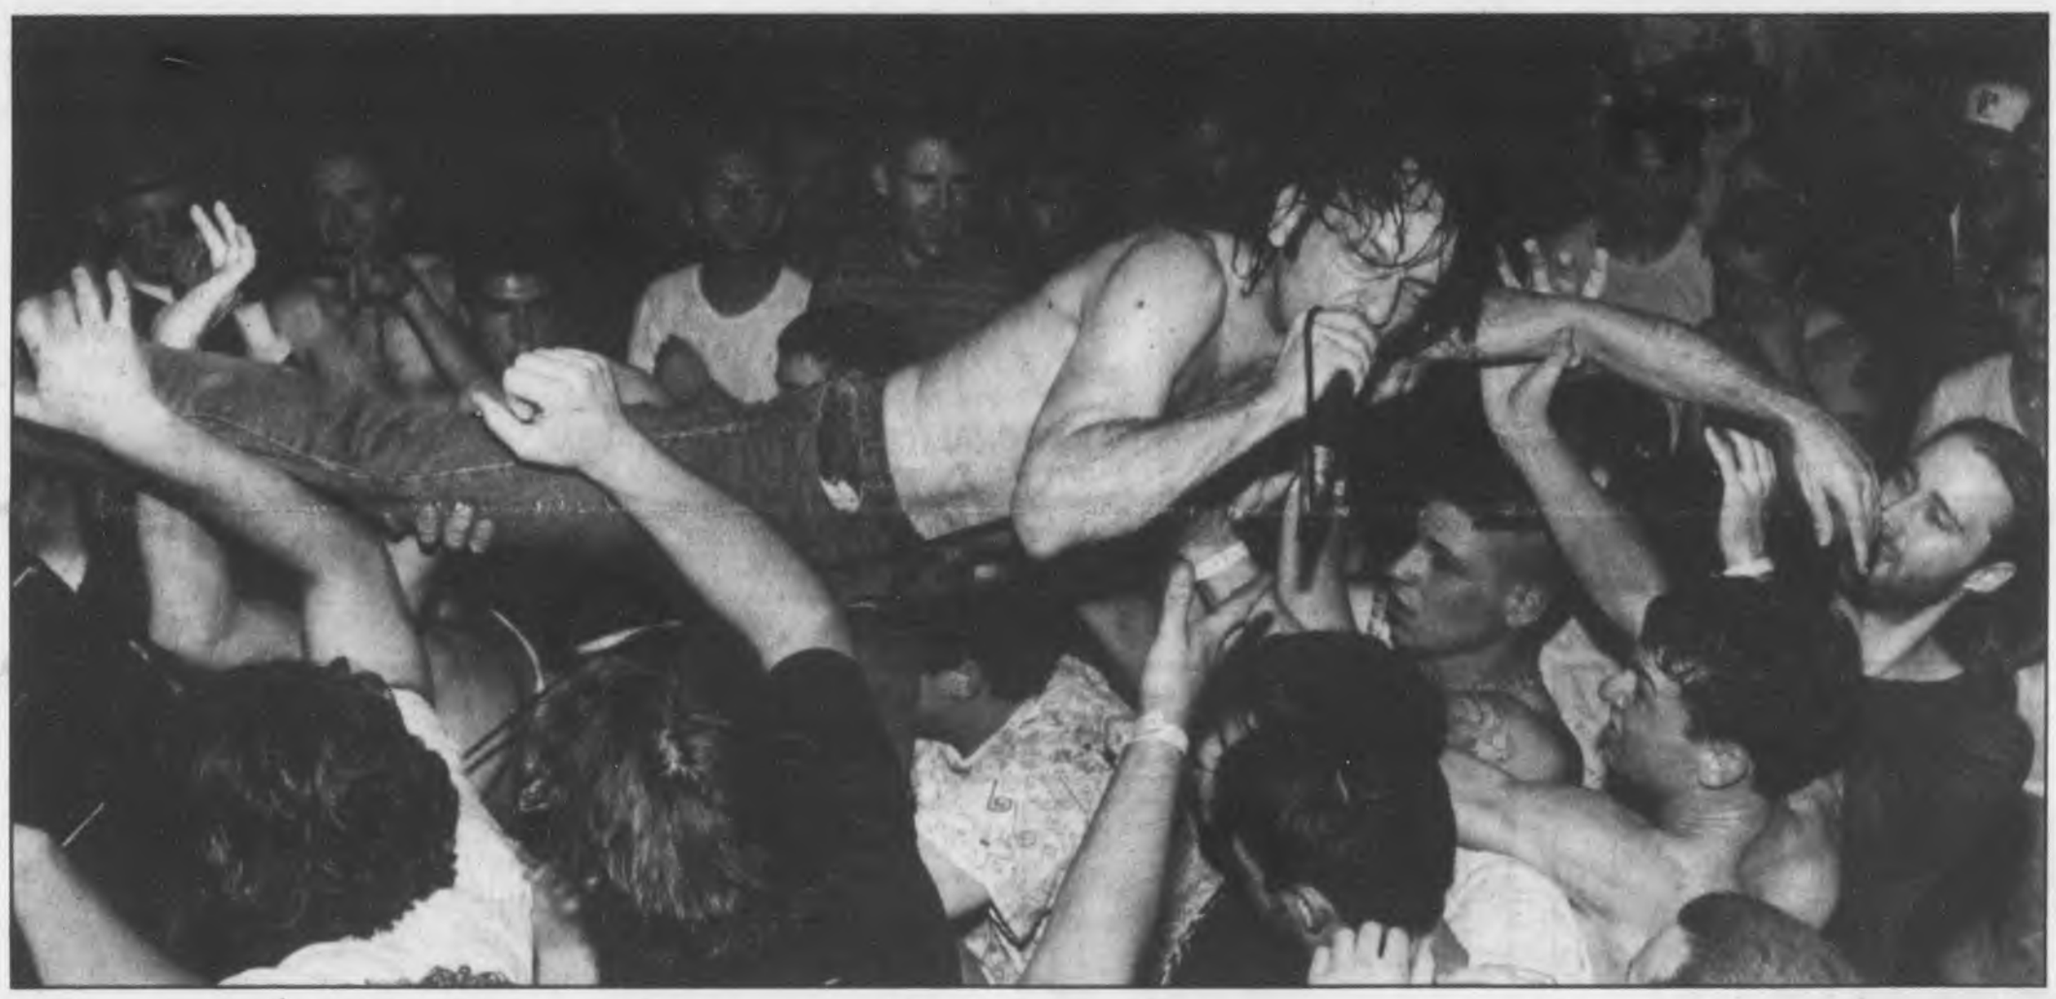
In Haiti, some of the 2,000 Canadians in the country left Sunday at the urging of their embassy, and Belgium also issued a recommendation for its 400 citizens to leave.

Nearly all U.N. personnel have been evacuated from the country, and the U.S. Embassy is warning Americans in Haiti to be careful.

There is wide hostility toward Americans from Haitians who believe an invasion or longtime military presence, such as in Somalia, is in the works.

One ultranationalist leader said Saturday his followers would use voodoo against foreign invaders.

Cedras, however, said to CNN there was no threat to Americans or to U.N. personnel.



"There is no threat against any American on Haitian soil," he said. "This is an internal problem." He said no members of the civilian U.N. mission had been threatened in the year they have been in the country.

He also reiterated his conditions for stepping down, including a military amnesty.

Despairing Port-au-Prince residents were also jamming aboard trucks Sunday to flee the city. Bus drivers seeking to capitalize on the fear doubled fares.

On a street in the capital, gunmen killed a

Crowd joins Lizard mayhem

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

REVIEW

David Yow likes to inflict punishment on his body.

The lead vocalist for the Jesus Lizard put himself through a grueling performance Friday night at The Warehouse. During its 90-minute set, the Jesus Lizard brought the anger and aggression of the group's latest album "Lash," which Yow swept over most of the audience.

Yow, dressed in a brown cowboy shirt, blue jeans and boots, delivered a sneering vocal cadence that accented his high-pressure lyrics.

Some of the 250 people in the audience found the musical attack awesome and joined the mayhem. Audience stage diving, complete with flips and belly flops, dominated much of the show.

Yow, not to be outshined, allowed himself to be pulled repeatedly off stage. The crazed crowd forcefully yanked Yow from the three-foot platform and passed him above their raised arms. Thrust from one side of the stage to the other, Yow continued his complete, ferocious vocals despite being thrown around like a sack of flour.

When the crowd was through with him, they would literally throw his scratched body back on stage. Most of the time, Yow would land on a monitor and fall to the stage floor dazed.

New crowd members had to get in on the excitement — monkey see, monkey do.

An unidentified female joined the band to dive from the stage, and her first attempt was successful.

Her second try didn't fare as well.

A running start provided too much momentum and she jumped over her intended target. Like diving into an empty swimming pool, she landed head-first on the concrete floor.

Worried audience members led the bloodied, stunned female outside to check the damage. Lying on the sidewalk while an ambulance crew worked on a sizable forehead injury, she had stopped her initial crying and regained a sense of humor.

She told concerned friends not to worry about her.

"I'll be back," she said.

The Jesus Lizard can chalk up another victorious show, although Yow had been slightly upstaged.

He didn't need as much medical attention as his female counterpart.

Wolff will share works on Tuesday

TARA FOSTER
ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

An award-winning writer of fiction will be coming to K-State on Tuesday.

Tobias Wolff will be presenting an informal discussion about the art of writing and will read from his various works.

The discussion begins at 4 p.m. in Union 207. He will be talking about the role of autobiography in story making. At 7 p.m., he will read passages from several of his works, in Forum Hall.

Wolff has led a colorful life, being kicked out of prep school, serving in Vietnam, graduating from Oxford and working for the Washington Post. He studied further at Stanford, and now is writer in residence at Syracuse University.

The Department of English and the Student Governing Association are sponsoring the discussion, and both were instrumental in Wolff's coming to the University.

Steve Heller, professor of English, said it was more of a student effort than the department.

"The students were the ones who got him here," Heller said.

Wolff's writings include two collections of short stories, "Back in the World" and "In the Garden of North American Martyrs," which won the Saint Lawrence Award for Short Fiction in 1982.

His short novel, "The Barracks Thief," received the Pen/Faulkner Award in 1985, and a recent book, "This Boy's Life: A Memoir," was a bestseller and won the Los Angeles Times Award for Biography.

Bad checks persist in Manhattan

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

A local lawyer says the number of bad checks written is a problem in Manhattan.

"Check writing is a crime with attempt to defraud," said Sharon Wright Kellstrom, attorney and partner of the law firm Clark and Kellstrom. "I think insufficient check writing is a horrendous problem for retailers."

The criminal and civil systems are the two legal systems that hear cases involving insufficiently funded checks.

Kathy Carpenter, legal secretary in check collections for Riley County, said choosing between the criminal and civil systems prosecution is up to the merchant.

"We process probably 6,000 to 9,000 insufficiently funded cases in a year's time," Carpenter said.

The criminal system can sentence offenders with a jail term, whereas the civil system cannot, Kellstrom said.

The civil system adopted a statute in the mid-1980s allowing individuals to file civil suits against people who write bad checks in order to collect damages, Kellstrom said.

"It's a good alternative for people to use to get checks collected," Kellstrom said.

The process of dealing with a bad check begins with a letter from the holder of the check to the person. This allows the person who wrote the check 14 days to pay $4.79 for the letter, the sum of the amount of the check and a service charge.

The service charge, established by law, can cost up to $30. If the business does not have a posted sign, a business can charge no more than $10, Kellstrom said.

If there is no response from the person who wrote the check within 14 days, the case can be turned over to a private attorney for a civil suit.

If the defendant comes in before the court date, payment of a $4.79 service charge and reimbursement of the plaintiff's filing fee (between $16.50 and $36.50) and an attorney fee (varies) will save the person from having to pay damages.

If the case goes to court, the defendant pays the service charge and the fee reimbursements in addition to damages. Damages cost three times the amount of the bounced check or $100, whichever is greater. Damages cannot exceed more than $500, Kellstrom said.

For example, damages of a check for $200 would be $500, because three times the amount is $600, but damages may not exceed $500.

"I would assume when the legislature adopted this civil statute, they did it so people that don't take care of the checks in a timely manner and end up having to pay damages would be motivated not to write insufficient checks in the future," Kellstrom said.

"For many businesses this is an expedient way to get their checks collected," Kellstrom said.

The civil system is set up so people have several chances to take care of bad checks, she said.

Kellstrom said a large percent of defendants she represents are 20 to early 30 years of age, but it depends on the type of business.

"Probably the majority of the Aggieville checks are college-age students," Kellstrom said.

Repeat offenders continue to be seen in the court system, Kellstrom said.

"One point of interest is we have repeat offenders and lots of them," Kellstrom said.

EARTHQUAKE STRIKES PACIFIC

PORT MORESBY, Papua New Guinea (AP) — Emergency service officials fear at least 62 villagers were killed by two earthquakes that hit the northern provinces in four days, triggering deadly mudslides.

The bodies of four people have been recovered. At least 58 are missing and believed buried in landslides.

The first quake, measuring 7.0 on the Richter scale, struck at noon on Wednesday and was followed by two aftershocks. The second quake, measuring 6.8, struck in the same area at 1 p.m. Saturday.

Weekend shellings kill 10 people in Sarajevo

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Sarajevo residents were urged to stay indoors Sunday as occasional detonations shook the city. But even as they fought each other, Serbs and Muslims agreed to start exchanging all prisoners.

The shelling was lighter than Saturday, when U.N. monitors counted 590 projectiles hitting the city and 69 rounds fired by Sarajevo defenders at besieging Serbs in surrounding hills.

At least 10 people were killed and 57 wounded in Sarajevo during the weekend, most of them Saturday, officials said.

Barbara Bush describes life after the White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former first lady Barbara Bush, who spent 25 years in Washington, says there's not much she misses about the nation's capital.

"My children, my friends," she said Saturday night.

She paused.

"Are you waiting for more?"

Bush spoke with a handful of reporters before speaking to about 150 people at the 1993 Maxwell House "Real Heroes" awards dinner, an event honoring 50 Americans for their volunteerism.

During her speech, Bush said she and her husband have rediscovered cooking, driving and privacy since leaving the White House.

"Our lives have changed dramatically," she said. "On January 20th we woke up, and we had a household staff of 93. The very next morning, we woke up, and it was George, me and two dogs — and that's not all that bad."

Chevy Chase loses his late-night battle

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Chevy Chase has reported the news many times: Generalissimo Francisco Franco is still dead.

Now "The Chevy Chase Show" is, too.

Chase became the first casualty of the late-night TV wars on Sunday as Fox Broadcasting Co. announced it was canceling his show, effective immediately.

He began Sept. 7 and battled David Letterman, Jay Leno, Arsenio Hall and Ted Koppel for viewers. But his show was savagely mauled by critics, and it performed a ratings pratfall much as Chase himself had done in his famous sendups of ex-President Ford.

Captured pilot returns home amid fanfare

FORT CAMPBELL, Ky. (AP) — Captured Army helicopter pilot Michael Durant returned to a hero's welcome Saturday as a boisterous crowd of friends, relatives and soldiers welcomed the Somalia battle veteran back to his home base.

As about 3,500 people cheered happily, Durant waved a small American flag and a maroon beret from his Night Stalker Army unit as he was carried by stretcher from an airplane to a waiting ambulance.

"This is your family," Gen. Jack Keane, Fort Campbell's commanding officer, told him. "We're going to take care of you. We're going to get you back on your feet and back in the cockpit."

Before he left the C-9 aircraft, his mother-in-law carried Durant's 14-month-old son, Joey, onto the plane. It was the first time Durant had seen his son in two months.

Gamsakhurdia loyalists capture inland town

TBILISI, Georgia (AP) — Fighters loyal to the ousted president clinched another victory on Sunday with the capture of an inland town after battles that left at least 40 people dead.

Samtredia, now in rebel hands, is an important junction on the main road linking the capital Tbilisi with Poti, an important Black Sea port.

Georgian leader Eduard Shevardnadze flew Sunday to Kutaisi, about 20 miles northeast of Samtredia, to direct the government forces as they regroup after the loss, said Zaza Bilikhodze, a representative for the government troops.

Forces loyal to ousted President Zviad Gamsakhurdia have vowed to fight their way to Tbilisi. They stepped up their offensive last month after government troops were routed by separatist fighters from the breakaway Abkhazia region, which includes another major port, Sukhumi.

Ginsburg's questions spur end to lawsuit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Judging by her energetic questioning from the bench, Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg is quickly hitting full stride in her job.

Intensive questioning last week by Ginsburg in a sexual-harassment case caused one lawyer to abandon his contention that the woman who had filed suit must prove the conduct harmed her performance at work.

"She basically pushed him to concede the case," said Georgetown University law professor Susan Deller Ross.

During her first two weeks of high-court arguments, Ginsburg has asked lawyers frequent and probing questions on other issues such as drug forfeitures and civil rights law. She also has brought the perspective of a former women's-rights advocate to the conservative court.

Several teams compete in memorial tourney

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

The Midwest outdoor college soccer teams competed for the championship trophy in the 15th annual Kansas State University Ed Chartrand Memorial Soccer Tournament.

The Ed Chartrand Memorial soccer tournament is in memory of Edward Chartrand, a K-State soccer player who died in 1979. The tournament is a joint venture of the KSU Soccer Club and the Chartrand family to promote college soccer.

The tournament was founded in 1979 by the soccer club to promote soccer at the collegiate level and enhance the opportunity for young soccer athletes to continue playing beyond high school at state universities.

"We believe. And darn we believe that we should have Big Eight soccer," Art Chartrand, brother of Edward Chartrand, said.

A $500 Ed Chartrand Memorial Scholarship is also made available each year to a qualified K-State soccer player.

Games were played Saturday and Sunday at Frank Anneberg Park. The teams in the tournament included K-State, the University of Kansas, Iowa State University, Oklahoma State University, Wichita State University, Emporia State University, the University of Oklahoma, and a special K-State alumni soccer team.

In Saturday's first round action K-State defeated Iowa University by the score of one to zero and they also defeated the University of Nebraska, Lincoln by the score of four to one.

"Since we beat Nebraska, I think we've got a chance at winning it," Viktur Atughonu, head coach for the K-State soccer club, said.

Jeff Sawarynski, a junior in architectural engineering and a midfielder for K-State, scored one goal in the UNL victory.

"The Iowa victory was just a warm up. We were fortunate to come out with a victory after how badly we played," Sawarynski said.

He also said the half of the bracket they played in was harder, and the team wanted to play KU.

Sawarynski would get his wish as K-State met KU in the championship. KU prevailed three to two in a shootout.

While the K-State team was doing fine for Saturday's contest, the K-State alumni team was defeated by KU five to zero.

Dennis Cook, tournament director, put the alumni team together. He said the alumni team had six players that graduated in May and six other players who were in their 40's. Cook was a player/coach in 1975.

Wayne Johnson, a K-State alumni team member who graduated in architecture, said the alumni team had not practiced together.

Craig Dorroh, another team member who graduated this past May in architecture, said most of the guys played at home and kept in shape on their own.

Even though the teams came to Manhattan to play in the soccer tournament, most recognized the tournament as being different and special.

"Chartrand always puts on a good tournament, they always take care of everybody," Johnson said.

Cook said they do not strive for the biggest tournament, but for a high quality one. He also said, it is a family run tournament and it is a complete family affair.

At the end of the tournament a trophy was given away.

"The championship ceremony is as touching as it can get," said Cook.

"The mother gives away the trophy, it's a real special event."

Not only is the tournament special in that aspect, but it is also special in another.

The tournament had community volunteers along with the help of K-State's Alpha Chi Omega sorority as well as the Delta Upsilon fraternity.

Katie McCarthy, junior in pre-med, said the Alpha Chis were at the tournament to show their spirit and raise money for a good cause.

Ryan Hurst, a junior in business and coordinator for the Delta Upsilon house, said his fraternity was approached because Art Chartrand was a DU.

One of the members who participated, Chris Bosco, a sophomore in grain and milling science and a referee for the tournament, said he was very honored to be asked to referee.

Home schooling has advantages that can't be easily dismissed

"To me, it's incredible that three or four families can set up a private school."

That was State Board of Education member Michael Gragert expressing disagreement with Kansas' tolerance for home schools. Well, Mr. Gragert, Kansas must preserve the right of those three or four families to start a school.

Home schooling is necessary for the growing number of parents who are terrified of their children dodging bullets on the way into classrooms.

It is necessary for parents who are tired of having parental involvement preached to them, only to find what the school really means is, "We want your help with the school carnival, but keep your hands off our curriculum."

And yes, home schooling is necessary for parents who find the moral atmosphere of a public school either lacking or hostile to their religious beliefs. They have the right to deem their child's moral education more important than socialization.

The state should address how much regulation we will allow and at what point that regulation effectively guts the parents' right to private education.

Right now, except for the mandatory attendance laws, Kansas does not have a law regulating home schooling.

The state board must design a regulation system that balances the rights of home schools with the need to have a minimum level of education for each child.

State competency tests — for students and teachers — are part of the answer.

There is the tendency, however, to attack home schooling for the same shortcomings found in public schools.

Home-schooled children will fail those tests for the same reasons public-school children will — bad test-taking skills, cultural differences, learning disabilities and bad teaching.

But until the state begins shutting down public schools and firing teachers when their students fail, they should not have the right to do that to home schools.

Center must totally rely on SGA funding

Editor,

I would like to let you know of a mistake made in an article about the Fone Crisis Center. In your Oct. 11 Collegian, on a page-five article, the paper described the organization as relying heavily on donations to compensate for the limited funds by SGA. The reality is that our total budget comes from SGA funding. We will accept donations; however, these rarely come true. The Fone Crisis Center is an organization funded by students and run by students to service students. Thank you for publishing this letter to clarify any misunderstandings that might have happened because of the article.

If this proposal were put forward for a vote by either the taxpayers who support this institution or the students who attend it, I am confident that the program would go down in flames. Unfortunately, this oligarchical dictatorship doesn't answer to either its supporters or its customers. Given the recent anti-student climate in the Faculty Senate, this program is guaranteed to pass just as the new plus/minus grading system and the new GPA policy.

But the program has not passed yet, so there is still time. Given K-State's preoccupation with national trends, I would like to point out that in this lousy economy, the rest of the nation is streamlining and cutting away the fat. The diversity-overlay program is fat! Trim it!

I can't afford to waste any more time or money here at the University, and neither can the rest of the student body.

GTAs more than grateful for assistance

Editor,

Much delayed by our efforts to settle into our new offices, we're now writing to thank all the people who helped us get our furniture. Only one week after our letter to the editor appeared, all of our office furniture was moved. We're ecstatic about this. ### Ignore Fred, and he'll hopefully go away

Editor,

We've seen his pictures on the front page and his name in the headlines of local papers. We've seen and heard him and his followers state their case on our city streets. We've even seen him featured on a national prime-time news show.

I think Fred Phelps has made his opinions painfully clear. I am quite sure that when he appears on the KSDB-FM 91.9 call-in talk show "A Purple Affair," he will fail to say anything we haven't heard before. I also find it hard to believe that any caller could say anything that will make an impact on this issue.

He's even lost what little entertainment value he once had.

It's time to start a new reaction to Phelps' "shock gospel": find something else to do when he takes center stage (my apologies to DB-92). Phelps feeds on public attention. Make him talk to himself for two hours.

Phelps has thrived on our disgust and outrage for too long. He deserves death by disinterest.

▶ OVERLAY

Give me a break and lose the diversity idea

Editor,

I am going to address a subject here that no one seems to want to touch with a 10-foot pole. This is long overdue, and I have trouble believing that no other student has said a word about it. The topic? The University's recent attempt to require even more classes that don't apply to our degrees.

So far in my college career, I have been told to take political science (to fulfill a state requirement), anthropology (to learn how cavemen buried their dead), two levels of physical education (apparently I'm not fit enough), communication (to learn to embarrass myself in front of large groups), two levels of psychology (to learn how Russians made dogs drool), geology (to learn the life cycle and mating habits of a rock) and two levels of sociology (to learn that the guy with the gun on the corner took my money because society has oppressed him, and not just because he's too lazy to get a job).

Now the University is telling me I need to take a diversity class to learn to become "diverse." After more than 27 credit hours of courses that do not pertain to my major, I'd say that I'm about as "diverse" as I'm going to get.

I don't know about the rest of you, but this is getting old. I, for one, am going to stand up and say, "No, I'm not going to take this anymore!"

I am here at K-State to acquire knowledge in my particular field so that I can get a job and support myself, not to waste years and thousands of dollars to fulfill requirements and credits that are totally unrelated to my major and won't put a dime in my pocket.

▶ BLOOD

Everyone deserves praise for pitching in

Editor,

Congratulations, K-State! I am pleased to inform you that we exceeded our goal for the Fall '93 KSU Bloodmobile. There were 1,015 individuals who attempted to give blood, and 914 units were collected. Each unit collected may actually save up to three lives. Thus, I am very appreciative for everyone who supported this blood drive.

On behalf of Lafene Health Center, Delta Tau Delta and the American Red Cross, I would like to express my sincere thanks to the K-State and Manhattan communities for their participation in the KSU American Red Cross Bloodmobile. It takes a lot of teamwork to make an event such as this successful. I am especially thankful to all the volunteers who gave their time to help with this worthwhile cause.

I will inform everyone, at a later date, as to whether K-State beat the University of Kansas in the amount of units collected.

None of us will know when we may be in an accident or surgery, needing the lifesaving gift of blood. Your generosity will not be forgotten.

If we've done our job, then let's go home

THE CLOSER WE GOT TO WAR AND DEATH, THE MORE REPUGNANT OUR OPINIONS OF THEM BECAME.

I visited the Vietnam Veterans Memorial for the first time last month with a group from the National Student Leadership Forum on Faith and Values. The memorial was the last stop on our "walk to monuments" tour around the Washington mall, led by U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., and former Missouri governor John Ashcroft.

It was dark as our group of 250 approached the monolithic black stone. From the distance, the thousands of names on the wall appeared to blend together, forming an amalgamous gray backdrop. Within the mixture, I assumed I could find a massive number of names, about 50,000. As I got closer, the names of the dead became clear.

At the wall, our group milled around for a few minutes. I saw a middle-aged couple studying a specific name — I felt awkward not knowing if they were with our group or if we were intruding on a private moment. Gov. Ashcroft asked our group to congregate in the middle of the memorial, where he called two Vietnam veterans out of the crowd to address our group.

Both men were in their mid-40s. I remember the first man saying, "I commanded seven men during the war. They were all killed. I was the only one who made it home. Their names are on this wall."

The next man offered a similar testimony: "Two of my best friends were killed in the war. Their names are on this wall."

For the first time in my life I felt like I understood the Vietnam experience on a level deeper than the intellect. The more intimate I became with war, the more somber my perception of it became.

After millions of Americans saw images of dead U.S. soldiers being dragged through the streets of Mogadishu and of a prisoner of war being questioned by his Somali captors, I imagine their reaction was similar to mine at the wall. The closer we got to war and death, the more repugnant our opinions of them became.

JOHN HART

Even as the force of those images fades into the back of our minds, Americans favor pulling out of Somalia by a margin of two to one. Recent developments have also convinced me that now is the time to pull out of Somalia, not on March 31 as President Clinton has pledged.

The United States has done all it can, and should do, in Somalia short of nation-building. Recall that by last December, 300,000 Somalis had died from starvation, and it was estimated that 2 million more could die if conditions didn't change. It will never be known how many lives the United States helped save in Somalia, but it is likely in the hundreds of thousands.

The heavy price American forces have paid there has certainly not been in vain.

By abruptly withdrawing U.S. forces from Somalia, many argue that the nation will revert to its famine conditions, where fighting warlords cut off relief supplies. This was my belief until last week when fugitive warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid, the only actor that has seriously threatened security in the region, struck a seemingly sincere peace agreement with United Nations forces. Also, our leaving does not prohibit the U.N. from continuing its humanitarian mission.

Our lesson to learn from Operation Restore Hope is to not allow the U.N. to dictate U.S. policy. The mission has revealed President Clinton's lack of experience in dealing with foreign-policy issues. He allowed the U.S. role in Somalia to go from simply a humanitarian mission to one of nation building by bowing to the United Nation's ambiguous goal of achieving a "new world order."

Our problems began in May, when only 4,700 of our initial force of 30,000 troops were left under U.N. command. Of the 23 U.S. deaths that have occurred in Somalia since December, all but five have come under U.N. command. Defense Secretary Les Aspin later denied the military's request to reinforce that paltry force, a decision he now greatly regrets. Had our forces been capable of taking swift, massive and decisive action in Somalia, as they did in Iraq, Gen. Aidid would have likely been crushed shortly after his forces began shooting peacekeepers.

We have done all we can; it's time to leave. Now.

young woman who had been carrying a suitcase, presumably intending to leave. There were no further details.

Opponents of Aristide's return threatened to shut down business in Port-au-Prince again Monday. Such efforts succeeded in the past with help from the military and allied civilian gangs.

Stanley Schrager, the U.S. Embassy representative in Haiti, said U.S. policy-makers believe Cedras is unlikely to meet the United Nations' terms for avoiding the sanctions.

The sanctions, initially imposed after Aristide's ouster, were credited with helping induce Cedras into signing the July accord.

They were lifted in August, and the reimposition was expected to drive the Western Hemisphere's poorest country further into economic despair.

Michel McKenzie Joseph said he felt hopeful that the sanctions and the warships' looming presence would work.

"I love Aristide!" he shouted.

Wolff to visit campus

"This is the best-known writer to visit campus in a decade," Heller said. "Many students go to Syracuse specifically to study with him."

Two K-State students are excited to have Wolff visiting.

Sarah Caldwell, senior in English, said she is pleased to have Wolff at the University and feels students will benefit and learn from him.

"Having him here on campus is very exciting," Caldwell said. "He is a very well-known author."

Jana Leep, graduate student in English, also spoke highly of Wolff.

"I think we are honored to have him coming here," she said.

Caldwell, an arts and sciences senator, said Student Senate voted to allocate $2,000 for Wolff's speaking fees and $300 for the showing of the movie last Saturday and Sunday, based on his book, "This Boy's Life," starring Robert De Niro and Ellen Barkin.

WORLD

Storm raging in Moscow calms

BOB MACHA
Collegian

A K-State professor said the reform storm raging in Moscow two weeks ago has calmed.

Dale Herspring, head of the political science department and former diplomat in Warsaw and Moscow, said the collapse of communism caused economic and political changes.

Herspring said the battle was between Russian President Boris Yelstin and his opponent Alexander Rutskoi.

Yelstin, a lifelong member of the Communist party and former volleyball player on the Soviet national team, is a more impulsive person than Rutskoi, Herspring said. Yelstin is also more authoritative.

Rutskoi, a former Soviet air force pilot who was shot down twice in the Afghan war, sees the world through much different eyes because of his military background, Herspring said.

"For example, you can go down to the Air Force ROTC captain here and ask him his opinion of the Rodney King trial, and he would say the officers got off too easy or too hard," Herspring said. "You ask the same type of question of a Russian military officer, and he would say, 'That's a political question. I have no opinion."

A sense of paranoia pervaded the former Soviet Union, he said.

"Prior to Gorbachev, you could not get a accurate map or a phone book. They were afraid it would give their enemies a chance for their enemies to plan strategy to bomb their cities," Herspring said.

He said phone books were not printed. A person wanting to obtain an unknown phone number had to call the operator. However, the operator still had the authority to deny the request.

Herspring said the battle has been over the specifics of reform.

"When it comes to reform, both men say 'da,'" Herspring said. "It is a question of how it should be done."

The political reform is making the country into a democracy. He said there will be elections to select a new group of people to lead the country.

The economic reform is to make the country into a free market. Herspring said the conversion to a free market will make the prices in the country go upward. The prices were set by the government in Moscow before to reform. This will lead to instability on the political and economic fronts.

He also said the reform will lead to instability because the reform will cause unemployment.

"These people used to be guaranteed jobs and medical care. It was in the Soviet Constitution," Herspring said.

Rutskoi was recently arrested after he attempted unsuccessfully to gain control of the government in a coup on Sept. 21.

Herspring said he thinks the situation in Moscow has been resolved, with Yelstin in control, but said keeping control of the rest of the country is a challenge.

"It's a bigger country than most people realize. It takes eight days and nights by train to get from Moscow to the Pacific coast, stopping just to pick up passengers. These are good trains, too. They are better than American trains," Herspring said. "There are also seven times zones that you cross."

Herspring said he thinks Yelstin has some things in his favor despite the challenges.

"He's got the support of the military, the security structures like the police and the KGB, and he's also got a lot of the popular support," Herspring said. "There are also many Russians that realize just how close they came to the Abyss — an all civil war that would make Yugoslavia look like a picnic."

LINCOLN, NEB. — One element kept K-State from upsetting the No. 5-ranked team in the nation and improving to a 6-0 record.

Poise.

K-State battled Nebraska to the finish Saturday at Lincoln, Neb., losing its first game of the season 45-28 in front of 75,721 fans at Memorial Stadium. The loss was the Cats' 26th straight to the Cornhuskers.

"We played hard, but I don't think we played with great poise, and that's what I shared with our team," Coach Bill Snyder said. "We needed a game like this perhaps for the program in order to continue the maturing process and to learn to play with greater poise."

"We came out, and the guys were nervous," wide receiver Andre Coleman said. "A lot of these guys haven't been to the University of Nebraska before. They haven't seen 80,000 people full of red.

"The first series, the guys were nervous, and we didn't have the poise, and it showed. It cost us a turnover and got us down early," Coleman said.

Quarterback Chad May chose to audible the first play from scrimmage, but when the ball was snapped, he pitched to the right, and running back J.J. Smith was running to the left. Nebraska's Ed Stewart recovered the ball, and Calvin Jones took it in five plays later to give the Cornhuskers a 7-0 lead.

"I think it was just miscommunication," Smith said. "It was an audible, and the offense went right, and Chad went left."

K-State turned the ball over three times in the contest, with Nebraska scoring on each miscue.

The Wildcats tied the game twice in the first half, and at one point they trailed just 31-28 with 7:44 remaining in the game.

May, who passed for a Big Eight Conference record — 489 yards in one game — hit a wide-open Kevin Lockett down the left sideline to bring K-State within three points in the final quarter.

But the Cornhuskers utilized their successful option attack and engineered a seven-play, 76-yard drive to score their first touchdown of the second half, taking a 38-28 advantage with 5:25 left to play.

LINCOLN, NEB. — Chad May sat in the media room at Memorial Stadium in Lincoln, Neb., dejected, knowing his team had their first loss of the year but unaware he had made history in the defeat.

May completed 30 of his 51 passes for 489 yards and two touchdowns, a new Big Eight Conference record. The old record of 480 yards was held by Kansas' Mike Norseth and Missouri's Jeff Handy.

"I thought I had 300 or 350 (yards)," May said. "I would give them all back for a win."

May's yards came early and often when he hit J.J. Smith for a 70-yard touchdown pass in the first quarter. May finished that quarter with 117 yards after completing five of six passes.

"I don't think they respected our speed, and our receivers were running right by them," May said.

May completed another bomb of 34 yards, thanks to a spectacular catch by Andre Coleman. Coleman jumped between two Nebraska defenders and muscled the ball away.

However, all of May's yards were not pain-free. He was drilled on nearly every pass by the intense rush from Nebraska outside linebackers Ed Stewart and Trev Alberts.

"When you start putting pressure on the quarterback, there are going to be some receivers left naked, naked," Charlie McBride, Nebraska defensive coordinator, said.

May said one reason for his success was the man-to-man coverage played by the Husker defense and the blitzing linebackers.

"I like to see man-to-man defenses if I get good protection," May said.

After the game, Nebraska coach Tom Osborne said he thought his pass defense had been doing pretty well in the last couple of weeks. However, they didn't do very well Saturday, he said.

"It seems like every time we play these guys, their quarterback plays out of his head," Osborne said.

May continued to find open receivers during the third drive of the second half when he hit Kevin Lockett for completions of 21 and 17 yards, J.J. Smith for 13 yards and Coleman for 31 yards to the Nebraska 1-yard line.

CHAD MAY
K-STATE QUARTERBACK

The play to Coleman set up a 1-yard run by Smith for his third touchdown.

"I didn't think he had as strong of an arm as he showed," Tyrone Williams, Nebraska defensive back, said.

K-State hopes for a victory were highest in the fourth quarter when May completed his second touchdown pass to Lockett, a 58-yard strike in which Lockett had no defender within 10 yards of him.

Lockett went over 100 yards receiving on the play. He finished with eight catches for 143 yards. Coleman also went over the century mark with eight catches for 139 yards.

"I thought Chad May did a wonderful job today," Coach Bill Snyder said. "He took an awful lot of hits and held up underneath it."

As a result of his performance Saturday, May pushed his season passing total to 1,533 yards, completing 55 percent of his passes.

Frustration strikes Wildcats in wake of first defeat

A sense of frustration filled the tiny room where K-State players and Coach Bill Snyder talked with the media after the Cats' 45-28 setback to the No. 5-ranked Nebraska Cornhuskers.

For the second time in three years, the Cats had the seemingly invincible Cornhuskers on the ropes, but couldn't deliver the knock-out punch.

Yes, K-State could easily be 6-0. Oh, man, the chances were there.

The difference in the game wasn't coaching or that the Cats were over-matched or that they wore down.

The difference was simply execution.

K-State had three turnovers, Nebraska none.

But more importantly, it was what the Huskers did with the ball after the Cats coughed it up. They turned three miscues into 17 points.

"I'm glad to get out of that one, obviously," said Nebraska coach Tom Osborne, who has never lost to K-State. "I guess you'd have to honestly say the score wasn't indicative of the ballgame.

"Probably the best thing we did was the three turnovers. Without them I don't know if we would have won the game."

Consider yourself lucky, Mr. Osborne.

Take away the turnovers, and it's a 28-28 ballgame. But wait, there's more.

Early in the second quarter, with Nebraska leading 21-14, K-State had stalled the Huskers offense on the Nebraska 12-yard line. On third down and 22, NU's Cory Schlesinger carried the ball up the middle for only a two-yard gain.

DEREK SIMMONS

So that would bring up a punting situation on fourth and 20 yards to go, right? Huh-uh.

When the whistle blew on Schlesinger's short carry, Nebraska's Lance Lundberg and K-State's Kirby Hocutt remained downfield.

From my perspective, it appeared that Lundberg was holding Hocutt on the ground, and then tried to trip him when he was getting up. Hocutt retaliated with a few swings, and as usual, that is the one who gets caught.

The Cats were whistled for a personal foul, which resulted in an automatic first down for the Huskers. And, yes, it also yielded another Nebraska touchdown to make the score 28-14.

K-State could have had the ball around the 50-yard line with a chance to tie the game and swing the momentum. Why couldn't the referee just have cautioned Hocutt?

Shouldn't there have been a warning issued first, especially when it is at such a critical point in the game? Absolutely.

But as my high school football coach once said, "Never, never go after a player who has sucker-punched you. The refs won't see what he did to you — the only thing they will see is you attacking him. Instead, wait a couple of plays, then let him have it. Besides, he won't be expecting it then."

It probably isn't that easy when you have a 300-pound lug all over you.

What is really amazing is that despite the turnovers and mental lapses throughout the contest, K-State was undoubtedly in the game from start to finish. The Cats amassed

The K-State volleyball team lost to the Oklahoma Sooners 3-0 in Norman, Okla., on Saturday. The loss dropped the team's record to 7-12 on the season.

In the first game the Wildcats lost 15-9, then the Sooners captured the second game 15-1 and the final game 15-7.

"We had our chances to win the first game," Coach Patti Hagemeyer said. "It was 10-9 at one point, but we committed some errors that prevented us from taking control and getting those next six points."

Leading the Cats against the Sooners was sophomore Suzanne Hagge. She totaled nine kills and nine digs for the match to lead the team in both categories. Freshman middle-blocker Kate DeClerk also added seven kills for the Cats.

"I'm pleased with what we are trying to do with this line-up," Hagemeyer said. "We are working on playing tough and competitively. I want our attitude to become that we are playing to win, as opposed to playing not to lose."

Gloria Holcomb had 12 kills for the match, but Gretchen Anderson led the Sooners with 16 kills. For the match OU had three players who had more than 10 kills.

"Oklahoma appears to have raised its level of play a notch since beating Nebraska," Hagemeyer said. "With that win came the reality that they could be playing for the regular season Big Eight Championships, and they are playing like a championship is at stake."

The Cats will play Missouri on Wednesday at Ahearn Field House.

Montana rallies Chiefs for 17-14 win

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO — Kansas City's old-timers were too much for San Diego's rookies.

The Chargers, seemingly given new life by two rookies, found out what it's like to give Joe Montana and Marcus Allen too many chances. Montana directed a nine-play, 80-yard drive that Allen capped with a 1-yard run with 1:57 left, and the Chiefs beat the Chargers 17-14 Sunday.

After getting knocked out of two games with injuries and missing two others, Montana finally was around to show his fourth-quarter magic.

"It's always important to do that as a team," Montana said. "It gives confidence not only to our offense but to our defense. If they can stop them, we still have an opportunity to put a drive together late in the game."

San Diego had gone ahead 14-10 on John Friesz's 4-yard pass to Anthony Miller 1:05 into the fourth quarter, set up by rookie Darrien Gordon's 54-yard punt return.

But Neil Smith blocked two field-goal attempts by John Carney, including a 31-yard try with 3:28 left to give the Chiefs the ball at their 20-yard line. Smith also blocked a 46-yard attempt by Carney in the third period.

The Chiefs got an immediate boost after the second block when Montana completed a 22-yard pass to Keith Cash. Shawn Lee was called for roughing Montana, taking the Chiefs to the San Diego 43.

After three straight incompletions, Montana hit Willie Davis on a 12-yard pass on fourth-and-10, then threw another 12-yarder to Hassan Jones.

Allen ran a draw play 18 yards to the 1 just before the two-minute warning, then scored his second TD of the game and 103rd of his career.

"I was on the edge of my seat," said Kansas City tackle Joe Phillips, a former Charger.

"I turned to (Dan) Saleaumua and said, 'We've got the right guy for the job out there, with Joe.' Then you give that wraparound draw to Marcus. He's the guy to run the draw."

Allen, who also caught a 15-yard touchdown pass from Montana in the first quarter, said Montana was calm on the winning drive.

"When your leader doesn't show any signs of concern, why should you?" Allen said.

San Diego linebacker Junior Seau said Allen complements Joe very well.

"We knew that coming in. They made some big plays."

The Chiefs (5-1), off to their best start since 1971, won their fourth straight and handed San Diego (2-4) its third straight loss.

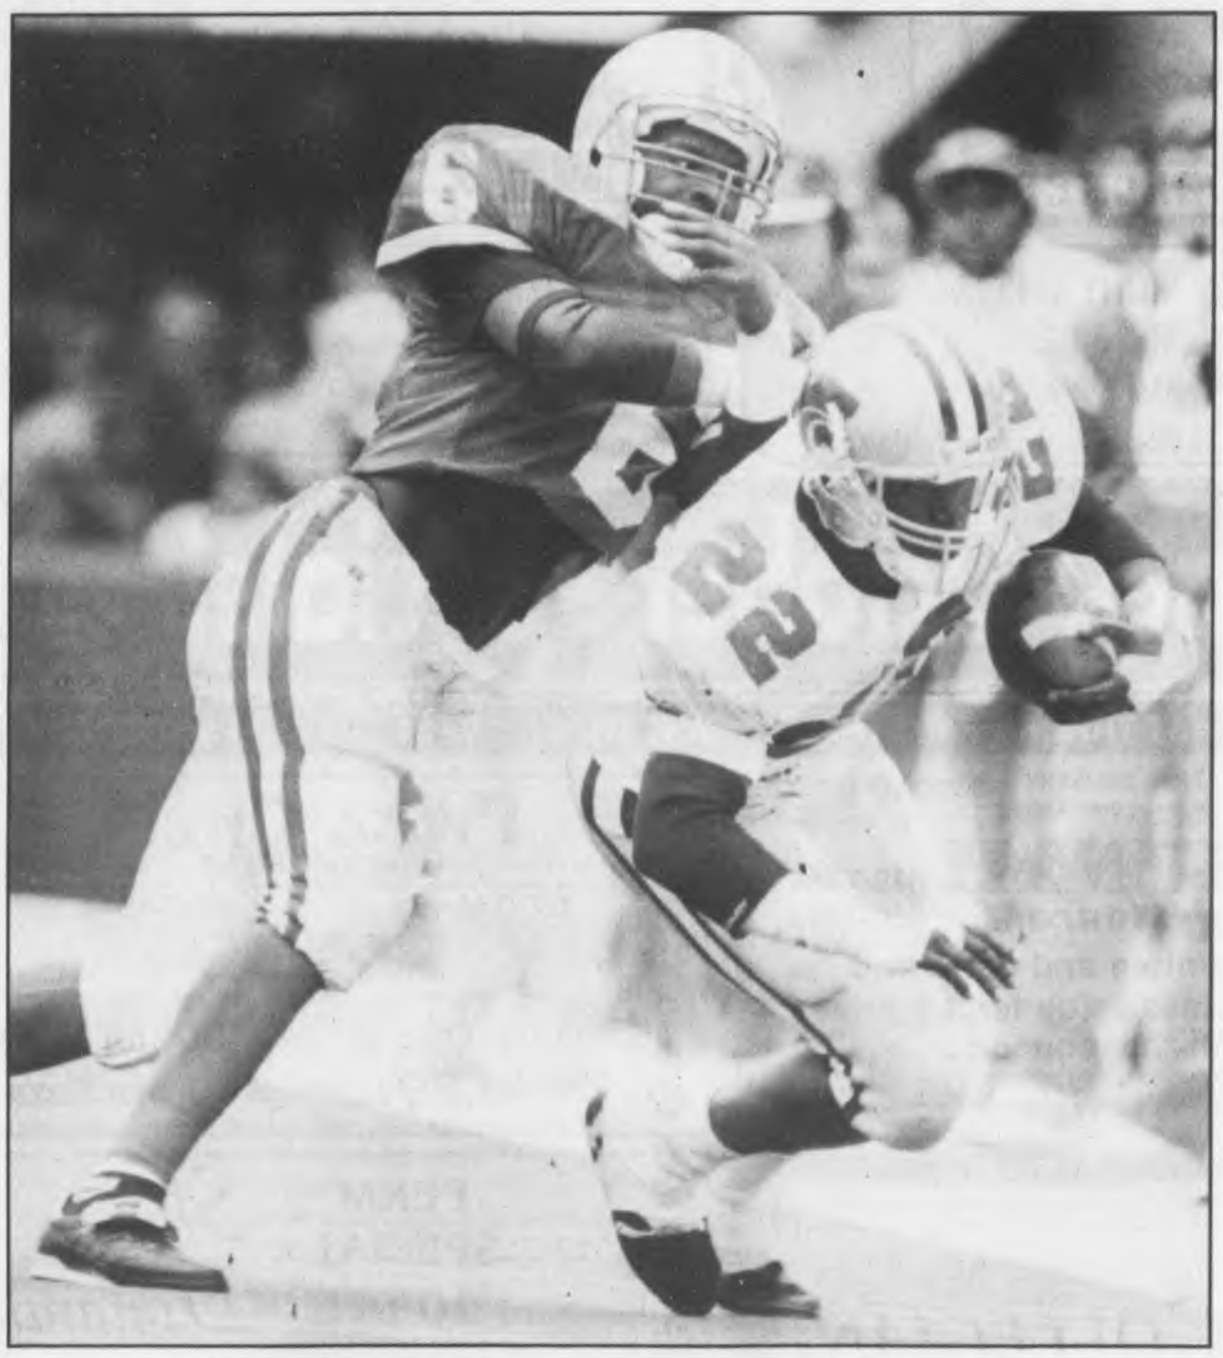
Eleven of the past 16 games in this AFC West series have been decided by a TD or less, and the Chiefs have beaten San Diego in seven straight regular-season games.

"When we get them down, and they don't have any timeouts left, we can't let them go 80 yards," Chargers coach Bobby Ross said.

"If they don't get that (fourth-and-10), we run out the clock and win the game."

Trailing 10-7 and repeatedly hurting itself with penalties, San Diego got a spark from Gordon.

The rookie cornerback from Stanford pulled in Bryan Barker's punt at the San Diego 43, slipped a tackle, worked his way inside and was pulled down by former Charger Martin Bayless at the Chiefs' 3.



Miller got free in the right flat and made it into the end zone ahead of Albert Lewis for the Chargers' first lead.

Montana then moved Kansas City 66 yards to the San Diego 17, and Nick Lowery's 35-yard field goal attempt bounced off the left upright.

Montana, back after missing one game with a strained hamstring, was 21-for-39 for 284 yards.

CHIEFS ROUNDUP

- Joe Montana directed a nine-play, 80-yard drive that Marcus Allen capped with a 1-yard run with 1:57 left, leading the Chiefs to a 17-14 win over the Chargers Sunday.
- Neil Smith blocked two field-goal attempts by John Carney, including a 31-yard try with 3:28 left to give the Chiefs the ball at their own 20.

J.J. Smith avoids a hit from Nebraska cornerback John Reece during K-State's loss to the Cornhuskers. Smith rushed for 102 yards, which makes him the fourth K-State rusher to have three consecutive 100-yard games.

option game, which created a real problem for us," Snyder said. "We gave up some passes that we should not have."

"We were making a lot of mental errors on big plays," said linebacker Percell Gaskins, who finished with six tackles and one quarterback sack. "Nebraska — they're not ranked (No. 5) in the nation for nothing. You can't make mental mistakes and expect to beat a team like Nebraska."

K-State established a 47-yard drive on its last chance at a score, but on fourth and goal, Smith was stopped at the two-yard line on an option play, and the Cornhuskers took over a loss of downs.

"Outside of when we scored, we had two opportunities to score, and we fell flat on our faces."

The other opportunity for K-State to score came late in the first half. Coleman set up the Cats on a 47-yard pass from May to put K-State on the three-yard line for first and goal.

After Smith failed to reach the end zone, the Cats resorted to a little trickery.

On second and goal, May pitched to Smith, who rolled right and attempted to pass back to May in the left corner of the end zone. His pass floated, and Tyrone Williams was there for the interception with 54 seconds left in the first half.

"I was surprised he (Smith) threw the ball," Williams said. "I was already on my way over there."

The Corhhuskers utilized the remaining seconds, driving to K-State's 32-yard line and setting up a career-long, 48-yard field goal from Byron Bennett to take a 31-14 lead at the half.

"That was a big blow for us," Coleman said. "We definitely needed that touchdown to go into the half. That would have given us excellent momentum. That was a backbreaker."

WORLD SERIES

Phillies edge Toronto 6-4 to even title race

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TORONTO — Don't try telling Toronto's Dave Stewart that one bad pitch beat him in Game 2 of the World Series against Philadelphia.

One bad inning, yes. One bad pitch, no.

Stewart worked six innings in the Phillies' 6-4 victory Sunday night, and five of them were fine. The other one, however, was something much less than that.

There were consecutive walks to Lenny Dykstra and Mariano Duncan opening the third inning, sandwiched around a wild pitch.

A pair of bloop singles by John Kruk and Dave Hollins made it 2-0.

Then Jim Eisenreich hit an 0-2 pitch for a three-run homer and the Blue Jays were in a 5-0 hole.

"It wasn't one pitch," Stewart said, who made 32 of them in the inning and 123 in the six innings he worked. "You can't be beaten on one pitch. It was two walks and two soft hits.

Then they got the big one.

"It happens. You pitch enough, you don't get away every time."

Stewart said he thought he threw well and made the pitches he wanted to make. The bottom line, though, was that he came away with his fourth loss in six World Series decisions.

Compared with an 8-0 playoff record, Stewart's World Series failures are somewhat mystifying.

He was MVP of the American League playoffs when he beat Chicago twice.

"I'm surprised when I don't win any time of the year," he said.

"I have a pressure to win. Losing is not a pleasant experience. I don't like it. I hate losing."

FOOTBALL

Walden considers change

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — Kansas' perilous victory over Iowa State kept the Jayhawks' season alive and may have created a quarterback controversy for Cyclones coach Jim Walden.

Iowa State rallied for 14 points in the fourth quarter after freshman Todd Doxzon replaced Bob Utter at quarterback, but the Jayhawks just kept handing off to June Henley to preserve a 35-20 victory Saturday.

The Jayhawks held what seemed to be a comfortable 21-6 lead after three quarters, but Doxzon threw a 63-yard touchdown pass to Calvin Branch, and Utter ran in a 2-point conversion to make it 21-14.

Henley, who ran for 237 yards on 27 carries, then ripped off a 77-yard touchdown run to again give Kansas a seemingly safe lead.

But James Brooks had a 60-yard return on the kickoff to set up the Cyclones on the Kansas 32, and Branch scored on a 1-yard run to keep Iowa State alive.

Kansas went back to Henley, giving him the ball 12 times on a 15-play drive that went 91 yards and ended with quarterback Asheiki Preston scoring on a 1-yard run to finally subdue the Cyclones.

Afterwards, Walden didn't commit himself on whether he had made a permanent change to Doxzon from Utter.

"I just felt like the freshman needed some playing time," a pained Walden said after his Iowa State team suffered its fifth straight loss.

"Bobby was getting a little tired. He fumbled the ball away down near the goal line, and then the negatives started to pile up for him. I thought it was time to make a change."

Utter completed 3 of 8 passes for 64 yards and a touchdown, but threw two interceptions and fumbled once. Doxzon threw only one pass — the 63-yard touchdown to Branch.

Utter gained 77 yards on 10 carries while Doxzon picked up 16 yards on seven carries, but showed a marvelous instinct for making the pitch on the option play.

565 yards of total offense on one of the best teams in the nation. Nebraska accumulated 545 yards and had four less first downs.

"There were some positive things that came out of this game," wide receiver Andre Coleman said. "We know we can move the ball. I have great confidence in our defense, and I know they will bounce back. We made some mistakes, and we were right in it to the end and this is the No. 6 team in the country.

"You can call it a fluke, you can say they didn't play well, but Kansas State is for real. We lost by 17 points, but anyone who saw this game knows we were right there 'till the end."

With 7:44 remaining in the final quarter, the Cats were down only 31-28. But Nebraska pounded the ball downfield on its next possession for a touchdown and a 38-28 lead.

K-State had one last chance, and drove the ball down to Nebraska's 9-yard line for first and goal. On fourth and goal, Coach Bill Snyder elected to run the option, and Smith was stopped two yards short of his fourth touchdown.

Osborne said he and Snyder talked before the game about how neither coach could remember a time when five games into the season, they didn't know just how good their teams really were.

After the game, Osborne had this to say, "I hope today he feels like they're a pretty good team, because if they're not, then we're in trouble."

Let's put it this way Mr. Osborne, you're not in trouble.

Free films promote awareness

Four films have been chosen for the Women's Week in Film. The first film ran last night. Films will also run on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights at 7 p.m. in Union.

The Women's Week in Film is sponsored by U P C Multicultural Affairs Committee, the Women's Studies Program and the Women's Resource Center. All the films are free.

A panel discussion will follow each film, said Mary Taylor, chairwoman for the multicultural affairs committee.

Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, said the panelists are there to stimulate audience discussion about the films.

The panelists were chosen by a variety of criteria, including being good at facilitating audience discussion, Davis said.

"We wanted people who make the audience comfortable in discussion," she said. "They also needed to have a particular interest and expertise in the films."

Davis said all the panelists are from Manhattan. Some are students, and some are faculty and staff.

The films discuss a variety of topics including motherhood, marriage, careers, and gay and lesbian parents. Other topics include prejudice, racism and violence.

The films started on Sunday, with "Things Your Mother Never Told You," Taylor said.

The panel discussion is in the same room as the film, and anyone is welcome to attend, Davis said.

Davis says that the goal of the week is to promote awareness of the issues dealt with in the films.

"The week will provide an opportunity for people to learn, think and discuss together," she said.

Davis said the films were chosen because they wanted films on different topics.

"We wanted to offer a variety of things, which I think we have done," she said.

Fred Phelps to answer calls on DB92; protest at Union to precede talk show

KELLY-ANN GERAGHTY
Collegian

Controversial anti-homosexual Topeka pastor Fred Phelps will take to the airways on KSDB 91.9 FM's "A Purple Affair" at 7 p.m. Monday.

The call-in talk-radio show, with co-hosts Stephen Seely and Rob Rawlings, is billed as an opportunity for callers to argue with Phelps about a subject he calls "Fags."

"Phelps is a person who has hit a lot of nerves, which should boost the number of calls we get," Joe Montgomery, KSDB station manager, said.

Because KSDB is expecting a larger calling audience to participate, "A Purple Affair" is expanding its one-hour format to two hours, Montgomery said. Also, in anticipation of some overzealous callers, the show will be operating on a five-second tape delay to catch any words that could violate FCC laws, Montgomery said.

"When I first spoke to Phelps on the phone, he seemed like a really nice guy. But he says the word 'fags' as a derogatory statement way too many times in a normal 10-minute conversation," Seely said.

Seely said he has many questions he wants to ask Phelps. These questions range from what Phelps' objectives are, what his background is, how he finances his organization, to why he was disbarred (Phelps was once a lawyer) and why he doesn't travel the country.

KSDB has only two phone lines, which means callers will have to be persistent if they hope to speak to Phelps, Seely said.

As a result of last Tuesday's protest at the Landon Lecture, KSDB has decided to post security at the station while Phelps is on the premises.

Prior to his radio appearance, Phelps plans to protest in front of the K-State Union at 6 p.m. The subject of his protest is Don Fallon, K-State coordinator of religious activities. Phelps said Fallon is "promoting the godless fag agenda on KSU's campus."

"We want the callers to say their opinions so Rob and I don't have to," Seely said.

Week focuses on forests

TRISHA BENNINGA
CHAD HARRIS
Collegian

K-State will be celebrating its third annual Rainforest Week today through Oct. 22.

World Rainforest Week involves more than 100 organizations in 40 different countries.

The goal of Rainforest Week is to promote various issues involved with rainforests, including deforestation and the indigenous people of the rainforests.

The World Rainforest Movement chooses the theme of the week, said Robert Wilson, senior in marketing and president and co-founder of the Rainforest Action Group, a campus-based student organization.

He said this year's theme of indigenous people was chosen for two reasons.

The first was because the United Nations declared 1993 the year of indigenous people. The second was because of escalating levels of violence surrounding the indigenous people of the rainforests.

Wilson said he became involved because of the importance of rainforests.

"I'm interested in rainforests because of their importance to civilization. Every ecosystem relies on others for survival, and when the rainforests are gone, so are the species living in them, as well as everything else, in given time," Wilson said.

Wilson said he feels many students do not know as much about rainforests as they could.

"The subject of rainforests involves many issues. Not only is it an environmental issue, but a political one as well," Wilson said. "It is definitely one of the least-understood environmental issues facing us today, compared to some — such as the ozone, but it is equally important. It's because we don't live near rainforests that makes it easy to overlook them."

SARA SMITH/Collegian

The group began in October 1991 in an effort to educate students about the issues of rainforests and promote their preservation.

Rainforest Week starts Monday night with guest speaker Matt Diller.

Diller is the vice president of the St. Louis Rainforest Alliance and a professional educator who has traveled to different rainforests throughout the world.

His speech, "The Penan: An Endangered Civilization of Borneo," will be a slide show and lecture presentation on the Penan tribe and the threat to their livelihood from loggers. It will be presented at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the Union Big 8 Room.

The K-State Young Democrats have helped in arranging for the week's speakers, Michelle Smith, junior in political science, said. She is volunteering to help the Rainforest Action Group with the week's activities.

Students often overlook the importance of the rainforests, she said.

"Rainforest Week is to bring out awareness to students about things involved with rainforests, not only the populous of the rainforests, but also the people that live there, the wildlife that live there and the different things that provide so much for our lives every day," she said.

Wilson said he is excited about the activities included in this year's celebration and hopes many students participate throughout the week.

"The subject of rainforests is a very important one. We're only in our third year at K-State, but we've been improving every year here. People should be updated with what's going on in the environment, and this gives them a

Campus Fest '93 activities conclude with award presentations and drawings

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

K-State was one of 25 campuses across the nation to play host Campus Fest '93 on Oct. 6-7.

Part of the Campus Fest activities included prize drawings of merchandise from the sponsors.

"I am not sure how many students signed up and took part, but they planned on between 10,000 and 15,000 taking part," Kay Farley, manager of the K-State Union Bookstore, said. "We drew the names of 20 students for prizes."

Farley said once the names were drawn, they had to confirm the winners were actually students, and they could be notified of their prizes.

The award presentation was in the lower level of the Union Bookstore Friday afternoon. Those who could not attend can go to the bookstore to get their prizes at a later time.

One of the people notified and attending the presentation was Spencer Hale, junior in business. She won a Champion sports bag full of clothing.

Hale said she was not planning on attending Campus Fest, but she just stopped by between classes.

"I just stopped by for the ice cream, and it looked fun. So I went and changed to come back," she said. "I took part in all seven events they offered."

The bungee event, one of the new events sponsored by Sports Illustrated, was her favorite, Hale said.

"I thought it was tough," she said. "It was a challenge, and I like challenges."

Campus Fest was a two-day event that K-State has hosted three times in the last five years. It is sponsored by businesses that market to students.

"It started out five years ago as a pilot program on a few campuses," Farley said. "The second year they contacted us to see if we would host one."

Several changes were made for this year's event, including the addition of Sports Illustrated as a sponsor.

Farley said Campus Fest organizers were very pleased.

"The organizers like coming here because we have a great campus, and the students are enthusiastic and like to participate," she said.

"I hope they come back next year," Hale said.

ROTC cadets test tactics in field exercise

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

Prospects of dreary skies, tracking through muddy fields and eating MREs — meals ready to eat — did not keep the K-State Army ROTC from field-training exercises at Fort Riley last weekend.

The weather was not a surprise to one member, who said almost every field-training exercise (FTX) he had been to had rainy weather.

"God loves the infantryman. This kind of weather is perfect for an FTX. It really suits their purpose," Wiley Rittenhouse said.

Rittenhouse is an Army ROTC tactical officer and a senior in math.

The purpose of the FTX is to provide Army ROTC cadets with hands-on training in light infantry tactics.

"The FTX is based on light infantry tactics — tactics that are used are a part of all Army training," Rittenhouse said.

About 65 staff members and cadets participated in the training that focused on four different exercises: bivuoac, range patrol, basic rifle marksmanship and a road march.

Bivouacking involves the set-up of a temporary camp where cadets spend the night.

"The cadets are taken out to field and have to set up their own tents," Jim Delapp, Army ROTC cadet captain and senior in architecture, said.

Some of the cadets were out for the first time and were not too sure about sleeping out in the weather, Delapp said.

However, he said, tents would not always be available in a real combat situation.

"You would normally not have on any cover at all. You'd just wrap up in a poncho," Delapp said.

Another part of the field training is range patrol.

Cadets are taken out in squads and are placed in a variety of situations they would face in combat. Range patrol is a part of the squad tactical reaction assessment course (STRAC), Rittenhouse said.

"During the first 18 minutes they receive fragmentary orders that gives them a mission. Then they have to write up their own operation order. The remaining time involves the actual execution of the mission," Rittenhouse said.

Ben Kearns, Army ROTC cadet captain and senior in sociology, said cadets were expected to learn how to handle themselves in a variety of situations.

"The cadets are put in different situations like ambush, sniper fire and artillery. They're taught how to set up an ambush and how to react to sniper fire," Kearns said.

Noise and light disciplines are key to range patrol, Kearns said. Keeping noise and visibility to a minimum is essential during range patrol to remain undetected by enemy forces.

Confrontation with enemy forces is not always avoidable, making knowledge and skill with a rifle necessary. During the FTX, cadets used an M-16A1 in the basic rifle marksmanship (BRM) exercise.

"The BRM involves handling a rifle to shoot at targets 50 to 100 yards away or more. Qualifying parallels with Army standards. You have to shoot one round per target using an M-16A1," Rittenhouse said. "The cadets will be firing from two positions: the foxhole-supported position and the prone position."

Kearns said the FTX is great hands-on experience.

"I look forward to coming out and doing this," he said.

Plants and people help one another

BRENT DUNGAN
Collegian

Where can students get a degree in lowering stress, building feelings of accomplishment and becoming closer to nature? K-State offers a course of study that teaches just that.

K-State is the only university in the United States to offer B.S. and M.S. curricula in horticultural therapy, which trains students to use plants to help special-population groups or individuals receive social, psychological and physical benefits.

"It's designed to teach undergraduate students the effectiveness of people/plant health relations," Richard Mattson, professor of horticultural therapy, said.

Mattson said the idea that plants can help people is not a new one. The concept was seen in the 1800s in Spain when hospital patients who could not pay their bills were put to work in hospital gardens.

The patients who were interacting with plants by working in the garden were cured much faster than those who were not, Mattson said.

Roger Ulrich, a geographer from the University of Delaware, found similar results when he conducted a study of patients recovering from surgery.

A select group had windows that were overlooking flower gardens while another group had a view of a brick wall. The patients with the view of the garden recovered earlier and used half as much pain medication, Mattson said.

K-State began to offer a degree in horticultural therapy in 1971 in cooperation with Menninger's Clinic in Topeka.

Students enrolled in the program complete a background of course work in horticulture, psychology, sociology and behavioral sciences, agriculture and other general University requirements.

There are six specialization areas to choose from, including gerontology, corrections, mental health, developmental disabilities, education and community-based programs, Mattson said.

Horticultural therapists have had a remarkable effect on people in all of these areas, he said.

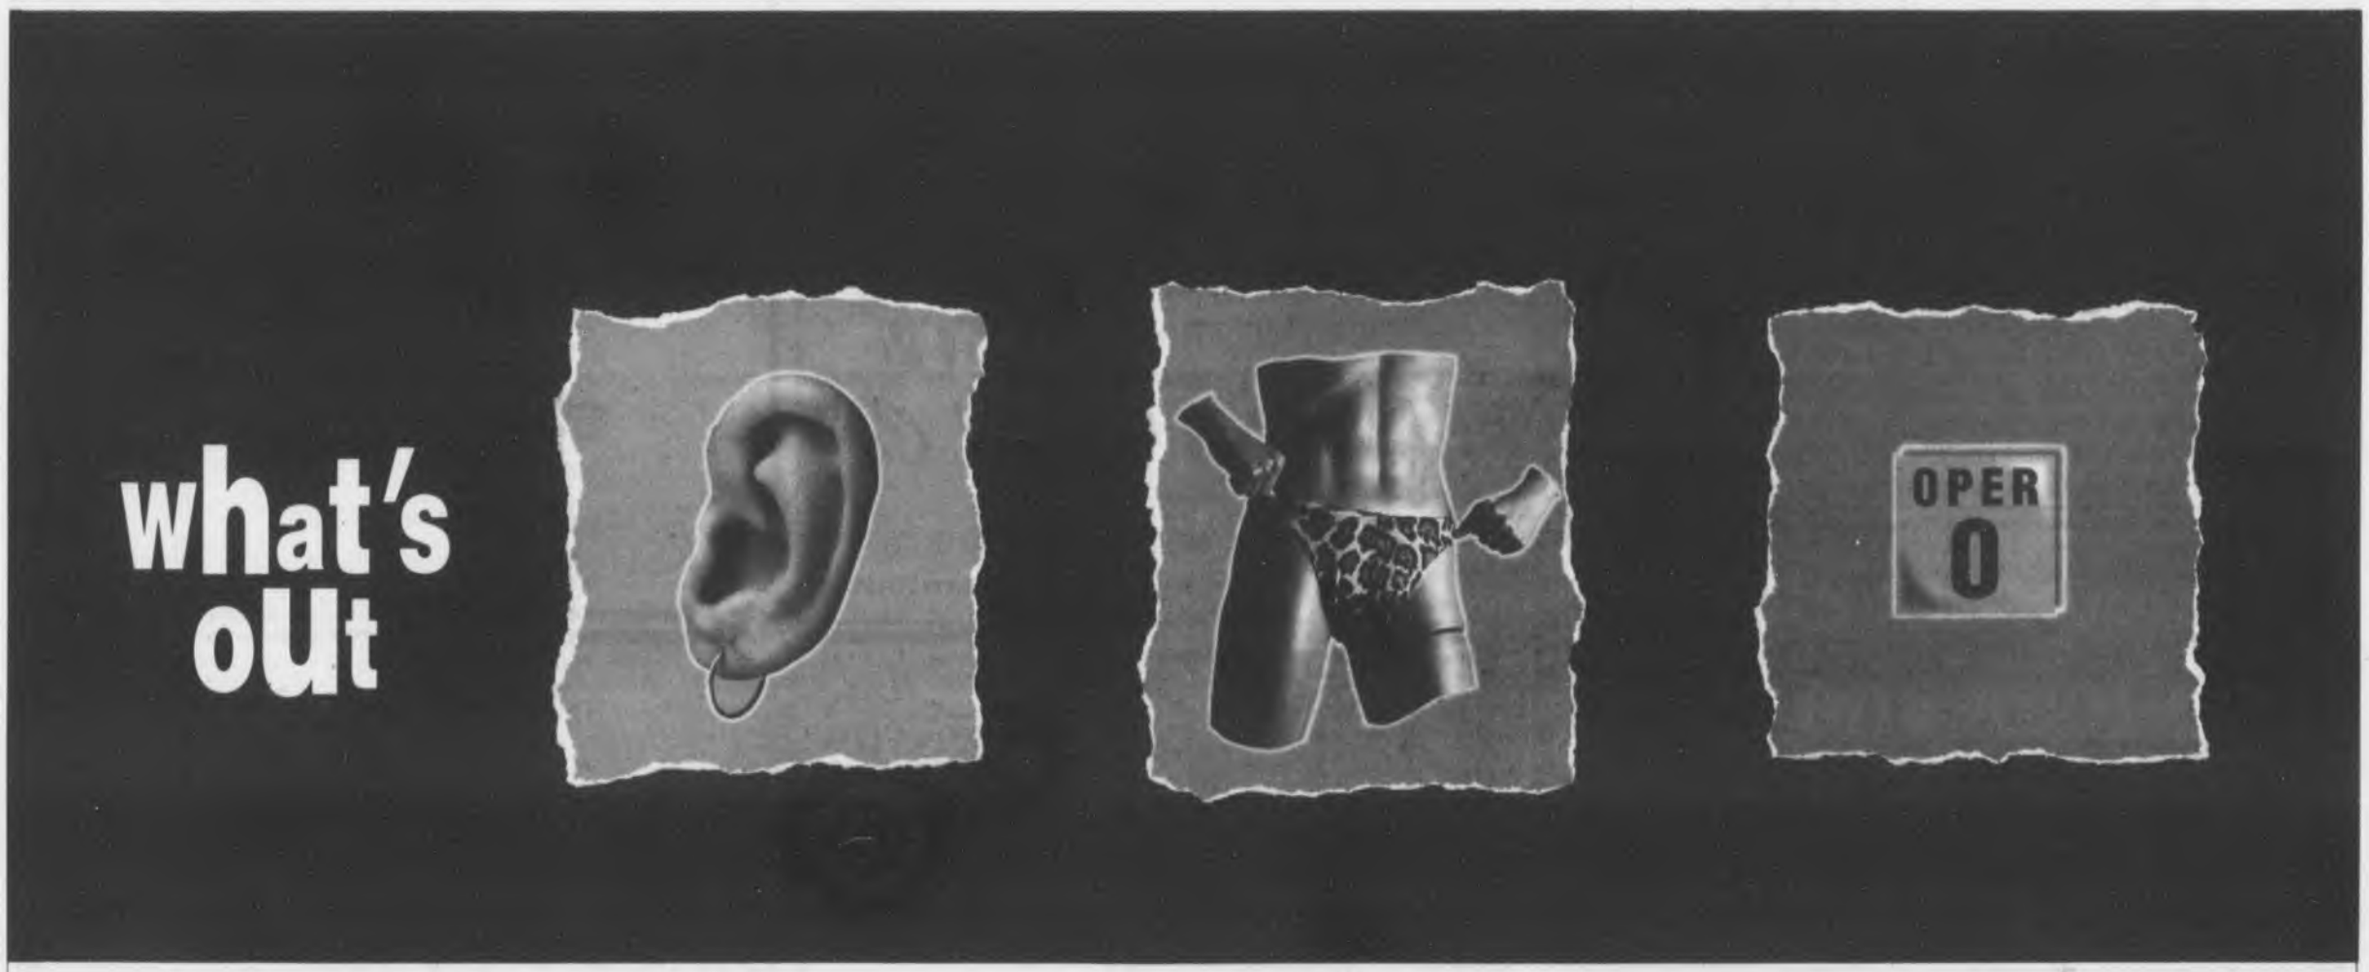
"It can change the mind and give positive values," Mattson said.

Mattson said children are interested in horticulture because of their concern about the environment. Students at Lee Elementary were very enthusiastic about the program and planted trees and grew flowers for everyone in the school, Mattson said.

Mattson said there are about 10 students a year enrolled in the program with 100-percent placement. Students usually have about 10 job offers before they graduate, Mattson said.

Samantha Schuette, senior in horticultural therapy, and liaison for the Horticultural Therapy Club, said she is not worried about finding a job.

"I would enjoy working in any of the fields," Schuette said. "I'm leaving my options open."



Schuette said she chose this major because she likes to work with the elderly and at the same time enjoys working with plants. This major allows her to work with all kinds of people while using plants, said Schuette.

Beth Whitson, senior in horticultural therapy and club president, said she started out in elementary education, but decided to change majors because horticultural therapy left her more options with what she could do in regard to children. Whitson plans to work with children going through rehabilitation.

"I like to work with people hands-on," Whitson said.

The late Dr. Karl Menninger, psychiatrist and former director of Menninger's Clinic in Topeka, said, "I want to be on record as believing strongly in this program of training in horticultural therapy.

"It is one type of what we call adjunctive therapy, which brings the individual close to the soil, close to Mother Nature, close to beauty, close to the mystery of growth and development. It is one of the simple ways to make a cooperative deal with nature for a prompt reward."

REVIEW

Day-Lewis stands out in 'Age'

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

"The Age of Innocence" is an insightful, liberal look at forbidden passion in a stubbornly old-fashioned society. Edith Wharton's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel becomes an eloquent, poetic film.

In the 1870s, New York attorney Newland Archer (Daniel Day-Lewis) is in the limelight of society.

Archer is recently engaged to the beautiful and prominent May Welland (Winona Ryder) and is passively awaiting an assuredly superficial coexistence in the realm of New York's extravagant mock aristocracy. It's a life of old-fashioned norms and religiously cosmopolitan tradition.

However, Archer is too deep for such rigid formalities. Besides that, he is beginning to realize an unusual attraction to May's unconventional and worldly cousin Ellen (Michelle Pfeiffer), a modern woman.

Society doesn't share Archer's hidden appreciation of Ellen. In fact, her impending divorce from a French count prompts much hearsay from the many conforming members of the elite social circle.

The scandal concerning the divorce also raises doubt in Archer's mind. Although he would never be truly free of his passion for Ellen, he questions whether he should marry into such controversy.

"The Age of Innocence" is a meticulously filmed story about the rich social customs and standard conformity in a "silent organization" of hypocrisy. Director Martin Scorsese proves he has a softer, more dramatic and romantic side. This social critique deeply contrasts with his harsh depiction of modern society commonplace in films like "GoodFellas."

As for the acting, Day-Lewis is the undisputed standout of the cast. His on-screen presence exudes an air of assertive solidarity, while yielding subtle hints of vulnerability in his character.

May is not so complex as Archer. Consequently, Ryder cannot command the same attention Day-Lewis deserves. Ryder has a charming innocence about her, which makes her perfect for the role in this respect, but she appears unnatural as a woman whose obsequious subservience renders her an "incapacity to recognize change."

Pfeiffer delivers an adequate performance as the countess. Scenes intermittently display the loneliness in Ellen's life. Although the scenes may tug at your heartstrings, they are too haphazard to invoke any long-lasting empathy for her character.

This film is very picturesque and artistic in a sense. However, the basic story has been told many times before as in "Howards End."

Nevertheless, "The Age of Innocence" is remarkably captivating and entertaining.

Dear Cassandra,

Five months ago, I met a wonderful guy. Everything was great. We saw each other over the summer even though we were miles apart. I saw him some, and we talked on the phone at least twice a week.

In August, we both moved back here for school, and I found out that over the summer he had been seeing his ex-girlfriend and having sex with her. He assured me it wouldn't continue.

Yet it has continued, and I have continued to put up with it and forgive him because I feel, in time, he will tell her to leave him alone, and everything will be OK. Am I right for being so understanding? He tells me he doesn't know what he wants. However, when I tell him he needs to decide because he is hurting me, he always makes me forgive him. I guess it's just the look in his eyes.

Should I continue to put up with his confusion, hoping it will pass? I wish he could understand how much I love him and the way he is hurting me. What can I do to make him realize what he is doing to me?

His ex-girlfriend has known all along he has been going out with me, and that makes me wonder what kind of person she is and what kind of diseases she might have. After all, they broke up because she slept around. It just bothers me that we have both slept with him during the same month, maybe even during the same week, and this doesn't bother her — she doesn't mind if she has to share in order to have him. Do you have any advice for me? What do I do?

Signed, Confused as much as he is

Dear Confused,

I know how you feel. You're thrilled when he's with you, and you're crushed when he's with her. He plays with your emotions and damages your heart. The emotional yo-yo you're on must stop. This relationship is destructive, unfair and incredibly unbelievable. Above all, this relationship is dangerous — both to your mental and physical health. Get out.

You say you hope he will leave her in time. Why would he leave her? And when? As long as you accept his behavior, continually forgiving him, this guy has the best of both worlds. He has his cake, and he is eating it too, at your expense. You should not tolerate his actions. Get out. Further, you say he MAKES you forgive him — with the look in his eyes. What are you saying? You choose to forgive him. He isn't making you forgive him, just as he isn't making you stay in this farce of a relationship. You are choosing to remain. Take responsibility for your actions.

On that note, so does he. He tells you he is confused, and so that explains his two-timing. Tough toenails. This little boy needs to grow up and stop using women. Again though, you need to stop allowing him to use you. Get out.

Next, I'm very concerned about your perception of his ex-girlfriend. Sure, I'd be concerned about the diseases she is currently carrying, but only out of fear for what you may have picked up. Ever hear of AIDS? You said you wonder what sort of person she is to sleep with him when she knows you have been with him too. But you could ask yourself that same question. The point is, the fact that he's been having sex with the both of you — within the same damn week — should bother YOU enough to leave this jerk. She can have him.

Get out of this horrible relationship. Get out. Get out. Get out. Get out before you lose every shred of your dignity and self-esteem as a woman. Take care of yourself, get your shit in a pile and get out.

Project safe beef studies food safety

MIKE HIND
Collegian

The recent outbreak of food-born illnesses in the United States has prompted K-State to conduct research in an attempt to curb such instances.

The E. Coli bacteria in uncooked hamburger has caused deaths in the Northwest and Florida.

K-State will be specializing in pre-harvest food safety.

"The main goal of pre-harvest food safety is to minimize product contamination beginning on the farm," said John Galland, assistant professor of clinical sciences.

This is an attempt to locate and eliminate the particular strain of E. Coli, known as 0157, which is responsible for deaths in the Northwest and Florida, Galland said.

E. Coli lives in the cow's intestinal tract. In recent years, this new strain has been more lethal to people, Galland said.

Research will also focus on salmonella as well as antibody residues, Galland said. One program that has been implemented is Project Safe Beef.

In this program, veterinarians set up a treatment protocol in cooperation with livestock producers that show what animals have been treated with what drugs and the withdrawal time that will be needed to completely rid the animal of the drug.

Methods in the form of vaccination of livestock has also changed, Galland said.

"Today injections are administered in the neck rather than the top butt," said Galland.

Intravenous or subcutaneous injections are used more than hypodermic injections, Galland said.

Another program that is being given serious consideration is a computer rapid diagnostic test that will identify animals with the infectious strain of E. Coli, Galland said.

Studies are being considered on the possibilities of competitively excluding the E. Coli bacteria from the cows intestinal tract.

"We are looking at the possibilities of introducing cows to a particular diet that might greatly encourage the growth of an organism that would compete and exclude the E. Coli bacteria," Galland said.

One of the main concerns for K-State is getting federal funds to help pay for the research.

Jerry Gillespie, professor of clinical sciences, said federal funding should come in time.

"There will be funding," Gillespie said.

"The concept of pre-harvest food safety is a new enough concept that the usual funding agencies aren't up to speed yet. It will just be a matter of the funding agencies getting caught up with the new idea."

Skill classes aid readers

VICKY TILLIER
Collegian

Pay attention to what you are about to read. Comprehension of study materials will guarantee your success as a college student.

"Students need to have better reading skills because their success in college is directly linked to their reading and thinking ability," Kathryn Holen, assistant professor in elementary education, said.

Most of the time students do not really focus on reading materials, they just go through the motions, Judith Lynch, associate director of academic assistance, said.

"Students have comprehension problems because they don't read carefully enough," she said. "They tend to save up their reading and do it in one big huge amount."

Reading is a very active process, Holen said.

"Comprehension should be viewed as the act of a reader constructing meaning," she said.

Holen said a person's ability to construct meaning is influenced by the author's writing style, reader's vocabulary knowledge, reader's word identification abilities and a reader's background or prior experience.

"It's the interaction of all these factors — add them all together, factor them all in and then there is a big equal mark — comprehension." she said.

Students can enroll in several different classes to improve their reading comprehension, Lynch said.

The Academic Assistance Center offers a general study skills class and a student success seminar. Students can also enroll in a developmental reading lab through the College of Education.

Students are taught how to muscle read at the student success seminar, Lynch said.

"Muscle reading is a nine step process," she said.

The process is preview the material, outline, formulate questions from your outline, read the material, underline key words, answer questions and write them down, recite answers, review and review again.

"This technique takes a little longer, but you only have to do it one time," Lynch said.

Safety week seeks to remind students of on-campus risks

PAULA MURPHY
Collegian

Safety Awareness Week has been condensed into one day this year.

A table will be set up from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Union on Wednesday. Information will be available on safety issues.

"The purpose is to raise awareness," Kelley Fink, health educator at Lafene Health Center, said. "Students need to be reminded of safety issues. Unfortunately, when it comes to personal safety, it's easy to put it aside and not remember the risks on a daily basis. Hopefully, they can put this information to use and be safer."

Fink said when it comes to violence and rape, sometimes students do not realize the risks and therefore do not take precautions.

K-State Police reported five aggravated assaults in 1992. These are assaults that involve some sort of weapon. There were 32 simple assaults (without weapons) and one sex offense reported. There were 18 rapes or attempted rapes reported in Riley County in 1992.

"A lot of students don't even lock their doors," Fink said. "Many students come from smaller communities. While Manhattan is not as big as Kansas City or Wichita, students still need to be aware."

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

Anti-homosexual message focus of Topeka preacher

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

For the second time in less than a week, Fred Phelps was at K-State to voice his opinions on homosexuals.

Phelps, carrying a sign with the messages, "God gave up fags" and "Sodomy is no human right," picketed in the Union free speech zone on Monday night. About 35 people gathered to talk and listen to Phelps and his entourage.

The purpose of being on campus Monday was for the call-in radio program "A Purple Affair," broadcast by KSDB-FM 91.9, Phelps said.

"Whenever we go to something like that, we usually take a few people and conduct an outdoors demonstration at the same place," Phelps said.

Phelps said he also made the trip to protest against comments made by Don Fallon before the Landon Lecture last Tuesday.

Fallon is a retired Lutheran campus minister and the University coordinator of religious activities. He has served two years on the Bisexual/Gay/Lesbian task force and is a pastoral counselor to the gay and lesbian community.

"He is the focus of the problem on this campus," Phelps said. "You've got a formidable number of gay teachers and professors from the letters we get, and people are afraid."

Phelps' goal was to make students aware of the message he is preaching.

"We want to teach a little of the Bible's truth at this place," Phelps said. "Secondarily, it will alert some people to think about these issues. We look upon it as the foremost issue on the American political debate agenda."

Fallon said he disagrees with Phelps' views on the issue of homosexuals.

"I feel Fred Phelps' attitudes towards the gay and lesbian community is based on a narrow biblical view," Fallon said.

In response to Fallon's comment, Phelps said he would like to have a debate with Fallon on this issue.

"Why won't Fallon let us debate, here on this campus, about this issue?" Phelps said. "If you're real sure about your so-called interpretation of these verses is right, and mine is wrong, let a little light on it.

"Let me now issue a challenge to Brother Fallon. If my interpretation of those verses are wrong, they ought to be able to show it to me," Phelps said.

Fallon said he didn't think he would want to be involved in such a debate.

"I hear that he really doesn't encourage a dialogue," Fallon said. "He is so prejudice toward his views.

"It's hard to have a discussion with his closed, biblical point of view. I think that it would give more credence to his point of view."

Phelps said he feels Fallon does not know the Bible very well.

Man's body found in Blue River

TED KADAU JR.
Collegian

The body of Manhattan resident Darryl Simms, 33, was found at 2:30 p.m. Sunday afternoon after a search by the Pottawatomie County Sheriff's Department.

Simms, who apparently drowned sometime between Oct. 14 and Oct. 17, was found on a brush pile in the Blue River four to five miles east of the Blue River Bridge near Zeandale, Pottawatomie County Sheriff Anthony Metcalf said.

Simms was last seen being chased by his father and Riley County Police Department officers, Metcalf said. The chase followed an incident police were unable to disclose. Simms was chased behind the McCall Pattern Co., 615 McCall Road, and he jumped over a dike on the Blue River.

After jumping over the dike, Simms' father and RCPD officers gave up the chase, and his father filed a missing persons report on Oct. 14.

Metcalf said no word about Simms was heard until a man who had been hunting for glass bottles along the Blue River called the Pottawatomie sheriff's department Saturday morning and said he had seen what he thought was a dead body near the Blue River Bridge.

"He said that he had even taken pictures of what he thought was a body," Metcalf said.

"So, I told him to bring the film in, and I would pay to have it developed."

After the film was processed Saturday evening, officers said they felt the film did indeed reveal a body. A search began Sunday morning.

Metcalf said after a two-hour search, no body was found, and after considering water current, it was decided to search both sides of the river with boats.

Simms' body was finally found on the brush pile.

Metcalf said an autopsy is being conducted on Simms, but the Pottawatomie sheriff's department does not suspect foul play.

"We think that he probably slipped down the bank and drowned. We didn't find any tracks or anything like that," he said.

"We suspect that he just fell in the water and couldn't swim."

Metcalf said the Blue River is especially swift right now and may account for Simms' body being found so far down stream from where he was originally spotted.

"The river is very treacherous right now," he said. "We had a lot of trouble getting the boats in and out."

Salina Republican announces bid for gubernatorial nomination

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Promising a leaner state government and a resolve to make the tough choices to achieve it, Secretary of State Bill Graves today declared his candidacy for Republican nomination for governor in 1994.

Graves, 40, who has been campaigning for months, made his candidacy official at an early-morning appearance before about 200 family members, friends and Republicans at his home town in Salina.

He then came to Topeka for a Statehouse announcement attended by about 100 people, including his predecessor, Jack Brier, and former Lt. Gov. Jack Walker, who will serve as Graves' campaign chairman.

Graves also had appearances scheduled in Overland Park, Pittsburg and Wichita later today, and is set to go to 14 other cities criss-crossing the state Tuesday through Thursday. His announcements appearances include a 15-minute speech.

He became the first formally declared candidate for the GOP gubernatorial nomination, although former state Sen. Fred Kerr soon will follow suit. Kerr's campaign manager, Jeff Wagaman, said the Pratt agribusinessman would announce during a two-day, 14-city tour of the state on Nov. 2-3.

U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery of Topeka formally declared his candidacy for the Democratic nomination shortly after Gov. Joan Finney announced in early September that she would not seek re-election.

Others actively seeking the GOP nomination are Lenexa Mayor Rich Becker and Pittsburg businessman Gene Bicknell. Other Democrats already campaigning are former House Speaker Marvin Barkis of Louisburg and state Rep. Joan Wagnon of Topeka.

Graves was hired for the secretary of state's office by Brier in 1980, won the office in 1986 when Brier tried unsuccessfully for the GOP governor nomination and won re-election in 1990.

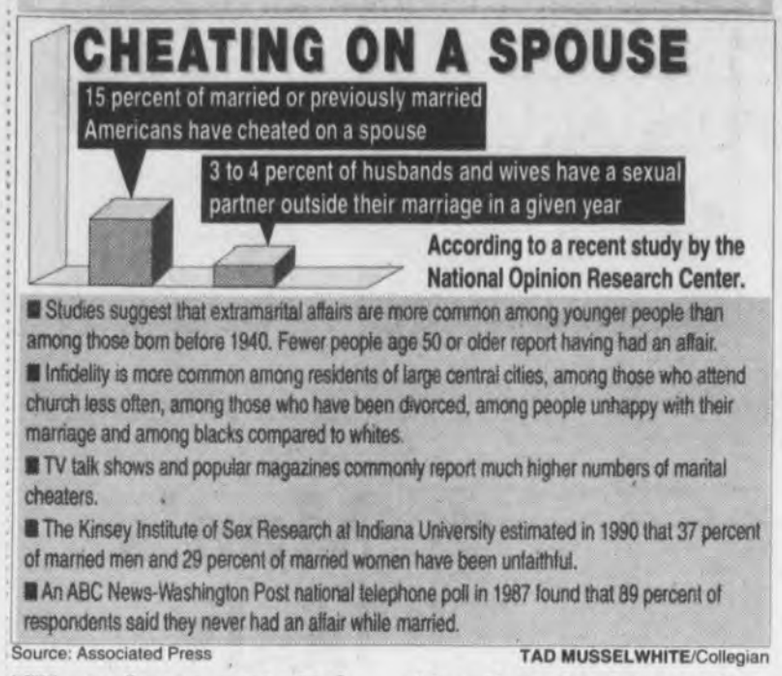
He is a native of Salina, where his family operated Graves Truck Lines for nearly 50 years before selling it, and is a 1975 graduate of Kansas Wesleyan University in Salina.

His wife, Linda, a Kansas City attorney, was at his side for today's announcements.

Walker, who described Graves as a loyal Kansan who knows and understands what it takes to operate government in Kansas, introduced the candidate at each of the announcement stops.

Graves said he wants to be governor because of the challenge of public service, his genuine interest in the well-being of every Kansan, and "a firm conviction to serve my state in return for the many opportunities that have been given to my family and me."

"There isn't anything I would rather do over the next five years than run for, be elected to and serve as the governor of Kansas," he said.



He made several references to his family's rags-to-riches experience of poverty during the 1930s depression to building a regional truck line, which was sold for millions in 1979. He worked for the company while growing up and for two years after college graduation until it was sold.

Graves said Kansas doesn't need a new vision to solve its problems.

"I think 'new vision' is a political cliche that is used to ignore today's realities and offer seldom-delivered promises of the future," he said.

"We need new eyes, new energy, a new commitment to see and fulfill the vision that historically brought opportunity and prosperity to our state."

KU students arrested for office break-in

The journalism and mass communications office in Kedzie Hall was broken into Sunday morning between 1 a.m. and 4:20 a.m., according to the K-State Police.

Michael Ray and Michael McCombs, both University of Kansas students, were arrested by campus police while carrying a computer and a videocassette recorder toward the K-State Union parking lot.

Campus police detective Richard Herrman said the two gained entranced to the office, in Kedzie 105, through an unlocked door on the east side of the building.

"They walked in through an unlocked door," Herrman said. "And once they got in, they crawled in a window to get into the office."

Marlene Franke, office manager for the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, said she thought the door should have been locked.

"The door was supposed to be locked," Franke said. "Someone might have left it unlocked for Collegian staff because they come in and out at various hours."

Franke said there was no significant damage to the office. The intruders had taken a television and a VCR from the journalism library, she said.

Campus police have confiscated everything taken out of the building, she said. Ray and McCombs took a set of University keys, Franke said.

"With those keys, they could have gotten into various offices in Kedzie.

"I just think that they walked in an open door, and they took what was easy. If the police hadn't caught them, they could have gotten everything."

Abortion doctors ask FBI for investigation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Death threats, assaults and constant picketing have become as much a part of abortion doctors' lives as caring for patients, physicians said Monday.

The doctors asked the Justice Department and FBI to investigate some pro-life activists that allegedly practice terrorism.

Smeal and the doctors urged Congress to pass the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act, establishing federal jurisdiction in such cases. The act is awaiting action by both the House and Senate.

The Justice Department's criminal division is checking to see if there are anti-terrorist laws that might apply to the alleged harassment, John Russell, department spokesman, said.

Georgia wants Russia to help end fighting

TBILISI, Georgia (AP) — Beleaguered Georgian leader Eduard Shevardnadze said Monday he was counting on Russia to end rebel fighting in western Georgia that has cut a key rail link between Georgia's capital and the coast.

Meanwhile, peace talks on another rebel movement could start as early as next month, a U.N. mediator said Monday. Shevardnadze's forces have been defeated recently in Abkhazia, also in western Georgia.

Forces backing ousted President Zviad Gamsakhurdia captured a key town Sunday in western Georgia, inflicting heavy losses on troops loyal to Shevardnadze.

The fall of Samtredia, a junction on the main road leading from the capital to the Black Sea port of Poti, severed the interior's last rail link with the coast.

Military downsizing causes submarine alert

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy is keeping its nuclear-missile submarines on alert more of the time now than during the Cold War. This is being done to pick up some slack from the reduction in America's overall arsenal, according to official data obtained by two researchers.

The researchers, foes of such levels of deterrence, are challenging any perception that the United States significantly reduced its nuclear readiness when President Bush removed U.S. strategic bombers and Minuteman II intercontinental ballistic missiles from alert two years ago.

While almost 1,000 warheads were eliminated from alert in that move, and still more have been removed with the retirement of older nuclear systems, the submarine-based nuclear force is making up some of the difference, Robert Norris and William Arkin say in an upcoming article in the Bulletin of Atomic Scientists.

States experimenting with welfare reform

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some states are proposing to put caps on welfare, but without the Clinton administration's guarantee of a job when the checks run out.

The experiments — which require federal approval — could lead to homelessness, critics said. But backers of the plans contend the administration will be retreating from its promise to reform welfare if it blocks the tough new programs. President Clinton has vowed to bring sweeping changes to a program that supports 5 million poor families, most of them headed by single mothers. The administration is working on a plan to limit welfare benefits to two years.

Several states have asked to experiment with such limits, including Wisconsin, Vermont, Colorado, Florida and South Dakota.

Silent disorders ...

when people suffer from bulimia and anorexia

TORI NIEHOFF
Collegian

One in every 10 students on campus suffer from anorexia nervosa, bulimia or some other form of eating disorders.

Most of these problems remain unknown to even their closest friends.

"The trend is away from students acknowledging they have an eating disorder," Dorothy Farrand, clinical psychologist at University Counseling Services, said.

It is often believed that women are the only sufferers of eating disorders. In fact, 90 percent of people who have eating disorders are women, but men suffer too.

"It is believed that many men have eating disorders also but manifest it differently. They don't acknowledge their situation as an eating disorder," Farrand said. "Society also makes it easier for a male to overexercise without suspicion or abuse steroids."

University Counseling Services, located in Lafene Health Center and the Health Education department of Lafene are available to help students who suffer from an eating disorder.

The Counseling Services moved to Lafene from Holton Hall in 1988. Lafene deals with all types of problems; eating disorders are just one problem Lafene works with.

Lafene provides many types of prevention and treatment. There is confidential care, emotional support and lessons about eating healthy foods. The steps can be attained through individual therapy, group therapy or educational support groups. Each is designed to assist students in different ways.

Lafene offers more of a referral for students through the Health Education department.

"We work together with Counseling Services, dietitians and medical staff," Reita Currie, registered nurse, said. "We determine what level the student is in and help determine the next step that is needed."

Both departments cater to the needs of the community and campus.

"We have seminars about eating disorders upon request, mostly to living groups and classes," Farrand said. "These talks raise awareness about eating disorders and usually result in several people coming to us after the seminars suspecting they have a form of a eating disorder of have identified symptoms of the disease in a friend."

"It is believed that many men have eating disorders also but manifest it differently."

DOROTHY FARRAND
CLINICAL PSYCHOLOGIST

One student who prefers to remain anonymous said, "My problem started in high school and intensified as a freshman. I felt many pressures to look a certain way and began to hide my eating habits and would purge once or twice a day."

The services not only would assist someone with an eating disorder in finding the next step she needs to take, but would recognize reasons why her eating disorder occurred.

For some people, being away from home makes it difficult to eat a balanced and healthy diet. Other people feel they just get out control and a their small problem becomes too extreme, Farrand said.

"Many times roommates, family members, boyfriends or girlfriends of a person suffering from an eating disorders, come to us to talk about the problem," Currie said. "We suggest that they complete a 'checklist for symptoms' with their friend and then maybe the realization of the problem will be out in the open."

The checklist simply asks several questions, dealing with eating habits and thoughts. The last statement on the questionnaire says, "If you have answered yes to five or more of these questions, you may have an eating disorder, SEEK HELP."

The help a person needs is on a higher level than friendly advice. Through health education, it is evident that policing the food intake of a friend or loved one doesn't work and may cause resentment.

The center can direct people to some sort of counseling, group therapy or a dietician.

Society's views promote dieting myths

TORI NIEHOFF
Collegian

Society paints a picture of the perfect man or women, and most people cannot live up to those expectations.

According to the Kansas Dietetic Association, 10-25 percent of the population suffers from some form of eating disorder. The two most commonly known are anorexia and bulimia.

Anorexia is also known as self starvation. Anorexics are often thin to the point of emaciation and are afraid to gain weight.

Symptoms caused by the severe weight loss include: dry skin and hair, cold hands and feet, general weakness, constipation, digestive problems and insomnia.

Bulimics are average or slightly above average weight. They do most of their binging and purging in private and experience rapid weight gains and losses. They purge through self induced vomiting, abusing laxatives and diuretics, fasting and over-exercising.

They are subject to medical problems such as dehydration, constipation, digestive disorders, severe dental problems and muscle weakness. Ulcers and heart irregularities may develop due to bulimic activity too.

According the the American College Health Association, many Americans believe thinner is better. People with eating disorders believe it so deeply that their weight and dieting success become the measure of their self esteem. They think eating is the cause and result of many of their problems.

People with eating disorders spend a lot of time thinking about eating, food, weight and body image. They often feel fat when they eat regular meals or even small amounts.

The American College Health Association says crash dieting, a form of eating disorders, can make you more prone to injury. This form is often used by athletes because they count on their bodies for performance. Rapid weight loss leads to dizziness, tiredness, depression or irritability, which will hinder athletic performance.

The United States Olympic Committee says that weight loss is only beneficial to an athlete if the weight goal and rate of weight loss are realistic and diet is balanced.

Many things cause all of these types of eating disorders. Cultural and psychological issues, personality traits and learned behavior all contribute to eating disorders.

Bad eating habits may spell the end for the mafia in America

Finally, there may be a real threat to organized crime in this country.

And his name is Joseph "Joe Dogs" Iannuzzi.

You see, this man has been the chef of chefs in the mafia underworld, coming to prominence due to his zabaglione, orecchietti, prosciutto and cicoria insalata.

His deadliness resides in the fact that most of these dishes are prepared with copious amounts of cream, butter, wine and cognac, egg yolks and the likes. If a bad hit doesn't get the mobster, then cholesterol surely will.

After years of running immoral gambling and prostitution rings, the mafia is a hurting group. As it should be. Especially after Dogs tells of "When there are no crimes, they eat while waiting for them to happen."

It's a changing world, and if this country wants to rid itself of organized crime, then new approaches need to be taken. Contact your local crime family's chef and send him or her your best Italian recipe. Make sure the fat and alcohol level are the highest you can find.

If the fat level doesn't wipe out our mobster-filled world, then at least they'll be too obese to do any harm. Can't imagine a hit-man so large that he can't lift his arm. Makes it difficult to aim a pistola.

Dogs ratted on the mafia and went on the witness-protection program. He's out of that program now after breaching security by trying to appear on the David Letterman Show. But all that aside, we should follow his idea and cook our criminals into helplessness.

We need to take back America before the health craze completely sweeps over us.

We need real heroes. People with the stuff to cook these criminals into oblivion.

It's nothing personal. Strictly business.

Another good friend succumbs to 'progress'

"Rita was 16 years, hazel eyes and chestnut hair. She really made the Woolworth counter shine. And Eddie was a sweet romancer, and a darn good dancer. And they waltzed the aisles at the five-and-dime."

Nanci Griffith, "Love at the Five-and-Dime"

I heard something this weekend that really made me sad. The place this song is about and where many of us explored wide-eyed as children will soon be no more.

It seems some Woolworth stores are the latest casualty of our bigger, more efficient times. The stores in Lawrence and Wichita, for instance, will be some of the first to go.

If you've never been to a Woolworth's, let me introduce you.

They are a smaller, less organized, less shiny version of Wal-Mart. They sell a lot of plastic things — cups, hangers, kiddie bats and balls and lunch boxes. They have tile floors and fluorescent lights, but most of all they have little restaurants with lunch counters right there inside.

Nanci Griffith calls Woolworth's a beautiful place. And it plays a central part in one of the prettiest songs she ever wrote.

"Woolworth stores are the same wherever you go," she says. "They have this wonderful smell like popcorn and chewing gum rolled together on the bottom of a leather-soled shoe."

She says when she was in high school in Austin, Texas, she used to change the bus at Sixth and Congress, right in front of a Woolworth store.

"I always had just enough time to run into the Woolworth store, get myself a vanilla Coke, dig through the record bins, wink at the boys and get back on the bus."

When I saw Nanci in concert at Memorial Hall in Kansas City a couple of months ago, she said she went to the Woolworth's down the block from her hotel to get a Coke a few hours before the show, and, by golly, two of her fans were sitting there at the lunch counter, waiting for her. She said she sat and talked with them until her manager came to retrieve her for the show.

Small-town familiarity even in the big city.

They remind me of stopping there with my brother and my mom after swimming lessons when I was about 7.

Walking around barefoot and all goosebumped, begging for things I didn't need, the bottoms of my feet blackening more with every step.

LAJEAN RAU

Somewhere along the line, Woolworth's lost in the retail game of natural selection. Massive Wal-Marts, remodeled K marts, shopping malls, Sam's Clubs and Hyper-Marts won.

I went to Hyper-Mart in Topeka this summer with my friend Eric. It was huge. The carts are so big you can hardly maneuver them empty, much less full. You can go in and come out with a gallon of milk and a riding lawnmower. Scary.

It may seem funny for someone who is only 23 to wax nostalgic, but lately, I've been doing a lot of thinking about growing up and what I want out of life. And the more and more I think about it, the more I'm convinced I want to live somewhere beautiful and quaint.

Maybe a small town near the mountains somewhere, where people "go to town," and they know people they see there. Where the view from your kitchen window after 10 years can still take your breath away every morning.

I have been in some sort of a funk since about the end of July. Lots of things, not even worth mentioning, contributed. They know who and what they are. Some of them enjoyed having me in their gloomy grips, and others wished they could let go. But they held me nonetheless.

I have been sad for almost three months. Sad. There's no other way to say it. And since I've been lots of things before — stressed, upset, angry, depressed — but never really sad, I couldn't figure it out, and I couldn't get rid of it.

This weekend I felt different, better. Instead of depending on my friends to cheer me up, I spent some time alone, thinking.

Friday night, I walked down to Aggieville by myself. It was a beautiful night, about 60 degrees and misty. I carried an umbrella. I went to the Dusty Bookshelf and Streetside Records and Vital Vinyl. I saw people I know and bought three books and three compact discs. The streets were shiny black with rainwater, and the streetlights glowed above me as I walked. I ate alone at Texas Star Cafe, reading my new book and talking with my friend Erin who works there.

I thought about all the things that have happened to me, all the changes I've been through, and instead of feeling sad, I felt hope.

I think I've realized, or maybe remembered, that we are all products of our environment. And that's something I can do something about. So, I will go somewhere beautiful, familiar, quaint, strong and peaceful. Maybe some place that still has a Woolworth store.

Campus cops deserve praise for halting theft

Editor,

The K-State Police deserve high praise for thwarting a major robbery this past weekend.

At 1 a.m. Sunday, two Lawrence men were in the process of stealing a television, VCR and other electronic equipment from Kedzie Hall. By getting into our main office, they had in their possession the keys to both of our computer labs. Fortunately, a campus police officer on routine patrol spotted their truck and waited to the side. When he saw the men bringing equipment out of Kedzie Hall, he arrested them.

Bravo to the campus police for making these routine patrols on campus and for checking out suspicious vehicles. The campus police recovered our stolen items and prevented a theft that could have amounted into the tens of thousands of dollars.

Some diversity caffeine might wake up student

Editor,

William Luton's letter lamenting the woes of enforced enlightenment, a.k.a. the multicultural-overlay program being considered, is a sad, but typical response of the mindset encountered at K-State.

Luton's view of the proposed diversity-overlay program as a waste of time and money is the result of a sheltered monocultural upbringing. It is not his fault; it is the direct result of the mindset in a larger context other than me, me, me, mine, mine, mine, mine.

No amount of well-intentioned awareness programs can open Luton's mind or anyone else's. This pervasive attitude among the Anglo student body has been erected and cemented with a societal prejudice that refuses to acknowledge and respect foreign cultures.

In Luton's own words, if it doesn't put a dime in his pocket, it isn't worth his time.

What a tribute to the dominant Anglo society he is. Truly materialistic and mystic without regard to the potential benefits of unlearning prejudiced viewpoints.

Kansas in general is not as overtly bigoted as other states, but is instead uniformed. Luton is the classic example of one who clings to his small-town mentality in the face of global-village realities.

Wake up, Luton, the world is changing. So, can you?

Mr. President: All our worlds

WE CARE WHAT HE WEARS. WHERE HE SLEEPS. WHAT HIS WIFE'S INAUGURAL GOWN WILL LOOK LIKE.

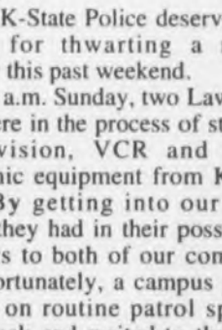
I'm just not happy about this whole presidency thing.

My candidate didn't win in November, and now all I see is this new guy in gym shorts or gray suits, giving speeches, getting haircuts, jogging. He's always jogging. I think he's just trying to get away from the press. I don't blame him.



The point is, it's no fun having a president if you don't like him. I think I know how liberals must have felt in the 1980s. Having a so-called member of the opposition in office gives your political identity a distressing duality.

On one hand, you are a pessimist. "This guy is going to ruin everything. He makes me sick. He's an embarrassment, and in four years there's not going to be an America anymore."

On the other hand, you become an optimist, looking to the future: "Just wait, just wait until election time comes and we get a real president to run this country. (to presidential supporters) You guys are all going to be sorry. And I'm going to laugh and say 'I told you so!'"

What interests me about this phenomenon is it seems to be limited to the subject of who's in the Oval Office. You don't see people getting nearly as riled up over who's a city councilman or governor. They might care, but they don't wave their arms in a frenzy and foam at the mouth about it. They save that for talking about the president because America is fascinated by the presidency.

We care what he wears. Where he sleeps. What he eats. What his wife's inaugural gown will look like. Where his kid goes to school. Where he went to school. Whether the press is harassing his cat.

SARA SMITH

I think this excessive fascination stems from our nation's need to be nosy about something and at the same time feel our intrusiveness is somehow justified. We don't have a royal family here like they do in Great Britain, so we use the Kennedys. (I personally think it would be great if the Kennedys and the British royal family got together this spring break. Teddy and Fergie would get along smashingly.)

With the possible exception of Madonna, the president is the most prominent public figure in the country and sometimes the world. I wonder how many people's lives revolve around him, if you count the staffers in the White House, the Secret Service, the press corps (foreign and national) and all his handlers. That's a lot of trouble for just one person.

But he's in the easy part of the job now, after the election. Before he gets to 1600 Pennsylvania Ave., he has to go through the process. I think it's interesting how every single president promises to change the system and then uses it to get elected. Anyone who can get the job of president under the current corrupted system should be automatically disqualified on those grounds. "Oh, you've been elected? Sorry, you can't have the job."

But he gets the job anyway. And in your eyes the country is saved or doomed, depending on your party affiliation. You get to spend the next four years gloating or cringing.

After a while, though, you have to turn off C-Span and face the music. You must achieve inner peace and admit to yourself that there's nothing anyone can do to keep him in or kick him out until the next election. I admire people who can maintain this attitude.

I ran into one the other day. We were both sitting with a bunch of avid Republicans who were in their optimistic mode, batting around names for possible candidates in 1996 – Bennett, Kemp, Dole. One remained silent, offering no opinion. So, I asked him, "Who do you like in '96?"

He paused as if in thought, looked me in the eye with a straight face, and said, "The Braves."

BUSINESS

Bad checks bounce to courtroom

Merchants sue check writers, collect damages

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Some K-State students believe area businesses may be collecting more money from insufficiently funded checks than is necessary.

Mark BeMent, senior in business administration, said he bounced two checks after forgetting to record an automatic teller machine transaction.

"Businesses need to look at it as if it was fraud or an error of calculations in a checkbook," BeMent said.

Businesses should take into consideration that the majority of Manhattan residents are students without much of an income, he said.

"We are dealing with college students," BeMent said.

"It's not like we're dealing with people who have an excess amount of income."

Taking responsibility for your actions helps the situation with the merchant, BeMent said.

"I took the initiative to take the responsibility to rectify the situation by calling the merchant," he said.

Vince Vahsholtz, senior in broadcast journalism and owner of Mobile Music Machine, said he has dealt with the consumer and retail aspect of insufficiently funded checks.

"The first time I received a bad check, I was taken by surprise," Vahsholtz said. "My bank deducted the amount of the bad check from my balance and, in return, I bounced five checks."

Vahsholtz said businesses should not charge students unnecessary fees for insufficiently funded checks.

"Manhattan is a college town, and the business owners need to realize this," Vahsholtz said. "Students contribute greatly to the Manhattan area economy."

Keeping good public relations should be a concern of local businesses, he said.

"Filing a civil action only aggravates the problem," he said. "A person who passes a bad check probably has little money and can't afford to pay damages in a lawsuit. I would consider a lawsuit against a student bad public relations."

If legal action must be taken, Vahsholtz said the criminal system is a better way to deal with bad checks.

"The criminal process is a much better way to handle the situation. When you receive a letter from the county attorney saying that you could go to jail if you don't pay, then you pay. This process is less expensive and easier for the individual, as well as the business," Vahsholtz said.

Stan Hayes, president of Stan Hayes Enterprises Inc. and owner of Mini-Marts in Manhattan, said his business handles four to five insufficiently funded checks each week, which are put through the legal system. He said his company can collect money for pain and suffering through the legal system.

"We are now able to collect civil damages and get our money back from the pain and suffering," Hayes said.

He said many cases of bad checks are a result of carelessness.

"There is more carelessness among the younger people," Hayes said.

Roy Hulett, store manager of Wal-Mart in Manhattan, said they have a store policy to prosecute individuals who have written insufficiently funded checks.

"We're real fortunate because we have a good return rate," Hulett said.

Hulett said that insufficiently funded checks come hand-in-hand with a business and must be addressed properly.

"It's definitely something we need to address and work on at all time," Hulett said.

"It's something we'd sure like not to deal with, but it's part of the business."

Lower contamination level found after summer flood

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment and the city of Manhattan are trying to determine if a site at Third and Osage streets is still contaminated with cleaning solvents.

Before the summer flood, ground water at the site was determined to be contaminated by cancer-causing, chlorinated solvents commonly used in dry-cleaning.

A sinkhole developed in the area as a result of the flood. Water had to be pumped from the sinkhole to repair damaged water lines.

The water was tested and found to have much lower amounts of the solvent, Jim Pearson, city manager, said.

He said the contaminants could have been diluted or carried away by flood waters.

"The contaminants are not evident at this point," Pearson said. "We are waiting to see if the KDHE will release the site."

Rob Elder, environmental geologist for the KDHE, said the solvents are heavier than water and could be lower in the ground water than the water pumped from the sinkhole.

"This does not mean or imply the contaminants are gone," Elder said. "We believe the contaminants are still a problem."

He said the contamination could be harmful to the public water supply because ground water from the site flows into the city's wells.

Elder said clean-up could include a pump and filter system at the site.

If it is determined the area is still contaminated, an investigation into the origin of the pollution will continue.

Pearson said city officials thought the contamination did not originate at the site, but they did not have evidence to determine from where the contamination came.

"The contamination could have come from anywhere," Pearson said.

Elder said the KDHE suspected the contaminates originated at the Fremont Coin-A-Matic laundry.

The owner of the laundry did not want to be quoted for this article, but said he did not think the pollution came from his business.

Whoever caused the pollution will be liable for the cost of the investigation and cleanup. If that party cannot pay for the cleanup, then the site would be eligible to be placed on the Superfund list and paid for by the federal government, Elder said.

The city is not liable, but it stepped into the investigation to prevent the area from becoming a Superfund site, Pearson said.

"It would not have been in the city's interest for the land to be turned over to the EPA (Environment Protection Agency)," Pearson said.

"It would have bogged the process down and impacted the area economically because the land owner could not do anything with the property."

Elder said this type of investigation usually takes six to 18 months to complete.

Wildcat quarterback Chad May passes to a receiver downfield during K-State's 30-25 win at Minnesota. May was unanimously chosen the Big Eight Conference Offensive Player of the Week following his record-breaking performance at Nebraska last Saturday.

May selected for award after breaking records

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State quarterback Chad May, who set a single-game school record last Saturday for 489 yards passing, was a unanimous pick for the Big Eight Conference Offensive Player of the Week.

May directed an offense that amassed 565 yards of total offense, the second highest total given up in Nebraska coach Tom Osborne's tenure.

The total was just nine yards short of the all-time team total offense record in K-State history. The 1982 team accumulated 574 yards against South Dakota.

The Cats lost the game 45-28 — their first setback of the 1993 campaign.

"I didn't think Chad would have the kind of day he had, but at the same time, he didn't surprise me," Coach Bill Snyder said. "I think he's capable of being the quarterback he proved he was against Nebraska 95 percent of the time."

A native of Laverne, Calif., May completed 30 of 51 passes for 489 yards to establish school records for completions, and school and Big Eight records for yardage. The previous school best was 439 yards, set by Lynn Dickey against Colorado in 1969. May had touchdown passes of 70 and 58 yards, and his passing total broke a Nebraska opponent record.

May engineered drives of 90 yards, 74 yards and two for 80 yards, all of which led to touchdowns for the Wildcats.

"It seems like every time we play these guys, their quarterback plays out of his head, or maybe he's that good all the time," Osborne said after the game.

"But it is hard for me to believe that this same team only scored 10 points against Kansas last week."

Following the game, May said he would have traded the record-breaking performance for a different outcome.

"I would give all those yards back if we could've just come out a winner," said May, who has passed for 1,533 yards in six games.

"We've fell short three years in a row now. Our receivers did a great job of getting open and made some great catches. I guess they didn't respect us that much on the outside, and we just ran right by them."

Missouri cornerback Jason Oliver was selected Big Eight Defensive Player of the Week after the Tigers' 42-9 rout of Oklahoma State.

Oliver recorded two interceptions and broke up two other passes. His first interception set up the Tigers' second touchdown and marked the first time this season Cowboy quarterback Toné Jones was intercepted in 63 attempts.

Jaeger lifts Raiders to cap frantic fourth quarter

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — Jeff Jaeger's 53-yard field goal with 16 seconds remaining capped a frantic fourth quarter and gave the Los Angeles Raiders a 23-20 victory against the Denver Broncos Monday night.

It was the second-straight last-minute win for the Raiders (4-2), who dominated the game for three quarters, then had to survive two touchdown passes by John Elway in a 59-second span early in the fourth that gave the Broncos a 17-13 lead.

That was typical of the fourth quarter, in which the teams combined for 27 points. Two plays after the second touchdown, Jeff Hostetler combined with James Jett on a 74-yard scoring play that put the Raiders back in front 20-17. Jason Elam's 37-yard field goal tied it for Denver.

But Elway couldn't move the Broncos (3-3) again against a pass rush that sacked him seven times.

When the Raiders got the ball back, there was 2:38 remaining, and when Hostetler hit Tim Brown, who caught six passes for 116 yards, the Raiders were in field goal range. They couldn't move past the 35, but Jaeger drilled one down the middle for the victory.

It was the 15th game in the last 19 between the two teams that was decided by less than a touchdown.

And for all practical purposes, the game didn't start until the fourth quarter, with the Raiders holding a 13-3 lead and dominating, particularly on defense.

Then the Broncos scored twice in 59 seconds, first on a 27-yard pass from Elway to Arthur Marshall on one of the few plays all night on which he had time to throw, then on a 2-yard pass from Elway to Reggie Johnson. That followed a fumbled snap by Hostetler on the first play after the kickoff was recovered at the 5 by Greg Kragen.

But it was too early to bury the Raiders.

On the second play after the kickoff, Hostetler found Jett in the middle of the Broncos' defense. The former Olympic sprinter ran away from three Broncos to complete a 74-yard play that gave the Raiders a 20-17 lead.

So back came Elway and the Broncos, 66 yards to the Los Angeles 20 that set up Elam's second field goal. That tied it with 5:33 to play in the game.

The Raiders led 13-0 at halftime. They had four sacks, held Denver to minus-6 yards passing and had a 49-yard field goal by Jaeger erased by a holding penalty.

Webber signs with Warriors

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. — Chris Webber, intent on proving he's worth every dollar, signed a 15-year, $74.4-million contract Monday with the Golden State Warriors.

"I know a lot of guys who play basketball and are overpaid and really can't play," Webber, the NBA's No. 1 draft choice, said. "I'd rather have a reputation of earning what I get. Right now, I have to prove that I deserve it. I have to prove it to the team, to the owners, to the coaches and most importantly to myself."

Webber, who as a 6-foot-10 power forward twice led Michigan to the NCAA title game, signed a copy of his contract during a news conference at the Oakland Coliseum Arena.

"That's the price in the marketplace," Warriors president Dan Finnane said. "And I hope I can see the day when everybody says Chris is ridiculously underpaid."

Finnane spent three days a week in Detroit for the past five weeks negotiating the deal with Webber's agent, Bill Strickland, and his adviser, Fallasha Erwin.

The contract has an average annual worth of $4.96 million, although Webber is to receive $1.6 million in the first year. That was done so Webber could fit into the salary-cap slot left open by Tyrone Hill's trade to Cleveland in July.

"He's coming to a team that really needs him desperately," said Warriors coach Don Nelson, who is counting on Webber to become the dominating inside presence the team has lacked in recent years.

"He'll be welcomed with open arms. He'll be getting all the playing time that he can mentally and physically stand. If he's not ready for it, then we'll struggle together, and the team will go through some hard times until he's ready."

Coach says K-State is improved

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOULDER, Colo. — Colorado head coach Bill McCartney is putting the Buffs' 27-10 win over Oklahoma Saturday behind him in order to concentrate on another Big Eight rival — K-State.

At his weekly news conference Monday, McCartney said K-State has made significant progress since the last time the two teams met.

"It's really surprising to me the progress they have made from last year to this year. A year ago when they played here, they were not a good football team," McCartney said. "Against Nebraska, they were terrific. I see them as a very formidable opponent."

McCartney, who became the winningest coach in CU history with the Buffs' win against Oklahoma, said the K-State offense will be particularly challenging.

"They have an excellent offensive coach, and their scheme is very well conceived," McCartney said. "They have four, maybe five, legitimate pro prospects. They are more of a big-play team."

Despite the matchup of two powerful offenses, McCartney said this Saturday's game probably will be decided by defense.

"I think at the end of the seven Big Eight games, you'll discover that whoever has the best numbers defensively will also be the team going to the Orange Bowl," he said.

Colorado may have to face K-State without the assistance of tailback Rashaan Salaam, who suffered an eye injury against Oklahoma.

If Salaam is unable to play, McCartney said receiver James Kidd will replace him.

"We need to have three guys ready at tailback," McCartney said. "(Tailback) Lamont (Warren) is banged up from the last game, and I'm sure he'll be ready for this weekend, but he is nursing three or four injuries right now."

SPORTS DIGEST

▶MEN'S RUGBY MOVES TO 5-5 AFTER TOURNEY

The K-State/Ft. Riley Rugby Club participated in the 26th annual Heart of America Tournament last weekend at Swope Park in Kansas City, Mo.

The tournament was plagued by a continuous rain, which resulted in poor playing conditions.

The rain turned the field, or "pitch" in rugby, into a pool of mud. K-State's first match was with the Omaha G.O.A.T.S. Rugby Club.

K-State had lost to Omaha two weeks earlier, and K-State lost again to Omaha this time, 25-7. The only try was scored by Mike Skahan, and he was also able to make the conversion.

The Wildcats then faced the St. Louis Falcons Rugby Club, which had lost earlier to the University of Kansas, 40-0.

The conditions of the field had became worse with the continuous rain, and ball control became a factor.

The Cats scored twice in the first five minutes, the first one by Forrest Parich and the other by Skahan. K-State was able to hold onto the ball, controlling the game. Ramon Fewell scored next, followed by another try from Skahan. Dow Richards kicked 4-4 on conversions and also scored a field goal off a penalty kick.

K-State was able to hold the Falcons scoreless and won 31-0. The win ended a four-game losing streak for the Cats.

Sunday, K-State played against the Kansas City Rugby Club. Kansas City was able to control the ball with good loose play by the pack. They did not allow K-State to score in the game and won 19-0. The series of games in the tournament put K-State at 5-5 for the season.

The Cats will face KU at 1:30 p.m. Saturday in Lawrence. KU won the Heart of America Tournament last weekend.

▶WILDCATS MAKE QUALIFYING ROUND

K-State sophomores Karina Kuregian and Masha Meidell have advanced to both the singles and doubles qualifying rounds of the Riviera all-American Tennis Championships.

Kuregian won four singles matches, and Meidell won three singles matches to advance from the 128-player field.

They defeated a team from Cal-Irvine 6-2, 6-1 in the doubles competition to advance to the qualifying round.

"Both Karina and Masha are playing very well," Coach Steve Bietau said. "This allowed them to get through their matches quickly and improve as the tournament progressed."

The qualifying rounds are scheduled to begin today in Pacific Palisades, Calif., with 64 competitors in the singles field. To advance to the main draw, Kuregian and Meidell will have to win three matches again.

▶CU ATHLETIC DIRECTOR REPRIMANDED

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — University of Colorado athletic director Bill Marolt was reprimanded Monday for comments made about officiating following the Miami-Colorado football game played Sept. 25 in Boulder, Colo.

The Big Eight Conference prohibits players, coaches and game administrators from publicly discussing the work of game officials.

Talk show features anti-homosexual preacher

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

Phone lines were busy at KSDB-FM 91.9 when the Rev. Fred Phelps took to the airwaves with his anti-homosexual messages.

Studio E was the scene of a controversial call-in talk show with Phelps Monday night that incensed callers as well as the hosts, Rob Rawlings, senior in economics and Spanish, and Stephen Seely, junior in pre-law.

The talk show, "A Purple Affair," is a weekly program that was extended by an hour to accommodate questions from more callers.

Callers asked Phelps, a Baptist pastor from Topeka, about a variety of issues: picketing at funerals, funding for protests and the scripture he quotes.

One of the first callers questioned Phelps about picketing at funerals of alleged AIDS victims or homosexuals.

"Dying time is truth time," Phelps said. "They need preaching to. It is a heinous crime to stand around a fag who died of AIDS and continue to perpetrate the lie."

A caller turned the question around later in the program and asked Phelps how he would feel if homosexuals would protest at his funeral.

"I'll be in heaven," Phelps said. "What do I care what a bunch of fags are doing with a cast-off body?"

Seely asked Phelps about funding that the Westboro Baptist Church received and donations.

The funds for protesting are money from the congregation, and the church would not accept donations, Phelps said.

"Don't send us money — we'll send it back," Phelps said. "Westboro Baptist Church is a non-profit organization."

Of more than 20 callers, only two appeared to be in some agreement with Phelps' beliefs. Phelps' method of protesting was brought up by one of these callers, who asked if he was going overboard.

"I can't tell you 100 percent that all my tactics are right," Phelps said.

He does not necessarily like the way he goes about protesting, Phelps said, but it is the only way he feels he can get his message through.

Rawlings asked Phelps what he would do if he could put all the homosexuals in the world into one coliseum.

"I'd preach to them," Phelps said. "I'm the best friend fags have got."

Homosexuals may not like him on earth, Phelps said, but if they could come back from the dead with their eyes ablaze, they would tell others to listen to him and convert.

Seely asked how many homosexuals had actually come up to him and wanted to convert.

Zero, Phelps said.

More often than not, the calls received were from people adamantly opposed to his beliefs.

In one case, a caller was not allowed on air. During a break, a woman called in to ask Phelps about one of his sons, who had reportedly appeared on the news program "20/20" announcing that he was a homosexual. Phelps refused to take the call and said it was another homosexual spreading lies.

Another caller said Phelps was taking Bible scripture out of context and not following it.

"The Bible says 'Judge not lest ye be judged,' and you're judging the world," the caller said.

Phelps repeatedly asked for respect from callers and to let him say his views. Callers, though, rarely got a chance to get a word in edgewise before Phelps cut them off. He told several callers to tune out if they didn't like what they had heard.

"If you don't like my preaching, turn the knob," Phelps said.

Phelps' attitude towards callers was hypocritical, Rawlings said.

"He's reactionary," Rawlings said. "He doesn't allow equal time to someone else. You can't interrupt him, but he can interrupt you, and that's bullshit. I almost threw his ass out for being disrespectful."

With the help of a five-second delay, the station was able to keep several angry outbursts against Phelps off the air. One caller asked Phelps how he would feel if he had a "Vulcan mind-meld with Howard Stern's dick."

Phelps told the caller he was not going to "swap obscenities with fags at KSU."

Restaurant offers down-home food

KELLY-ANN GERAGHTY
Collegian

Looking for some good cheap chow that sticks to your ribs? Try the Calico Inn.

Located west of Manhattan in downtown Riley, the Calico Inn offers a plentiful selection of sandwiches, soups, entrees and desserts.

Innkeepers Trix Fasse and Judy Heikes' restaurant has a small, comfortable, lived-in feeling that makes customers feel at home.

When you arrive at the Calico Inn, there are no formal pretenses.

Customers can seat themselves at available tables or share a table with other patrons.

This aspect gives the Inn a Waltonesque atmosphere.

The servers are friendly and greet frequent customers on a first-name basis.

The servers also go out of their way to make sure the customers are satisfied.

Make sure you bring a healthy appetite with you.

Every meal presented at the Calico Inn overflows onto the table.

The restaurant's speciality is its barbecued ribs.

One order consists of half a rib cage.

Unless you are extremely hungry, it's best to order an additional plate for your companion and split the order.

The ribs are served only on Friday evening, all day Saturday, and Sunday until they run out.

Other menu choices are the eight-ounce KC strip and shrimp, T-bone steak, catfish and chicken-fried steak.

If you have a hankering for a sandwich, you can choose from the Calico quarter-pound hamburger or cheeseburger, pork tender, grilled ham and cheese, and the Innkeeper special.

Do not forget to leave room for dessert.

The Calico Inn's homemade pies taste just like Mom used to make.

The Calico Inn weaves a unique pattern of hearty down-home cooking in a quaint bric-a-brac setting.

Phelps challenges minister's support of homosexuals

"He is misrepresenting the Bible," Phelps said. "This is the moral equivalent of reopening the debate about whether the world is round or flat. He is a heretic, and furthermore, it's very dangerous for the religious leaders to give any kind of support to the sodomite cause."

Phelps adds a sense of guilt to the gay and lesbian community, Fallon said.

"It has been bombarded with hate," he said. "The community needs support, not hate and suppression."

Sexual orientation is an endowment or gift of God, Fallon said.

Fallon's belief is blasphemy, Phelps said.

"It underscores the fact that this so-called Rev. Fallon is not only a blasphemer and a heretic, but probably a fag," Phelps said.

Fallon said he hopes that, through Phelps' fanatical response in his protest and radio broadcast, that an effort will be made to get acquainted with the gay and lesbian community.

"I hope people get to know them as real persons and that there will be more empathy for the gay and lesbian community," Fallon said. "I am trying to affirm God's love for gay and lesbians.

"He may see me as the representative of the University for gays and lesbian community," Fallon said. "I do support their rights."

In addition to his comments about homosexuals on campus, Phelps said he believes people should know if politicians are homosexuals. He said he does not feel any of the gubernatorial candidates are worthy enough of being governor.

"If something doesn't show up better than is here now, I'll run for governor, just to use it as a platform, to preach these things and at every debate, televised and otherwise, make these points.

"I'm not worried about any other issue, nationally or locally. If God is on our side, we can solve them all."

Phelps said the goal of his campaign is to preach the gospel.

"The job description found in Isaiah 58:1 is 'Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet and show my people their transgressions.' That's my job description.

"They got to get back in the closet and shut up, and that's my message. They love that filthy lifestyle more than life itself, and so they're willing to play Russian roulette with the lives of this country."

IN FOCUS

OCTOBER 19, 1993

Fat Tire Success

The Briggs Jeep-Eagle / Aggie Bike Station Mountain Bike Team finds fun and success in their second season of competitive racing.

Maybe it was a little luck, or just destiny. Whatever the reason, two years ago a group of mountain-bike riders came together, transformed a hobby into a wave of fierce competition and eventually established themselves as a force in Kansas mountain-bike racing.

The Briggs Jeep-Eagle / Aggie Bike Station mountain-bike team originated with three friends riding for pure enjoyment. In time, though, it has grown to a group of racers vying for championships.

Brad Benefiel, Alex Reed and Sam Murray founded the team, and the trio sought sponsorship from various local businesses, including Briggs and Aggie Bike Station.

Once the foundation was set, racing followed, and more members joined.

Sam Murray, a 1992 K-State graduate and Aggie Bike Station employee, is the acting team manager.

Biking competition includes beginner, sport and expert levels. Team expert racers include Fernando Salazar, sophomore in architecture, Jeff Weaver, a 1992 K-State graduate, and Jeremy Fields, an Aggie Bike Station employee.

The sport level consists of Leonard Bremenkamp, a 1991 K-State graduate, and Reed. Benefiel is no longer with the team, having gone to the professional ranks.

The team has competed at races in Arkansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Kansas and Colorado.

"I don't know if there's anything else in Manhattan like us," Fields said.

Waid Davis, owner of Aggie Bike Station, has sponsored the team, and this past season the team acquired two more sponsors, Syncros and SRP, bicycle-part companies that provide the team with discount parts.

"If we continue to have good results each year, then we will continue to have the opportunity to gain sponsorship from other bicycling companies, which is very nice," Reed said.

With competition mountain bikes starting at around $700, riding can be costly. The average amount invested in each of the team racing bikes is $2,500. Team members often customize their bikes, keeping very few of their original parts. The only original part remaining on many of the bikes is the frame.

Individual winnings at each race range from products donated from bike shops to trophies and money, depending on the sponsors of the contest.

One of the essential factors in a race is the different types of terrain. Sometimes riders will finish bloodied from a mud-slicked path, hounded by twisting turns and steep climbs. Other times they will end unscathed because of dry conditions with a sparse amount of rocks or roots to deal with.

Probably the biggest challenge is the mental obstacle of making decisions, ranging from when to take a drink to when to pass an opponent, Bremenkamp said.

"The hardest part is sitting at the starting line 10 minutes before the race, waiting for it to begin," he said.

"During the course of the race, several questions often times will arise, 'How much energy should I exert?', 'Should I save it for later?' Sometimes you make the right decisions, and sometimes you don't. Sometimes you crash, and that really messes you up," he said.

Members have their own taste in bikes, riding styles and types of terrain. With different schedules, Weaver said, there are bound to be conflicts, and consequently not everyone can attend each race. However, everyone tries to find time to train for upcoming events.

That training pays off at races such as the Kansas State Mountain Bike Championship Series final in Sedan.

Salazar recently placed fifth in the expert level in the final series standings, and Weaver placed third overall in the sport level, while Fields finished eighth in the sport division because of an illness that kept him out of the final race. Bremenkamp finished 15th because of a broken derailleur on his bike, and Reed was 20th in the standings.

After the race, Weaver and Fields both moved up into the expert rankings.

What has been the secret to the team's success?

"Usually, you'll pre-ride the course," Fields said.

"It's important to know where every little bump is and every little turn, especially in the confusion of the start."

Fields said he hopes success at the expert level will increase the consideration given to the team from bigger bicycling companies.

"Our livelihood is in relation with our sponsors," Fields said.

"We're not a club, and we don't collect dues. The exposure that we get graces our sponsors and helps us to survive to continue racing.

"Basically, we're on our own."

Bottom: Fernando Salazar rides his Trek 9900 mountain bike down a muddy incline at the Tuttle Creek Spillway Cycle Area, known by most as the bowls. Team members have more than $1,000 invested in their bikes. On most team bikes, the only stock parts are the frames. In addition to spending a great deal of money on their bikes, team members spend a lot of time repairing and upgrading their bikes.

SCHOLARSHIPS

Students receive Foundation aid

DANI JOHNSTON
Collegian

The K-State Student Foundation recognized the first recipients of the new Students Scholarship Program.

Two students, Sandra Goering, senior in agricultural economics, and Todd Lakin, junior in industrial engineering, each were awarded $400 scholarships.

The fund was established by the Student Foundation, which is sponsored by the KSU Foundation. The fund also will be managed by the KSU Foundation.

"The purpose of the Student Foundation is to provide money and scholarships to students," Greg Leet, director of KSU Libraries campaign, said.

Leet works with the treasurer and officers of the Student Foundation in fund-raising projects to raise private support.

"This is the first year we have had money to give away to students," Leet said. "Last year, we did not have enough money generated in the endowment to give to students."

Each student receives $400 a year, a check for $200 in the fall and $200 in the spring, Catherine Braden, student foundation treasurer, said.

They are selected based on their academic performance and a written essay.

"The students have to have a 2.75 overall GPA, and they are chosen by their activities that they are involved in," Braden said. "They are not chosen by their financial status."

The students list their campus activities and offices held on the application and write a short essay explaining how they think students can help better K-State.

Goering said she wrote her essay about how K-State gives students an opportunity to become involved in activities.

"Each student has a chance to better K-State by becoming as actively involved as they can," she said.

Braden said that this year the applicants were narrowed to three females and three males. Each was then interviewed by a selection committee.

The committee included the president, treasurer and two officers from Student Foundation.

The scholarship will go to one female and one male every year.

"The main focus of the scholarship is to compensate for those who are active on campus," Braden said.

Leet said the fund is a chance to get money for students who are leaders on the campus.

"It is about peers recognizing other students," he said.

Some fund-raising activities include the KSU Foundation Telefund and a mud-volleyball tournament.

"The student foundation hosts the telefund, in which student volunteers call alumni of colleges to raise money," Leet said.

"We would like to be more creative in the future for fund-raising activities. Next year, we would like to establish the Student Foundation Lecture Series, in which we would invite alumni back to K-State to speak to students about their experiences."

Flood damage repaired at state park

Silt hampers facility cleanup, park reseeding

MIKE HIND
Collegian

Tuttle Creek is like a park under reconstruction.

Those are the words Paul Miller, wildlife and park manager of Tuttle Creek State Park, used to describe what is going on at the Tuttle Creek River Park Area these days.

A huge effort to re-seed the park and get the facilities running again is underway as a result of the flooding that went on over the summer.

"The water virtually destroyed everything out there," Miller said. "Every building we had experienced minor or major damage. We lost six buildings totally."

The park was able to salvage the motors from its five lift stations.

They were pulled before the flooding ever started, Miller said. The electrical portions of the lift stations, however, were lost completely at a cost of about $2,500 each.

"Two are in working order, and two will have to wait until we get some more money," Miller said.

The water also destroyed the electrical hookups for trailers at the campsite area, and the limited budget the park is now working on allows for only about half of them to be replaced, Miller said.

There are about 70 trailer sites that have electricity, he said.

Cleanup efforts were hampered by the large deposits of silt that were left behind after the flood waters subsided, Miller said.

In some places where the silt was not as abundant, workers simply worked the silt into the ground when they prepared the ground to be sown to grass.

In other places, the silt was so thick that the tractors could not get enough traction to work.

Workers will have to wait for those places to dry out, use a blade, withdraw the silt and dispose of it.

Mike Howey, senior in parks and resource management, said the silt also made cleanup problems in the buildings hard to deal with.

"We had to flush the drains a couple of times. All that silt got in the toilets and showers and created a real problem," Howey said.

The 200 acres of grass that had to be replanted was not the only loss the park endured, Miller said.

"There are 12,500 acres of public hunting land that is completely destroyed," Miller said.

"There won't be zip for public hunting land this year."

There was also some tree damage, but they will not know the extent of that until next year, Miller said.

Until funding comes through, the park will have limited resources, he said.

"If we don't get funding, the park will operate at about 50 percent," Miller said.

"We have simply used up our normal operating budget."

ENVIRONMENT

Deforestation threatens indigenous peoples

MICHELE SCHROEDER
Collegian

Logging in the world's rainforests is not only destroying the plant and animal life in the areas, but it is also affecting the lifestyles of the indigenous people.

Matt Diller, vice president of the St. Louis Rainforest Alliance, produced a slide show and lecture Monday night about his visit to the Penan tribe of Borneo, Malaysia. The tribe has lived for thousands of years in a rainforest that is now endangered by loggers who are cutting down the tribe's rainforest homeland.

The societies of the indigenous people are being destroyed, as the loss of their land means a loss to their culture and possibly their lives.

One of the biggest complaints is that villages are having problems with their water supply, as logging companies are making the drinking water muddy and contaminated. That, Diller said, which makes people sick.

"They use the forests for their own food and medicines and also to build their homes," Diller said.

The tropical rainforests comprise only 10 percent of the earth, but they support 90 percent of the all the plant, animal and insect species. Rainforests are the source for more than 25 percent of the world's medicines, according to a video shown by Diller.

The rainforests are also an integral part of the global system, regulating weather patterns and maintaining conservation of soils which prevents massive flooding and erosion in many parts of the world.

If deforestation continues, million of plants and animal species will become extinct.

"In one tree, you'll discover dozens of different species that have never seen before," Diller said.

"Of the species that we know, we've only studied a very small fraction for pharmaceutical properties."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Squid mystery puzzles reader

Dear Cassandra,

As uninteresting as this may seem, I am not a homosexual. I have never had homosexual thoughts or fantasies. I have not thought of my mother in a sexual way or ever experimented sexually with any domestic animals. I am straight.

I am not afraid of commitment, nor do I juggle many women at once, and I try to sleep with no more than two at a time. I try to keep masturbation to a minimum, but then again, who doesn't? I am a typical heterosexual male.

I have but one question that has been bothering me since last season. Why the hell do hockey fans throw squid on the ice during playoff games?

I thought you wouldn't listen to me unless I talked about strange sexual events.

Signed,
410

Dear 410,

Is "410" code for something? You've piqued my interest.

But back to your question on why hockey fans throw squid on the ice during playoff games. ...

You'd think this kind of action would be steeped in tradition and symbolism. But nay, dear sports fan. This weird mollusk-throwing act was begun with nary a tangible thought process behind it.

The tradition began in Detroit at the Red Wings playoff games, way back when kids still played stickball in the street and parents wouldn't allow their children to sit on the furniture, save when guests came for dinner.

Anyway, some creative little Detroiter at the playoff game just came up with the idea to throw squid on the ice, and the crowd loved it! They went wild. They cheered and cried and talked about it for days.

They ate it up — not literally, of course — and the strange 10-tentacled creature became a hallmark of the playoffs.

What's fun to imagine is how this fan got the squid into the game. Now where would you put a squid?

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES By Gypsy Rose

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Venture beyond your circle of friends this week. Meet someone new.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): No matter how awful today may be, smile once and your day will begin to look up.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Make your own path today, otherwise you may trip on the worn sidewalk.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Call your friend today. They have a new answering machine.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Listen to a news broadcast today, you have been getting out of touch with the world.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Review your priorities — you have been spreading yourself too thin.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Follow your mother's advice. It may come in handy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Use the cross walk, and for goodness sake do not jay-walk.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Write a letter today. Someone is waiting to hear from you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Learn a new song today. How about a song from the Partridge Family?

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Play the lottery today. No, you will not win, but Club Keno needs the money.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Call the psychic line for your horoscope. We could not get through.

REVIEW

Damn the Machine is melodic, diverse

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

One has to wonder what kind of music would come from a guy who was fired by the guy who was fired from Metallica.

After all, when Dave Mustaine was kicked out of Metallica, he went on to form Megadeth, a band arguably even more hard-core and brutal than Metallica.

So, what kind of violent, whiplash tunes does guitarist Chris Poland play after being kicked out of Mustaine's band? They are kind of pretty, actually.

Poland's new band, Damn the Machine, has a sound that is hard to pin down. It definitely has its roots in speed metal, but this is hardly "Kill 'Em All."

The Machine's music is some sort of speed-metal fusion, although what it is fused with is anyone's guess.

Unlike Metallica or Megadeth, Poland's band uses machine-gun, palm-muted guitars only for punctuation. The body of a Damn the Machine song is much more melodic and diverse.

All the songs on the Machine's self-titled debut album wind through dark, brooding changes, tied together with Poland's artful guitar work. The band's lyrics are dark as well. They speak of madness, decay and chaos without resorting to typical death-rock cliches. The Machine's songs are intelligent, both musically and lyrically.

The only downfall to "Damn the Machine" is all the songs sound too similar. When the album is played all the way through, it is hard to tell where the individual songs begin and end.

Anyone looking for a galloping blitzkrieg of open-E speed metal should probably leave "Damn the Machine" on the record-store shelf.

Anybody looking for a supplement to the standard speed-metal diet, however, should give the Machine a listen.

Weekend renamed to reflect students

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

K-State's student body no longer consists only of 18 to 22-year-old students, and campus activities are changing to reflect this shifting enrollment.

For example, what used to be called Parent's Weekend is for the first time being advertised as Family Weekend in 1993.

"The name Parent's Weekend represented only a portion of the students here at K-State," said Becky Klingler, chair of K-State's Family Programming Committee.

"There are a good percentage of non-traditional students, those not between the ages of 18 and 22, who are supported by spouses, siblings and sometimes even their own children."

About 30 percent of K-State students are classified as non-traditional, said Nancy Bolsen, director of Adult Student Services.

"I'm delighted that the name was changed. This is a real turn around and shows a commitment to make it an all inclusive event," Bolson said.

More than 40 activities associated with Family Weekend are planned, and the festivities begin Friday and continue through Sunday, Bolsen said.

"Now, for the first time, non-traditional students, grad students and vet-med students should feel included," Klingler said.

HOOVER MEN- Colorado was outrageous! The snow- capped mountains, cold clear streams, noisy elk, slippery rocks, snowball fights near the dike, cheap champagne, WEB, almost fireplace, Jimmy's slab of beef, daddy's truck, Grandma Max's, drive-in, our little sailboat, muffler shop, police, fire, and restrooms and crunchy pancakes, were all the best, but not beyond our incredible dates. We would've stayed forever! Love, Marcie, Tomra, and Tami.

Haitian military ignores deadline

Arms and oil embargo began midnight Monday

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Haiti's military defied an approaching-midnight deadline to yield power Monday and belittled a U.N. arms and oil embargo. Its right-wing supporters warned that any American invaders will go home in bags.

Rightists mixed threats against the outside world with gifts of chrysanthemums to foreign reporters, while Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras, the army strongman, suggested new talks on his departure. But the United States said Cedras was only stalling.

An army broadcast urged Haitians not to worry about the U.N.-authorized embargo or the U.S. warships steaming offshore to enforce it, beginning at midnight. The measures are aimed at forcing the return of Jean-Bertrand Aristide, Haiti's first democratically elected president.

The capital was quiet, and some shops opened despite calls from groups calling for a shutdown of business activity. Few cars lined up at gas stations ahead of the cutoff of oil imports, probably because Haiti's leaders had stockpiled fuel in recent months.

Stanley Schrager, a U.S. Embassy spokesman, said Cedras must honor the U.N.-mediated pact he signed in July to return Aristide, who was ousted in a bloody coup two years ago. He was widely popular among Haiti's impoverished masses but opposed by the nation's elite and other conservative factions.

Many Haitians have fled the capital, fearing violence by army-supported Aristide opponents or possible intervention by U.S. forces.

Asked about the possibility, Schrager said, "I'm not saying that a military intervention is imminent, but clearly there is always that risk."

He said American officials were considering providing guards for Aristide-backed Prime Minister Robert Malval, whose justice minister was assassinated Thursday.

Army Lt. Col. Jean-Robert Gabriel urged Haitians to remain calm. Speaking on Radio Tropic FM, he told Haitians not to flee the capital and said the army would maintain control.

An aide at army headquarters said Cedras was not available to comment on the U.S. Embassy's statements. But army-backed rightists were not at a loss for words.

"We accuse the Aristide-Malval government of having threatened this government with arms. ... (and) by collaborating with foreign forces," said former Sen. Reynald Georges, alluding to the threat of U.S. intervention.

Georges congratulated Cedras for not resigning and thanked U.S. Sens. Robert Dole, R-Kan., and Sam Nunn, D-Ga., for opposing greater U.S. involvement in Haiti.

A group behind pier-side demonstrations last week that kept a U.S. warship from docking as part of a U.N. mission sought to present a gentler side Monday by handing out flowers to foreign reporters at a news conference.

Clinton addresses women's health issues

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton on Monday pledged the government's help to provide more breast-cancer research and testing after accusing the health-care system of treating women like second-class citizens.

He signed a proclamation declaring Tuesday as National Mammography Day, then tied the administration's efforts to curb breast cancer with his sweeping health-care overhaul plan.

"When it comes to health-care research and delivery, women can no longer be treated as second-class citizens," he said.

With boxes of petitions forming a backdrop, Clinton said his administration will work with advocates during a December conference to develop a strategy to treat breast-cancer patients and eventually find a cure.

"It is important that that plan be fitted into a larger commitment to the health care of Americans, to put women's health concerns — from research to the development and delivery of health care — on equal footing with men," Clinton said.

Clinton thanked his mother, Virginia Kelley of Hot Springs, Ark., who lost a breast to cancer.

"I appreciate the efforts of my brave mother who struggles on with her breast-cancer condition and who has resumed her remarkable life, but who also knows how much more can be done," he said. She was not in the East Room audience.

An advocacy group collected 2.6 million signatures — representing one signature for every woman in the United States with breast cancer — and presented them to Clinton. The group also paraded near the White House.

Appearing with first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, the President said spending on breast-cancer research will increase by 44 percent, from $208 million to almost $300 million, at the National Institute of Health under his budget. Several other agencies are spending more money on research programs, he said.

Under his health-care plan, women would be covered for breast exams every three years from ages 20 to 39, and every two years from ages 40 to 64. They would get mammograms every two years after age 50.

Some advocates had pushed for more frequent mammograms, but the president said his guidelines are based on actual scientific evidence.

Policy aide Bob Boorstin said the mammograms may be more frequent if studies show that more are needed.

"Obviously, if a study came out that said we need them every year and it was a good study ... we probably would reconsider," he said.

Dr. Susan Love, founder of the National Breast Cancer Coalition, said Clinton's plan would provide free mammograms to women over 50.

Two men acquitted in Denny beating

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — The jury in the Reginald Denny beating trial finally spoke, and spoke softly, acquitting two black men of some of the most serious charges in the assault on a white trucker at the outset of last year's riots.

A major piece of unfinished business remains in a case that some people have branded a symbol of the riots' brutality and others have called glaring proof of racism in the justice system.

The jury returns today to try to reach a verdict on an attempted premeditated murder charge against one of the defendants, Damian Williams. The charge is one of the most severe and carries a maximum life prison term.

After just three days of deliberations, the multiracial jury convicted Williams of simple mayhem in the Denny attack at the corner of Florence and Normandie avenues on April 29, 1992, as rioting erupted across the city.

The charge carries a maximum eight-year sentence. A more serious finding of aggravated mayhem could have brought a life sentence.

Co-defendant Henry Watson was convicted of simple assault, a misdemeanor, in the Denny attack.

Following Monday's verdicts, calm prevailed in the nation's second-largest city, still scarred by the 1992 riots.

Friends and relatives of the defendants expressed joy and relief at the verdicts. Williams' attorney, Edi Faal, flatly said, "There is no question that we won this case."

He said even the misdemeanor convictions against Williams could be overturned on appeal for a variety of reasons, including what Faal has called unwarranted dismissal by the judge of a black juror during deliberations.

Daryl Gates, the retired police chief whose performance during and after the riots was criticized by many, condemned Monday's verdicts.

"We know they're guilty, but I understand this is our system," said Gates, who personally arrested Williams.

Police braced for the verdicts by beefing up patrols, but no problems were reported.

"There is a sense of calm, and there is a sense of true justice."

Makin' a beeline for tickets

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Two groups of die-hard K-State fans lined up around 3:45 p.m. Tuesday and dashed for the door of Ahearn Field House with dreams of front-row tickets on their minds.

"Literally, all hell broke loose," said Dale Silvius, chairman of the athletic ticket sales committee. "One guy tried to clear all of the steps on the way to the door. He hit one in the middle, scraped both knees and hands and still finished second."

ICAT members are camped out on the north side of Ahearn, and non-ICAT members are camping on the east side.

Members of ICAT are camping for reserved tickets in sections 18 and 19 at Bramlage Coliseum. Non-ICAT members are camping for general-admission tickets in section 20, Silvius said.

"The non-ICAT members are the fans you will see waiting three or four hours before the games to run for the best seats," Silvius said.

However, in order for the 400 campers to keep their spot on the list, there will be roll calls at different times during the 72-hour camp out. If campers do not respond when their name or organization's name is called, they will be bumped to the end of the list, Grant Janke, member of ICAT Campout Committee, said.

Another way campers can lose their position on the list is by violating the University's alcohol policy. No alcoholic beverages are allowed during the campout

"We've had to move one group to the end of the list, but other than that, everything is going smoothly," Janke said.

ICAT tickets will be distributed at 3 p.m. today, and non-ICAT general-admission tickets are handed out at 8:30 p.m. Thursday.

Fans who purchased season tickets during enrollment and chose not to camp out can pick up their tickets on Thursday after all of the campers have received theirs. After Thursday, ticket holders should go to the Bramlage Coliseum Athletic Ticket Office.

Silvius said season tickets are available for $75 to students who have not bought them yet.

"So far things are going pretty well," Silvius said.

Jesse Jackson to speak at next Landon Lecture

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

LANDON LECTURE
■ Jackson's lecture will be at 10:30 a.m., Nov. 29 in McCain Auditorium.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson will be the next Landon Lecture speaker, University officials announced Tuesday. Jackson will speak at 10:30 a.m., Nov. 29 in McCain Auditorium.

Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture Series committee, said he was excited Jackson accepted the invitation to speak.

"Jackson is one of the preeminent public speakers in America today," he said.

Reagan said in the past, many Landon Lecture Series speakers had similar views as the president who was in office at the time. This year the committee tried to broaden the range of viewpoints presented by inviting speakers with views both to the right and to the left of the current administration, he said.

Jackson was invited at the same time as Pat Robertson, who presented the first Landon Lecture of the academic year last week, Reagan said. He also said he did not expect Jackson's visit to campus to create much controversy.

"It is always hard to know, but I really wouldn't think so," Reagan said.

Jackson, a long-time, civil-rights activist and founder of the Rainbow Coalition, ran for the Democratic nomination for president in 1984 and 1988.

His Rainbow Coalition is dedicated to social justice, education and political empowerment.

His campaigns focused on problems of the poor and the working class and especially on poverty among minorities.

Dale Herspring, head of the political science department, said he thought inviting Jackson was appropriate.

Herspring said he did not think there would be any controversy about having Jackson speak, and that there should not have been any controversy about Pat Robertson's speech.

"The purpose of a university is to permit the expression of different viewpoints," Herspring said. "I think that the students have the right to hear them."

Activities planned to combat boredom

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The ICAT Campout Committee has several activities planned during the campout to ease the boredom involved with long days of waiting for the roll call.

Tuesday night, the volleyball team brought pizza to feed hungry campers who had been outside all day waiting for the flag to raise.

"We plan to bond, play cards and probably study while we are here," Scott Mayer, freshman in pre-vet, said, sitting on a couch his group brought for the campout.

The men's and women's basketball teams will be at the campout today at 5 p.m. for a three-point shooting competition and to judge a slam-dunk competition at 6 p.m.

Those competitions will be followed by a volleyball tournament at 7:30 p.m.

Many of the campers passed the time Tuesday by playing catch with footballs and frisbees and socializing with people in neighboring tents.

"We plan to just hang out, grill some hamburgers and pray for good weather," Derek Bell, freshman in hotel-restaurant management, said.

Good weather is a factor to many of the campers at Ahearn Field House.

"We brought about eight blankets, so we won't freeze to death, but for front row tickets it's worth it," Christi Gleason, junior in business, said.

Trent Brown, junior in pre-law, said he ran for the door when the flag was raised, didn't touch one step on the way down and was slammed into the door in order to get first place on the list.

"I may miss class tomorrow."

More graduates join Peace Corps

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

This is the first in a three-part series about K-State student and faculty involvement in the Peace Corps.

In the past 10 years the number of K-State graduates interested in joining the Peace Corps has increased.

"In the last 10 years I've noticed that international awareness at K-State has been increasing," Philip Lesniewski, public affairs specialist for the Kansas City-area Peace Corps and 1984 K-State graduate, said.

"Therefore, more students are looking for career opportunities outside the state of Kansas and the four-state area."

Lesniewski said he believes the international awareness is because of classes such as international agriculture and international business.

Sixteen K-State graduates are serving in the Peace Corps, and four graduates are preparing to leave this winter for assignments in foreign countries.

The Peace Corps was established in 1961. Since that time, 140,000 Americans have volunteered in more than 100 countries worldwide.

A term in the Peace Corps typically lasts two years, after three months of training.

"We try to match the skills of applicants to the corresponding needs of developing countries," he said.

"We're looking for people who have cultural sensitivity and are willing to go overseas to learn another culture and will enjoy living there."

Peace Corps volunteers should be flexible and able to adapt to various climates and living arrangements, Lesniewski said.

In 1992, 17,500 Americans applied to serve in the Peace Corps nationwide, and 2,300 were sent overseas, Lesniewski said.

"It is competitive, but if you apply early enough, we believe we can tell you the things you need to do to be more competitive," he said.

Students can increase the chances of being selected by volunteering time at K-State and working in a greenhouse, helping international students learn or improve English skills or doing service work in a health clinic, Lesniewski said.

Seniors interested in joining the Peace Corps should apply now. Students should apply nine months to a year before going overseas, he said.

To apply, students should call the Kansas City-area Peace Corps office at 1-800-255-4121.

Memoirs began as novels

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

Separating memories from imagination can be a difficult task in the writing process.

Tobias Wolff, a nationally known and award-winning author, appeared on campus Tuesday to read excerpts of his memoir "This Boy's Life," and his latest memoir, "Memorials," at 7 p.m. in Union Forum Hall.

"My latest book started out as a novel, and that is what 'This Boy's Life' started out as," Wolff said. "I had to throw out a lot of stuff."

The difference between memories and imaginations are difficult to reveal, Wolff said.

"There's a tremendous inviability in memories," Wolff said. "When writing close to your own life, it is not easy to see where one ends and the other begins."

Interpretations of facts are different for everyone, he said. A person can forget things.

"I had forgotten I had gone by Jack," Wolff said. "Whenever I went anywhere, I would make up a new name and a new history."

In organizing memories to write memoirs, a common thread needs to be found, he said.

"Memoirs are different because a person's life isn't over," Wolff said. "You put memories down and see patterns. The problem with memoirs is remembering too much, not enough.

"I think we all have our own ways of organizing memories to recall later on."

Wolff said he viewed his life in narrative form, rather than on-going dialogue.

"I think it is natural to human nature to remember in narrative form," he said.

Some of his narrative style comes from the stories his family told, which influenced Wolff later in his career.

"I grew up in a family of story-tellers," Wolff said. "In a way, our literature started in an oral tradition, and it continues in an oral tradition.

"I wouldn't be a writer if I wasn't surrounded by story-tellers."

Recently, Wolff's story telling moved beyond written words onto the big screen.

"This Boy's Life" was recently made into a movie starring Robert De Niro.

Wolff said he was pleased with the movie, although the movie differed slightly from the book.

"I thought they did things that didn't make any sense, and I told them that. And then they said 'you sold the rights,'" Wolff said. "I was very pleased with the general

HIGH SCHOOL DANGERS

The 24th Annual Survey of High Achievers, completed during the 1992-93 academic year, found that among the 1,975 students questioned:

- One in five of the females had been a victim of sexual assault.
- More than half reported frequent fights between students.
- One in three knows someone who has brought a weapon to school.
- 42 percent of the males have access to one or more firearms.
- One-third considered suicide.

House votes to end super collider funding

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House on Tuesday rejected the Clinton administration's request for $640 million for the super collider, dealing a devastating blow to the giant atom-smasher's chances for survival.

First, House members voted 264-159 against a collider supporter's effort to keep from singling it out for elimination. Then they voted 282-143 to send the bill that contains the money back to a House-Senate conference committee with instructions to delete the collider funding.

It was the second time this year the House had rejected the Clinton administration's funding request for the massive science project under construction in Texas.

House and Senate negotiators now will have to decide the collider's fate.

Shuttle crew perform experiments on selves

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — It's just what the space doctors ordered Tuesday: calcium, iodine, sulfur and amino acids ingested by and injected into Columbia's astronauts to monitor body changes in weightlessness.

The shuttle scientists drank water laced with oxygen isotopes, nitrogen and calcium on the first full day of their planned two-week medical research mission. NASA officials insisted the drinks didn't taste bad.

The crew members also gave each other shots of chemicals that were traced through their bodies to measure changes in blood volume, kidneys, bones and muscles.

In another test, the astronauts monitored their heartbeats with an ultrasound device developed by one of the crew's two physicians, David Wolf.

Ranger forces to leave Somalia this week

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a further step back from armed confrontation with Mohamed Farrah Aidid, President Clinton ordered a pullout Tuesday of Army Ranger forces he had sent to Somalia to capture the clan leader.

The move reflected the administration's effort to shift the focus in Somalia toward pursuing a political settlement following the deaths of 18 Americans in the disastrous Ranger raid on Aidid loyalists Oct. 3.

"Right now we are engaging in a political process to see how we can resolve our mission in Somalia," Clinton said to reporters at the White House. "So right now we're in a stand-down position."

At the Pentagon, representative Kathleen deLaski said a Ranger task force of about 750 men would be withdrawn from Somalia in the next couple of days.

Billion-dollar tax hike threatens NAFTA

WASHINGTON (AP) — Faced with new worries about the North American Free Trade Agreement, President Clinton sought Tuesday to work around congressional objections to paying for it with a $2.5-billion tax increase.

"There are still some practical things to work out," Clinton said of the administration's plan to replace federal money lost under NAFTA with increased fees on international airline and cruise tickets and higher rail and truck fees.

Some conservative House Republicans are threatening to withdraw support for the three-nation trade agreement unless the administration drops its plans to raise international transportation taxes.

Many Americans lack health-care knowledge

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most Americans have never heard of managed competition. They don't know what a single-payer health system is, and they are confused about who the uninsured are.

A survey released Tuesday indicates the public is still poorly informed and uninvolved about the debate raging over President Clinton's health-care plan, said Drew Altman, president of the Kaiser Family Foundation.

Fifty-nine percent of those surveyed by the foundation and the Harvard School of Public Health said they knew what a health-maintenance organization was.

But most people had never heard of managed competition — a theory Clinton has borrowed from that would mix market forces and regulations to hold down health costs — or single-payer, the shorthand term for a government-financed health system, like Canada's, advocated by congressional liberals.

Georgian leader's hometown captured

TBILISI, Georgia (AP) — Rebels captured Georgian leader Eduard Shevardnadze's hometown on Tuesday, and he appealed to Russia and other neighboring states to help his embattled country.

"The hardships of war ... are being exacerbated by economic disaster and the threat of famine," Shevardnadze said in a televised address.

The rebels, who want to depose Shevardnadze and return former President Zviad Gamsakhurdia to power, cut a vital supply route Sunday by capturing the town of Samtredia. It straddles the road linking Tbilisi, the capital, to Poti, a key port on the Black Sea.

On Tuesday, the rebels took Shevardnadze's nearby hometown, the village of Lanchkhuti, the Georgian Defense Ministry said.

BOSOM

Band becomes Bosom buddies because of music

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

Nothing beats sharing music with friends.

Bosom, one the latest local bands to appear in the limelight, believes friendship is the driving force behind its music.

Lead vocalist Jason McLendon, sophomore in psychology, said he feels he and his fellow bandmates share a common bond in Bosom.

"We were all friends before we became a band," McLendon said. "The music is an extension of our friendship."

Assembled two years ago, Bosom also includes bassist John Hart, junior in political science; guitarist Jason Hutto, sophomore in pre-journalism and mass communications; and drummer Michael Calloway, sophomore in arts and sciences.

McLendon said most of the members of Bosom have lived together and know what to expect from each other. Familiarity helps strengthen the diversity of the band and its sound.

"There is no particular set style because we all like different things," he said.

Calloway said several instruments and inspirations help Bosom expand on a basic, acoustic country-rock sound. Percussionist Paul Horton, sophomore in art, and versatile sixth member Alex Kice, senior in anthropology, add additional flavor.

"We have a Latin rhythm section accompanied with an accordion and dulcimer," McLendon said.

Kice said the instruments he plays give a fuller, broader influence to the band.

"Some of the songs have a niche for both the accordion and dulcimer," Kice said. Calloway agreed.

"If you can hear them, they fill out the sound," Calloway said.

McLendon said there is one general difference between Bosom and other local bands. His band decided not to follow the hardcore-grunge approach.

Although he listens to Pearl Jam and Stone Temple Pilots, McLendon said that doesn't mean Bosom will have the same sound.

"I hate being associated with Pearl Jam," McLendon said. "People say I sound like Eddie Vedder, but I'm getting away from that now."

With additional influences ranging from Uncle Tupelo, The Texas Tornados, Buckwheat Zydeco and the Tragically Hip, Bosom favors a separate, unique style.

"We have nothing against (hardcore grunge), but it seems like the Manhattan sound right now," Calloway said.

As for the vocal and lyric delivery, McLendon said he doesn't always know what words he will sing until they come out. If certain phrases or words appeal to him, he'll use it in the future.

"Whatever comes to mind — that's how it comes out," McLendon said. "I always sing what I feel at the time.

"I never write lyrics down on a sheet beforehand."

Most of the band's lyrical content contains stories about life experiences, McLendon said. Even though McLendon said band members are religiously active, very few of their songs are based strictly on religious beliefs.

"We're all Christians, but I won't go out and preach," McLendon said.

Kice said that he would like to let the music be their witness.

"I just want to keep playing," Kice said. "I feel like it's all in vain unless we have an impact."

McLendon said Bosom places importance on the quality of their music and the writing of good songs.

"We really love to play music," he said, "but we've been trying not to play much because we've been writing."

Jason McLendon, lead singer of Bosom, lashes out lyrics at DowBow's Monday night before headliner The Buckpets. Other members of the band include Jason Hutto on guitar, (foreground), John Hart on bass, Michael Calloway on drums, Paul Horton on auxiliary percussion, and Alex Kice on dulcimer and accordion.

REVIEW

Manhattan can't stop pumping out great bands.

Bosom's recent, self-titled release is a pleasurable introduction into today's ever-changing music world. It is a new and enlightening recording to pump through our speakers.

The first listening of the tape shows what an injustice it is to label Bosom just another rock 'n' roll band, or to even call them Kansas grunge. Its rich sound proves it to be so much more.

Bosom isn't trapped in the rut of other blossoming bands.

Often young bands will find one sound and write lyrics with identical properties. As a result, they never get off the ground.

Bosom, on the other hand, gives an enthralling collection of tenacious songs that captivate with each listening. One song doesn't lack in any way from the rest.

The tape quickly demonstrates Bosom's daring attempt at creating a novel sound. The mixture of dulcimer, accordion and percussion takes a step into an area where many bands fail.

Lead vocalist Jason McLendon, a six-month veteran of the two-year-old band, sings with the same passion found in the voice of Pearl Jam's Eddie Vedder. One can quickly surmise McLendon has a deep understanding of his music.

His strong, earthy voice gives a three-dimensional quality to the music. Also, he fits tight with the provocative lyrics.

Each song creates a dramatic listening experience. This is not a tape to be played as background music while doing dishes or studying. The lyrics are philosophical and compelling. They're more than mindless fluff.

Another catalyst of the release is its sound quality. The tape, recorded at Mercy Studios in Lawrence, has a noteworthy property. The listener doesn't have to deal with scratches and scrawls dragging the music down. This factor can be a turn-off with local band tapes.

Nothing falls short on the tape other than it only has seven songs. When does the CD come out?

Responsibility... A K-State Tradition

You are an important member of the K-State community. Membership brings both privilege and responsibility. One privilege is that you are free to be yourself. You are also responsible for your choices. The student conduct code has been established to provide a general guideline for community expectations. The following behaviors are some of those considered as being misconduct at K-State:

- Causing physical harm (or the fear of harm) to a person or property.
- Distribution, use, or possession of controlled substances
- Violation of the university alcohol and cereal malt beverage policy
- Theft of property or services
- Hazing (including voluntary)
- All forms of harassment (telephone, racial/ethnic, sexual, etc.)
- Unauthorized presence in or use of university property
- Conduct which interferes with the mission and functions of the university

A complete copy of the Student Conduct Code is available at the Student Activities and Services Office located in the K-State Union.

This is the first of a four-part policy awareness campaign sponsored by the Dean of Student Life Office. Please direct questions to Pat Bosco (6237), Susan Scott (6432), or Bernard Franklin (6432).

EDITORIAL

Flying Confederate flag glorifies era better left forgotten

Symbols of slavery and oppression in the Old South are gone from that part of the country, you would think.

After all, it's been 128 years since the Civil War, right? Think again.

South Carolina's State Attorney General is working to bring down the Confederate flag that still, for some inexplicable reason, flies above South Carolina's Statehouse.

Those who support keeping the Confederate banner flying argue it doesn't represent slavery, but the state's heritage and those who died in the Civil War.

South Carolina is the only state that still displays the full battle flag, but both Mississippi and Georgia incorporate the banner into their state flags.

The Confederate or "rebel" flag is not just a symbol of southern heritage and rebellion against an authoritative federal government, as its supporters claim.

Rather, it has come to represent the past southern way of life that accepted, promoted and profited from the despicable system of slavery.

The acceptance of the rebel flag as an appropriate symbol of a state's history is to glorify that shameful period in history.

The Confederate flag is even used today by white supremacist organizations in America to symbolize racist hatred.

It cannot simultaneously represent both hatred and a heritage to be proud of for South Carolina.

Remembering the past doesn't mean that old symbols that characterize malice and racial suppression should be kept alive.

Why can't love be color blind?

I am in love. OK, maybe not love. How about deep, deep like? You know, the kind of like that makes your toes curl and your teeth sweat and your stomach hurt whenever that special someone is near you?

I could tell you 20 million things about him and probably would if you'd give me about 10 seconds. He's funny, strong and handsome in a way that makes my mouth water. (You know what I mean, ladies.)

He makes me feel like I am worth listening to even when I ramble. He makes me feel like, even though I am not a size 6, I am beautiful enough to grace the cover of a magazine every time he gives me a hug. He's wonderful. And he's white.

Yes, white.

I can already hear the collective sighs of disappointment.

It's not like I haven't heard them before. I have had interracial relationships and caught a lot of flack for them in the past. If "flack" is what you would call it. I've been told that I have sold out my race. I have been told to have a little racial pride and to get over my "jungle fever." I have been told that, because I have an interracial heritage, I must have a predisposition for "that sort of thing." I have been told to stick to my own kind. (I always hated that comment most of all. What does that mean? I should date other women?)

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

Those are the obvious comments, of course, coming mainly from the generation that walked six miles to school, uphill both ways in a blizzard.

Those little comments are infrequent. But that sentiment is still prevalent today.

I still hear about "so and so's Puerto Rican girlfriend" and "what's-her-name's Asian boyfriend," as if the label made all the difference.

It makes one realize that the sentiment of separation and segregation is still as strong as it ever was when it comes to relationships between the races.

And it has not made loving and going out with someone of a different cultural background any easier to do for those who try it.

True, things have changed a bit from the times when my Caucasian mother and my African American father were dating one another.

Racism and ignorance have had to have face-lifts in order to survive.

They are more subtle than police dogs and white robes these days. They are David Duke in the House of Representatives and smirks and whispers in the Union when an interracial couple walk by holding hands.

Today, my father wouldn't have to worry about being lynched from the nearest elm tree for holding my mother's hand. But the sentiment still remains that Martin Luther King Jr.'s dream didn't include the sons of sharecroppers and the daughters of plantation owners going out.

That ignorant and backward belief should have died with disco. It is a sentiment that, along with "racial purity," should make any intelligent human being flinch.

Catching a movie, holding hands, loving or marrying someone of a different race does not make a person less aware of one's cultural heritage, either. It cannot make a person any less of who he or she is or take away one iota of a person's cultural pride.

If anything, it reinforces and deepens those ties to the past. Those who have the guts to risk censure from society need to lean on that value as much as they need to lean on one another for support.

It's worth it all, too.

In the end, the loving and the knowing and the learning from one another is worth all that one endures.

And I am willing to endure it too. That is, if I ever find the guts to tell the guy that I like him.

Radio bias toward guest outdone only by Phelps' utter banality

Editor,

I would like to publicly address an issue that I was exposed to during K-State's "A Purple Affair" radio show that aired on Oct. 18.

The one that demonstrated that free speech in this country can be expected by anyone, regardless of the insane message lauded, (perceived or real), and the behavior in which it is delivered.

For those who may have missed the show, the messenger was Fred Phelps. Need more be said about behavior?

After many persistent minutes of hitting my last-number re-dial button, I was finally able to get through to the radio station to put forth my question to Mr. Phelps.

My comment had to do with the way Mr. Phelps uses small children in his one-team crusade to eradicate the earth's surface of anyone who chooses to live a lifestyle not blessed with his stamp of approval. For me, this was a significant issue.

However, the feedback that I heard from one of the show's moderators may have led some people to believe otherwise, as I did.

After my comment was aired, and before the station went to break, Stephen Seely, one of the show's co-hosts, said, "Rob and I are going to come back with a couple of serious questions after a break."

Upon returning from break, Stephen said, "Number-one warning people, if you're going to call, it has to be a serious question, or we're not going to take any more phone calls, and we're just going to ask around." "... He (Fred Phelps) asked for a very intelligent question, and I think that we both demand it as well. ..."

Mr. Phelps was more than willing to demonstrate his intellectual objectivity in hearing me out, however. He accomplished this higher order of thinking by verbalizing a barrage of banal insults that can only possibly be outdone by the likes of an Andrew Dice Clay.

Here is a little of what he had to say to me: "You're a rude man, I don't want to spend time exchanging insults with fags on the radio station! You're probably a fag!" And, "Fags always vote their rectum." I profess that I have no idea what that last one means at all.

The responses I received from Mr. Phelps were not unexpected. In fact, compared to the way he treated other people who called in, I did pretty well with him.

What I didn't expect was the pro-Phelps stance that Mr. Seely apparently put forth with his comments about the lack of intelligent questions being put to Mr. Phelps from those of us who could reach Mr. Phelps by phone. I don't recall Mr. Seely making any mention to Mr. Phelps about his lack of intelligent responses.

Forgive me, but I will not classify "fags always vote their rectum" as an intelligent response. Beavis and Butt-Head could have done better.

My goal in wanting to speak with Mr. Phelps had nothing to do with my seeking 15 minutes of fame. Nor did I wish to fuel the questionable demonic fires of an alleged worshiper of God.

I do not agree with Mr. Phelps, or anyone like him who uses children to promote a tirade of hate. I should also state that I am not too keen with adults doing this either.

However, I was determined to exercise my right of free speech in opposing Mr. Phelps' use of subjecting children to his lifestyle of promoted hatred.

And I wanted to do it in the same arena that Phelps uses to promote his opinions. I had only hoped to be able to do it in an environment that did not imply that the responses of the guest merited more consideration than those of us who called in.

In fairness to Stephen Seely and Rob Rawlings, they had to host a show with a guest who holds the charm, politeness, and genteel of a modern day level-five hurricane.

I also would like to believe that Mr. Seely did not deliberately mean to imply that my asking about the use of children in Phelps' organization was not a serious question, but the timing of his comment made it sound that way. And, in trying to be fair to him, I even played my taped copy of the show to at least eight other people. They also felt that there was an implied put-down, too.

In closing, any show with Phelps on it is bound to create friction. I came close many times to using a "colorful metaphor" when I had him on the phone. Even "Nightline's" Ted Koppel would have been pressed to remain urbane with a figure like Fred Phelps. The man does have an "In Your Face!" bulldog attitude. But Mr. Koppel has had many years of experience to craft his skills of being an on-air moderator. This is something that Mr. Seely and Mr. Rawlings will only be able to accomplish with time.

And with the passing of time, I am sure they will appreciate even more that it is not the person with the in-studio mike that has the loudest voice, but rather it is the founding principle that allows that person to hold the mike that speaks volumes.

Coming to grips with mortality brings a renewal of spirit

My dad turned 59 on Tuesday. Man, I can't believe my parents are this old.

When I look at him, I don't see a 59-year-old. I see my dad.

The color of the pickup has changed through the years, going from the green one with the irrigation pipe rack to the red one with the hole in the floorboard and the windshield wipers that don't work.

But Dad hasn't changed. It's still him and the dogs, Tiny and Dupper, driving down the road, tracking milo dust and mud into the house.

He still drives my mom nuts, from the time he washed the oil-soaked duck in the bathtub, getting oil all over the walls, to the time he was welding without glasses and got a piece of metal in his eye.

The cries of "Judas Priest, Bill!" still ring in my mind.

This is how I see my dad, so it was a big surprise when this summer, just before wheat harvest, he awoke with chest pains.

Within two days, he was in Wichita having bypass surgery.

The doctor said it was lucky he made it that far.

Most farmers die in the field when things like that happen.

The night my mom called was the night Keats was hit by the tornado, and I was hiding in the closet.

Maybe it was the way she told me, maybe I was in real denial, but I wasn't worried. After all, this was my dad.

He wasn't going to die. It wasn't even a possibility.

I had a final coming up. Dad said that I wasn't to miss it, that he was OK. So I didn't.

Besides, at that time, he was only having the angioplasty done.

Hell, my grandmother had that done three or four times, so I wasn't worried.

Then mom called and told me they were going to have to do a bypass; the artery had been clogged for too long.

I still wasn't worried. Hell, this was my dad. He was never sick. Even when he had the metal in his eye, my mom had to force him to go to the doctor.

When I found out our doctor was in Wichita after he had a heart attack, the whole thing seemed ludicrous. When I heard Dr. Bruno hung around Dad's door, saying he was Dad's doctor, I felt better. Nothing was really wrong with Dad. So he had a heart attack. Dr. Bruno was there, and it would be fine.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

Then I saw Mom. When I got to Wichita and walked into the Surgical-Intensive Care waiting room, I saw Mom.

She never looked so alone in her life. She told me the nurses had told her to give Dad something to hold onto during surgery, so she told him I was coming. She said he kept asking questions about me and my final clear through the prep-room doors.

When we went in to see Dad, he had all the tubes and obligatory wires in him, including the oxygen mask.

That was when I got a little scared. He looked so small and defenseless. He looked at me and tried to laugh.

"Lolo, I have never hurt this bad in my life."

Over the next six or so visits, we talked about the farm, how my brother was handling it all alone, with Art's help, how the nurses told Dad to breathe into this mask-like thing, and how they were going to have him sit up that night.

To put it mildly, he wasn't thrilled about the last two things. I think his exact words were "No."

When I got home, my brother was trying to get the wheat in, but the combine kept breaking down.

The best part of the whole experience was when the Danler brothers pulled into the yard and offered to cut out the wheat on section two.

I personally had never met these people, but they knew Dad. They said they were finished cutting, and wanted to help.

The number of people who wanted to help was amazing.

I will never forget the sight of Mike Rome and his two combines pulling onto the field by our house. He even brought a semi-truck to haul away the grain.

It was an awesome sight. Then there was Rusty Garrison, who gave moral support to my brother when he needed it.

The phone never stopped ringing. Nichols, Foremans, the people at El Rancho — all were concerned. Everybody wanted to help.

When we went to pick up my dad, he was sitting in the chair beside the bed, ready to go.

He had been ready since about 8 that morning.

It was 3 in the afternoon when we got there.

When we got home, Dad walked slowly through the house, and it was like I was seeing it through his eyes.

It seemed much brighter and more homelike than ever before. Then the phone rang. It was Rusty, asking how Dad was.

When I told him he was home, he was so excited he could barely talk.

Then Dad went in to talk to him, and I heard him laugh for the first time since the surgery.

Happy Birthday Dad. Glad you're still here.

Reggae rises above roots

JEREMY UNRUH
Collegian

"Rise up this morning,
Smile with the rising sun.
Three little birds,
Sit on my doorstep.
Singing sweet songs,
A melody pure and true..."
—Bob Marley

Reggae, the product of urban Jamaican ghettos, will never die as long as "Reggae Extravaganza" is on the air.

"It's interesting about reggae. It came from such humble beginnings, and the world has accepted it so well. It was the first thing the lower class created that gave equal power and self-esteem to the people," said Sylvester Christie, graduate student in journalism and co-host of the KSDB-FM 91.9 show.

Christie co-hosts the show with Sandy Mothee, senior in accounting, from noon to 3 p.m. every Sunday. He and Mothee have been hosting the show since former host Cliff Clifford left.

"Being a journalism student, I had an interest in broadcasting," Christie said. "I believe that journalism students should take advantage of the facilities available."

He has more than a passing interest in the show. Christie is from St. Anne, Jamaica, nine miles from the birthplace of the father of reggae, Bob Marley.

Reggae is a description of the day-to-day life of the urban poor and their struggles, Christie said. Every reggae song is about a different real-life situation.

"It's a means of healing that the people rely on for guidance and help," Christie said.

The music has undergone some changes since it began as ska. It evolved into a rock-steady beat and from there went to original roots rock reggae, Christie said.

"Right now you have a more recent version of reggae — hip-hop," Christie said.

He cited current artists Shabba Ranks and Yellowman as examples.

"Most listeners tend to lean toward original roots rock reggae. I've tried to introduce hip-hop, but the listeners are still learning reggae," Christie said.

However, he said, the newer music has not significantly changed the message of reggae. The message is still there.

Listeners of the program aren't exclusively reggae fans.

"Our listeners are pretty much everybody — students, of course, but we have a strong listenership in Junction City and Fort Riley," Christie said.

"I think the program has reached everybody."

Joe Montgomery, DB92 station manager, said he agrees.

"Reggae has a broad appeal. There's not really a stereotypical reggae listener," Montgomery said.

One feature of "Reggae Extravaganza" is the social commentary part of the program.

"We relate reggae to current day happenings," Christie said. Artists like Bob Marley and Peter Tosh didn't just write about what was in their backyards. They had international vision, Christie said.

Recently, the DJ pair played Peter Tosh's "We Don't Want No Nuclear War" in response to U.S. plans to continue detonating nuclear devices after China broke the moratorium on nuclear testing. Earlier this fall the two played Jimmy Cliff's "Many Rivers to Cross" in response to the area's summer floods.

Another portion of the show is dedicated to the featured artist of the week. They talk about where the artist is from and how the artist became involved in reggae.

"Basically, we just play music, take requests and give social commentary," Christie said.

SENATE

Abstentions cause parliamentary SNAFU

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

Four senators who abstained from voting on an allocation caused nearly 20 minutes of confusion at Student Senate Tuesday night.

Twenty-six senators voted in favor of a recommendation to fund Black Student Union $586.80 to attend a Black Man Think Tank conference in Washington, D.C. Twenty-two voted against the recommendation, and four senators abstained from voting.

The confusion arose when Student Senate Chairman DeLoss Jahnke said the recommendation passed, while Bill Muir, faculty representative to Senate, said the allocation did not pass.

Muir said according to the rules of parliamentary procedure, a majority of those eligible to vote must vote for a motion in order for it to pass. He said the four abstentions prevent the motion from securing the necessary votes needed.

"Because 25 votes yes out of 51 voting members, that must be considered a minority," Muir said.

The four abstentions mean that 25 yes votes are actually a minority of the 51 senators eligible to vote, he said.

After discussing the vote with the Senate parliamentarian, Jahnke said Muir was right and said he was sorry for the mistake.

"I apologize for all the screwed-up mess that was created," Jahnke said. "I hope something like that doesn't come up again.

"I know I've learned from it."

Following Jahnke's apology, Muir said he was one of the senators who failed to vote on the recommendation. He then requested Senate reconsider the allocation.

Senate then adopted the recommendation with 27 senators voting in favor of the allocation, 20 voting against it, and five abstaining.

Muir said he abstained from voting the first time because he did not feel he had enough information to make an informed decision.

"It actually had more yes votes than no votes, but the way abstains are counted, they end up going against the majority," Muir said.

In addition to Black Student Union, Senate approved spring semester allocations to Circle K International, College Libertarians and College Republicans. It also approved money for Hispanic American Leadership Organization and Students for the Right to Life.

Government alleges abuse of grant program

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The government has moved to remove 21 orthodox Jewish schools from its largest cash aid program for higher education, saying they were never eligible to receive millions of dollars in Pell grants.

The Education department said the schools, all but one in the New York City area, were ineligible because the training they provide does not lead to degrees or enhance students' job prospects.

The schools were sent letters Monday notifying them of the decision. They will have 10 days to respond before formal action is taken against them.

The action comes as a federal grand jury in New York and a congressional subcommittee investigate several dozen Hasidic Jewish academies and other private institutions over alleged abuses in the $6.7-billion program.

The Associated Press reported in August that government documents revealed the Pell program was being defrauded of millions of dollars by schools that claim benefits for students who don't attend or are ineligible.

The alleged violators described in the enforcement reports were as disparate as the orthodox Jewish academies in New York and a Wisconsin trucker-training facility.

Some 3.8 million students received an average of $1,763 each last year at 6,300 eligible schools.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, said Monday's move to disqualify the schools is long overdue.

Nunn's committee has scheduled hearings for next week on abuses and mismanagement in the program.

The schools barred from Pell-grant eligibility all failed to meet legal requirements for being in the program, according to letters they were sent.

Netters look for first Big 8 win against Missouri

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The volleyball match-up between K-State and Missouri tonight in Ahearn Field House will be of two almost identical teams.

The Wildcats have a 7-12 record, and the Tigers have a 7-11 record. Both teams are also winless in the Big Eight Conference. The records make this an important match, K-State Coach Patti Hagemeyer said.

"Both teams will be trying to gain some consistency," Hagemeyer said. "This is a pretty big match."

The Cats have lost three matches in row, but Hagemeyer said the team is not in a decline.

"I wouldn't say that we are in a slump right now," Hagemeyer said.

"We need to do more of everything back to back. We have the ability to do things well for a few plays, but we need to do it more consistently."

Missouri is coming off a 3-0 loss to Kansas last week. Gwen Mullens led the Tigers with nine kills as the Tigers hit for negative .010 in the match. Tigers coach Craig Sherman said the Tigers need to improve their serving.

"We need to serve a lot tougher to keep people out of their system," Sherman said.

"Against Kansas we were struggling on offense. We worked a lot on our individual defense, as well as our blocking."

Hagemeyer said the Tigers' strength is their experience.

"They got to experience how it felt to win last season," Hagemeyer said. "They won some matches in the Big Eight last season, and they have some experienced players back."

Missouri has been led this season by Mullens, who has recorded 148 kills. Regan Eckenrode has also contributed this season with 140 kills.

"We will have a pretty good idea what to key on," Hagemeyer said. "We know enough to play them pretty well defensively."

Hagemeyer said she has kept the same starting line-up for three straight matches, which has some advantages.

"This line-up has its moments," Hagemeyer said. "They have the ability to narrow their focus and concentrate on a specific task. I've been really happy with them."

With the emergence of the new line-up, former starters Stephanie Liester and Angie McKee have been coming off of the bench.

"I expect them to be emotional leaders," Hagemeyer said.

"They have to be ready to play when needed. From them, I expect second and third efforts."

Also with the new line-up, Suzanne Hagge has gotten more playing time, and Hagemeyer said she is starting to gain experience.

"She has a lot more left inside of her," Hagemeyer said.

"Tonight she will get more than nine kills."

Missouri leads the series 23-14.

The Cats will play host to Colorado at 7:30 p.m. Saturday for their second home match of the week. The Buffaloes lead the series 10-3.

Tonight's match-up will start at 7:30.

Wright guides Cats to 6th-place finish at Lawrence

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

The women's golf team slipped to sixth place and tied with Southern Methodist at the Marilyn Smith/Jayhawk Invitational at the Alvamar course.

The team shot a 340 Tuesday and finished with 1,006 total points for the tournament.

The Cats were in fifth place going into the final round Tuesday.

"We were tied with Wichita and four strokes behind Kansas going into today," Coach Jim Brenneman said.

"We just didn't play very well."

Jacque Wright placed 11th in the tournament after shooting 80-80-79.

"I could have done better, but I didn't have it all together," said Wright,who led the team for the fifth time this season. "My scores were respectable, and I can learn from them."

Wright has performed well this year, Brenneman said.

"If Jackie continues to lower her scoring average, she will have the best women's average at K-State," Brenneman said.

K-State player Debbie Chrystal said she wasn't satisfied with her scores of 93-91-90, but she did shoot a hole-in-one on a par three.

"This was my first hole-in-one," Chrystal said. "It was really windy, and I used a three wood for 168 yards where I usually use a three iron. The ball bounced three times and went in." Chrystal competed individually and finished 50th.

"We were pretty happy with how we played Monday, but Tuesday we couldn't catch KU and fell even further behind Wichita,"she said.

The course was extremely wet after it rained during the first 27 of 36 holes of Monday's round, Chrystal said.

Both Wright and Denise Pottle,who shot 84-80-86 and tied for 22nd, said the team performed better in the rain and wind.

"We did pretty good considering the weather conditions," Pottle said. "Everyone tried their best."

The team will be preparing for the Aggie Invitational tournament at Texas A&M University.

"This is a big tournament for us. There will be quite a few Big Eight teams there," Pottle said. "We really need to work hard."

Sarahayn Morehead carded a 93-91-90, Staci Busch a 85-95-89 and Donita Gleason a 82-87-86.

Oklahoma State won the tournament and was followed by three Big Eight teams: Nebraska, Missouri, and Kansas.

WORLD SERIES

Smart decision for Gaston: Jays win

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — It took just a few minutes for Cito Gaston to look like a genius on Tuesday night. By the time Paul Molitor finished his second at-bat, the Toronto manager was up there with Einstein.

Three hours before Game 3 started, Gaston gambled by becoming only the third manager to bench a batting champion in a World Series game.

Paul Molitor, kept in the lineup because of Gaston's guile, hit a two-run triple on Danny Jackson's 14th pitch of the game. On the next pitch he saw, Jackson's 43rd of the night, Molitor hit a two-out homer in the third inning.

"It looks to me like Cito made the right choice tonight," Phillies manager Jim Fregosi said.

Toronto's 10-3 victory over Philadelphia gave Gaston sufficient smarts for the manager's branch of the Mensa Society, the group of high IQs.

"It's a little bizarre, a unique situation," John Olerud said before the game, before we appreciated Gaston's acumen.

Olerud, who led the AL in hitting at .363, remained on the Blue Jays bench instead of playing first base on the spongy green turf of Veterans Stadium. Molitor, second in the league at .332, took Olerud's spot because there is no designated hitter in the Nation League city.

"It hurts this year just like it hurt last year," said Gaston, who dispatched Olerud to the dugout twice against Atlanta to make room for Dave Winfield.

Olerud said before the game he understood Gaston's decision. After the game, everyone did.

COLUMN

DH position creating imbalance

TROY COVERDALE

Three games have been played in the 1993 edition of the World Series between Philadelphia and Toronto, and a familiar theme is beginning to take over the focus of fans and reporters alike.

Whom should the Blue Jays play, and whom should they bench?

This question follows what I call the "McRae Rule." The official "McRae Rule" is in the books against sliding in high on a second baseman trying to turn a double play. My version of the "McRae Rule" is the rule that allows or does not allow the designated hitter to play, depending on whether the home team is the American or National League team.

The rule used to be that in alternate years the DH would be used in World Series play. Then someone got the brilliant idea to change the rule to say the home team's league affiliation would decide the issue.

I call it the "McRae Rule" because it was instituted after the Kansas City Royals won the 1985 World Series. The Royals' full-time DH, Hal McRae, saw time only as a pinch-hitter in the fall classic because 1985 was the season the DH was to not be used in World Series play.

Did it affect the way the series was played? You bet. Did it hurt the Royals? Not really, but the old version of the rule did cause problems.

Now, you have the Toronto Blue Jays trying to figure out whom to play and whom to sit during the three games in Philadelphia last night, tonight and tomorrow night.

Do you sit Paul Molitor for the three games and take out one of the more talented hitters in the game because he is an everyday DH?

Or do you sit Ed Sprague, who has hit the worst out of the trio of Molitor, John Olerud and himself, but has distinguished himself as an excellent fielder?

The Blue Jays had this problem a year ago as well with Dave Winfield and Joe Carter. They elected to sit Carter and take their chances with Winfield in right field, and it worked.

But the underlying problem is not so much who should be on the field for Toronto. Rather, it comes down to what has become a generation-old debate: Should pitchers hit?

I know when I was playing baseball as a kid and could barely hit my weight, no one was there to bat in my place. Youth baseball is played that way — the kids are taught all aspects of the ballgame to become better.

As the years go on, though, kids are taught otherwise. Beginning in high school, DHs are used. That continues in college and into the minor leagues.

Is it any wonder pitchers in the National League don't bat well?

In the old days, the argument would be to drop the DH. But, let's be honest, the DH is here to stay on many levels of baseball.

The argument from this baseball fan's viewpoint is maybe it's time to add the DH to the National League.

I don't agree with it from my purist standpoint in baseball. I think the DH goes against everything American: Mom, apple pie and Chevys.

But it has been 20 years since the introduction of the DH to the American League. It has become a part of the game that can't be denied, and can't be easily erased from the rule books.

The DH has lengthened the careers of some of the greatest players of all-time: Dave Winfield, Robin Yount, Paul Molitor and, yes, even George Brett. It does increase run production in games, pleasing fans who aren't enthralled with pitcher's duels.

But the biggest effect the DH has on the game is the imbalance it creates between the AL and NL. It's an imbalance that becomes more and more obvious every year in the World Series.

It's an imbalance that needs to be corrected once and for all. DH or no DH, major-league baseball needs to make the call.

Union helps check bouncers

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Education is the backbone of the K-State Union's philosophy in dealing with insufficiently funded checks.

Jack Thoman, assistant director and business manager of the Union, said out of the many checks the Union receives each day, only a few are returned.

"We take mostly checks from students," Thoman said. "I suspect less than 1 percent are returned."

The Union tries to give individuals who write insufficiently funded checks the opportunity to pay the check without redepositing the check to the bank a second time, which charges an additional service fee, Thoman said.

"We're trying to make it user-friendly," Thoman said. "I think basically it's honest mistakes."

Banks should offer a course to customers on how to manage a checkbook, Thoman said.

"I wish there was some way to get a little seminar, such as 'Welcome to college — here is how to do your checkbook,'" he said.

The Union has a list of students whose checks will not be accepted, a practice intended to avoid repeat offenders, Thoman said.

Thoman said in extreme cases of uncooperative individuals, the Union takes legal action.

Doug Ackley, assistant controller for cashiering and student loans, said 100 to 150 students bounce checks during the beginning of each semester at fee payment.

K-State re-deposits all insufficiently funded checks from fee payment automatically through the bank a second time. If the check does not clear the second time, a $15 service charge is assessed, Ackley said. If the check clears the second time, a service charge is not assessed.

"Half the checks or more will clear the second time," Ackley said. "A lot of students are real tight on their money, and we realize that."

K-State does not take legal action against students who cannot pay for an insufficient check from fee payment, Ackley said.

Rather, the student will be dropped from classes if there is no reply 15 days after a letter from the University is sent.

"We will ask the student to come in and get it taken care of within a reasonable amount of time, and if they don't, we cancel their classes," Ackley said. "There's a small number of them who think they might be getting away with something, but they don't."

CITY

City commission passes taxi resolution

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

The Manhattan City Commission passed a resolution Tuesday that raises the price for a taxi ride in Manhattan.

Passengers will now be required to pay $2.50 for a 1-mile trip, $3.50 for a 2-mile trip and $7 for a 5-mile trip.

The price of coupons for senior citizen and handicapped riders will increase to $2.50.

Glen D. Puett, president and general manager of Bell Taxi-Checker Cab, said Clinton's gasoline tax will cost his company approximately $4,000-5,000 a year. As of July 1, Puett said the price of his insurance has increased 35 percent.

"I see that I have to have the increase I asked for to provide for the city of Manhattan the way they deserved to be served," Puett said.

In Junction City, passengers pay $2.65 for a 2-mile passenger ride and $4.75 for a 5-mile passenger ride. Puett said his company is currently losing money in Junction City.

Roger Maughmer, Manhattan mayor, said he hoped the price increase for a ride in Manhattan would not pay for the taxi service in Junction City, but would indeed be used to pay expenses in Manhattan.

In other business, a public hearing was held to discuss improvements to Browning Avenue between Kimball Avenue and Snowbird Drive.

Jerry E. Petty, director of community development, said the estimated total cost for the project is $530,000, and it would be finished before school begins in the fall of 1994.

Several community members spoke against an assessment requiring people living along the street to pay 75 percent of the costs for the project, leaving only 25 percent for the city.

Gene Meyer, 2202 Browning Ave., said there are many ill feelings among the residents of Browning Avenue associated with this project.

Meyer said one day, a group of volunteers counted cars that drove down Browning Avenue for seven hours. 1,531 cars were counted. Six hundred eighty cars (44 percent) drove down the street without exiting; 782 cars (51 percent) turned off and exited onto a side street, and 69 cars (approximately 4.5 percent) parked at houses on Browning Avenue.

"So the split, 75/25, really seems inappropriate," Meyer said.

The city commission voted to table the resolution after hearing additional concerns relating to the tax assessment and about drainage problems not yet addressed in the same area.

The meeting began with a report from Helen Cooper, city commissioner, about her visit to Bethlehem, Penn.

Several organizations in Bethlehem raised money to help Manhattan during the flood.

"The city is used to helping and caring for others since the Revolutionary and Civil wars," she said.

Cooper met with Ken Smith, mayor of Bethlehem, and a press conference was held to honor the visit.

Cooper said she was impressed by Bethlehem's support, even though the city is facing economic instability because of the decline in the steel industry.

"I'd really like to see, sometime in the future, that we (Manhattan) will take the initiative to reach out and help a city in need," Cooper said.

"I always loved De Niro, and he was scary to watch. And the boy was beautiful."

The producers were polite to him, and Wolff said he spent time on the set.

"As I was watching the movie, I didn't have a sense of déjà vu or this is my life," Wolff said. "I was moved by it as if it happened to somebody else."

Union Station's coffee hours to be extended

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

For a taste of other cultures, the Union Program Council's Multicultural Committee offers international coffee hours every Wednesday in Union Station.

Today's coffee hour will be expanded by 30 minutes, from 2:30 to 4 p.m., to incorporate special entertainment by guitarist Susan Drake.

There will also be an additional coffee hour from 7 to 9 this evening with entertainment by acoustic folk guitarist Chuy Negrete.

The added entertainment is part of the Multicultural Committee's involvement in Hispanic Awareness Month. Next Wednesday's coffee hour will also celebrate Hispanic Awareness Month by offering coffees from Central and South America.

Mary Taylor, Multicultural Committee chairwoman and junior in psychology, said the group's involvement with Hispanic Awareness Month came at the suggestion of former committee chairman Camilo Estremadorio, sophomore undecided.

"Every month there is usually some type of cultural event going on such as Hispanic Awareness Month or others," Taylor said. "We can use the coffee hours to help celebrate those months."

Even without special events, the coffee hours are offered as a way to promote diversity.

"We're trying to promote awareness of different cultures and to broaden the students' awareness of UPC. We also want to try to to reach international students," Taylor said.

However, committee member Dana Farmer, junior in social work, said she thinks its appeal is not only for international students.

"It's for anyone who wants to educate themselves about other cultures," Farmer said. "It's a good way to meet people and try some new kinds of coffee. I went to see if I could meet some people interested in the same issues as me."

Each cup of coffee costs 90 cents, but students receive a coupon for a free cup of coffee on their next visit.

Although Taylor said the coffee hours currently attract only about 15 people each week, she said the committee is looking for new ways to get students involved.

"We're happy now that we've gotten things started," she said.

COFFEE HOUR

- Guitarist Susan Drake will perform from 2:30 p.m. to 4 p.m. today in the K-State Union Station.
- Acoustic folk guitarist Chuy Negrete will be at the coffee hour from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m.

Embargoes reimposed on Haiti

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — A potentially devastating oil embargo was reimposed on Haiti today as its army commander ignored demands that he respect a plan for the return from exile of the country's elected president.

Six U.S. and three Canadian warships were offshore to enforce the embargo, and a French frigate was on the way to join them. But if Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras was worried, it did not show.

As the midnight deadline for signaling his acceptance of the peace plan approached Monday, Cedras relaxed with aides at army headquarters. News photographers snapped shots of him smoking a cigarette and joking.

Asked what the army would do if U.S. troops came ashore to rescue Americans, Cedras said, "I'm certain it will not reach such a point."

About 9,000 U.S. citizens live in Haiti, 8,000 of them Haitian-Americans.

Belgium and Canada urged their citizens to leave Haiti over the weekend, and many did.

In the event an evacuation of American citizens was ordered, helicopters and hundreds of U.S. Marines were moved over the weekend to the U.S. Navy base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, 90 miles northwest of Haiti.

The goal of the embargo is to compel Cedras to live up to terms of the accord he signed to allow President Jean-Bertrand Aristide to return to office Oct. 30.

This capital of one million people came to life slowly on the first day of the embargo, which is sure to further burden an economy that is already the poorest in the Americas.

"Gas supplies are normal. There's no rationing, yet," said a service station attendant, whose request to remain anonymous reflected widespread nervousness about the potential for violence. Prices remained stable at about $1.50 a gallon.

There was no line.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

■ Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Reader gives insight on 410

Dear Cassandra,

Unless you're an experienced computer on-line type, you wouldn't have known that "410" is adult-forum shorthand for Extreme Squid Fetishist.

His particular perverse thrill may be seeing them sliced to pieces under the brutal skates of the hockey players.

This isn't a kitchen column, but have you ever cooked squid? It's like cleaning extra heavy-duty rubbers (used), but delicious. The squid, that is.

Or for a real change of pace, you can stuff them whole with the tentacles left hanging out.

Signed,
409

Dear 409,

All right, all right — what is it with this code thing?

You told me about 410, but what does 409 mean? Are you an oven-top cleaner that's good on tile scum too? Or, perhaps since 409 is so close in proximity to 410, are you an Extreme Octopus Fetishist?

Of course, if one of your friends writes in to tell me what 409 means and signs with another number, the chaos might never end. This could get rather circular.

Thanks for the kitchen tip. I always appreciate recipes. Unfortunately, I gave up eating prophylactics years ago. It's just not right.

Dear Cassandra,

How does your garden grow?
Signed,
Silly-Face-Butt-Head

Dear Silly-Butt,

Uh ... huh, huh ... huh, huh.

Is this like, uh, a trick question? Because like, I thought anybody that was anybody used Rogaine.

It makes my carrots really, really, uh ... hairy.

Lord.

You know, I really hate Beavis and Butt-Head.

MTV to feature cartoon duo at later time slot

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Beavis and Butt-Head, the fire-loving, doltish cartoon characters blamed by a mother for the death of her 2-year-old child, will no longer be spewing their brand of humor early in the evening.

MTV said Monday it is moving the callous pair from 7 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. Eastern time.

The cult cartoon was criticized earlier this month after an Ohio mother of a 5-year-old who started a fire that killed his younger sister accused the show of turning her son into a firebug.

Beavis and Butt-Head, nightmare caricatures of teen-age boys, like to light fires and chant "fire is good."

MTV said last week it would delete any reference to fire in the future.

As for the moving of the 7 p.m. show, "B&B" creator Mike Judge and MTV want to come up with a different concept for new episodes of the series that could be on earlier, said MTV spokeswoman Tina Exarhos.

Fans will be able to watch their heroes back-to-back because they're also on at 11 p.m.

Skankin' the night away

HAROLD RING
Collegian

Manhattan will get a taste of dill tonight when Skankin' Pickle brings its musical mayhem to town.

The band plays ska music. Ska can be compared to reggae with horns and a faster tempo. Ska originated in Jamaica during the '60s and found most of its popularity in Great Britain.

Skankin' Pickle formed in 1989 and recorded its first album in 1991. The album, "SKAFUNK-RASTAPUNK," has sold about 20,000 copies. The Pickle's second album, "Skankin' Pickle Fever," was recorded and released in late 1992.

The band has been touring constantly since then. The tour the band is on now started in Hawaii and will end on the east coast. The band is planning a European tour for this winter.

Karen Estes, Tahoe Agency representative, said the band has been touring college campuses across the United States.

"They are really popular on the college scene," she said.

Skankin' Pickle writes songs dealing with racial hatred and prejudice and seems to draw its subject matter from current issues. Songs like "Ice Cube, Korea Wants A Word With You" and "Skinless Friend" discuss racial problems. The band does have a funny side, and songs like "Song #3" and "You Shouldn't Judge A Man By The Hair On His Butt" show its sense of humor.

The San Francisco-based Skankin' Pickle has opened for bands like Primus, the Dead Milkmen and Fishbone.

Mitch Ulrich, owner of The Warehouse, said he hoped there would be a big crowd for the show because Skankin' Pickle has been known to go crazy on stage.

K-State students have chance to teach in Japan

VICKY TILLIER
Collegian

K-State students are invited to participate in the Japan Exchange and Teaching Program.

Students who participate in the JETP can work in government offices or teach classes with other Japanese teachers.

Amy West, economic assistant for the Consulate General Of Japan, will be coming to K-State to promote the JETP at 1 p.m. on Nov. 11 in the K-State Union, room 209.

James Akin, director of Career and Employment Services, and Barry Michie, program officer and director of studies abroad, discussed the JETP criteria last week with the Council of Local Authorities for International Relations in Kansas City, MO.

Tamotsu Suda, manager of the guidance and counseling division from Tokyo, and officials of the CLAIR are touring the midland and southern parts of the United States to introduce JETP's current system.

"The delegation has come here to exchange opinions with us and answer questions," Consul Ryoji Noda, director of cultural affairs in Kansas City, said.

Assistant language teachers and coordinators for international relations are two of the paid positions offered by the JETP, Kathryn Blyth, program coordinator, said.

The Embassy of Japan screens the applications carefully before interviewing prospective candidates, Noda said.

"They need to be able to forge a lot of personal relationships and demonstrate leadership qualities," Blyth said. "They need to be able to listen to and accept other people's opinions. They need to be able to make suggestions and come up with their own innovative ideas."

Applicants are asked why they want to work in Japan during the interview, John Matthews, executive assistant to the Consulate General of Japan, said.

"If they say, 'Yes, we have an interest in Japanese religions,' then we ask them about their interest in Japanese religions," Matthews said.

Assistant language teachers are not required to speak Japanese, but the ability to speak the language would benefit applicants.

"From a practical point of view, when we interview applicants for the JET Program, we always like to ask them about their English language ability," Matthews said. "If the applicants say they can speak Japanese, they are asked a question in Japanese."

People that apply for the coordinator for international relations positions should be able to speak the Japanese language fluently, Matthews said.

Assistant language teacher participants are employed by local boards of education, and most of them team teach with other Japanese teachers, Blyth said.

"ALTs give presentations about their culture, visit school districts and assist with classes taught by Japanese teachers," she said.

K-State students interested in working overseas can benefit from the JETP because they will learn to appreciate the freedom they have in the United States, Valerie Scott, program manager and Japanese instructor, said.

"I think that teaching in Japan is a good experience because you can actually see how other people live," Scott said.

"I also made a lot of new friends while I worked in Japan. The people are extremely friendly and supportive," Scott said.

Coordinator for international relations participants have different duties because they are placed in local government offices, Blyth said.

"Their duties include receiving guests from abroad, editing and translating pamphlets, writing foreign-language publications, making speeches and organizing international events," she said.

"Japan is a very intriguing country," West said. "One of the most fascinating aspects of Japan is it appears to be modernized or westernized, but there is a very distinct traditional basis that precludes any of the westernized facades."

West described what her experience as a coordinator for international relations participant was like while she was in Japan.

"I spent 75 to 85 percent of my time doing public speeches in Japanese about topics ranging from international peace to what the women in my home town did," she said.

She also made arrangements for other heads of state or delegations that would come to Japan..

West said her duties as a coodinator for international relations included discussing culture and Japanese philosophy to help familiarize exchange students with the foreign culture.

"I also organized a lot of international seminars. We would bring people from all over the world together to have different forums and discussions," she said. "That seemed to really work through the small communities to give them a feeling for what it is like to actually talk with and be exposed to people from different countries, which I think is one of the main focuses of what the CIR is supposed to be doing and the ALT," West said.

Suda said this was his first visit to the United States.

"I'm very impressed by the very, very huge land in this country," he said. "I think even if this is a huge nation, I'm sure the people in the United States have thought of a deeper meaning in 'united'," he said. This conviction— united — is the main aim of the JET Program," Suda said.

CLASSIFIED DIRECTORY

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

Many nationalities to showcase talents

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

Be international.

That's the idea behind International Cultural Night, an event sponsored by the International Coordinating Council.

The evening will feature entertainment from 15 of the 18 international organizations represented by the ICC. Kouassi Kouakou, ICC president, said he is encouraging all of the organizations to participate.

"If they don't perform, they can bring snacks from their country," he said.

Each act will be about 10 minutes long. Performances will range from acting and singing to dancing and comedy.

"We're expecting to have a little bit of everything," Kouakou said.

There will be a surprise guest of honor, Kouakou said, but he declined to say who.

The purpose of the event is to increase cultural awareness in our community in general, Kouakou said.

"It's a great effort on the part of international students to share their culture," he said.

"We have adopted American culture, and we want to give something back."

Motaz Hourani, ICC co-adviser, agreed.

"(We want) to make the community aware of as many diverse international cultures as possible and to do that in a friendly and fun atmosphere," Hourani said."It will be very beneficial for people to experience this collection of international cultures."

Kouakou said he hopes a lot of children will attend. That is part of the reason children under 12 are allowed in for free, he said.

"Children are the hope of tomorrow," Kouakou said. "To make the future a better time, they have to get to know their world now by being exposed to other cultures now."

This isn't the first time the ICC has sponsored such an event. Kouakou said the council usually ends International Week in the spring with a similar night.

"People asked when we were going to have it again, and I would tell them next year," Kouakou said. "They would always say that was too long to wait, so we decided to have another one in the fall."

TICKET INFO

- International Cultural Night is from 6:30 p.m. to 10 p.m. on Saturday, Oct. 23. The event is free for all K-State students and children under 12.
- The general public can get tickets for $2 at the K-State Union or at the International Student Center.

PLO prisoner released

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israel released its longest-held Palestinian prisoner today, one of the first concrete achievements of its accord with the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The freeing of Salim Hussein Zerai after 23 years was seen as a prelude to the release of thousands of Palestinians over the coming weeks.

Some 12,000 Palestinians have been jailed for fighting Israel's occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

"It is what we call a confidence-building measure," said Oded Ben-Ami, a spokesman for Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

"I believe that some time during the negotiating process there will be more releases," he said.

Zerai, 50, was let out of prison because the PLO had not carried out any attacks since the autonomy accord was signed Sept. 13, Rabin said in a statement released by the army.

About 400 Palestinians chanting "Long Live the Olive Branch" gathered outside Zerai's home in the Gaza town of Deir el Balah.

He was silent when he pulled up riding on top of a car, carrying pictures of Palestinian leaders and a Palestinian flag.

"I think our bullets have been fired for the sake of peace," Zerai later said.

"Tears streamed from eyes when I saw my (Palestinian) flag flying from my house," he said.

Palestinians have demanded the release of all prisoners held in Israeli jails on charges of fighting the occupation, and the return of 1,500 deported for similar reasons.

Professors investigate mysteries of memory

LEIGH NEVANS
Collegian

A former K-State graduate student in psychology not only won a place in the "Guinness Book of World Records," but now has had a book written about him.

Three K-State professors in psychology, Thaddeus Cowan, Jerome Frieman and Charles Thompson, wrote "Memory Search by a Memorist" about Rajan Mahadevan, to be published this month.

"We know some people are born with better memory skills than others. Rajan has a very good natural memory, but what you see when he performs is a practiced skill. What he does with the practice is spectacular," Thompson said.

The psychology department hired four students as control subjects for three years.

The prerequisites were that they had normal memory spans and a 3.0 GPA.

Seven digits is the normal memory span, he said.

The control subjects worked up to 15 digit memories while Rajan topped out at 60 digits, Thompson said.

"He recited 31,811 decimal places of pi in 1981 from rote memory. Rote memory meaning using no memory techniques to recall, just pure memory," he said.

Reciting so many decimal places of pi is how Mahadevan earned a place in the "Guinness Book of World Records."

Mahadevan remembers things unlike most people.

Instead of using mnemonic devices, he uses a location of a digit to recall items.

"We worked with the first 10,000 digits of pi. We could ask him to give us the 8,437 digit of pi. He did it in an average of 12 seconds and with 98 percent accuracy," Thompson said.

"He learned in blocks of 10 digits. We would give him the first five numbers of any block and he would recite the second five numbers in two seconds and with 85 percent accuracy," he said.

"Practice is the key. We came to the conclusion that other people could do it, if they put in the practice time. He practiced. Most people couldn't drive themselves to memorize numbers," Thompson said.

Mahadevan, who is now working on a doctorate in cognitive science at Florida State University, said he enjoyed his time at K-State.

"I met a lot of wonderful people there. What made K-State stand out as an international student is the distinguished figures of the faculty in the psychology department," he said.

Mahadevan will not be attempting to break the current record of pi digits recalled anytime soon.

"I'll give 100,000 a shot some time. Right now, I'm concentrating on my dissertation," he said.

One element kept K-State from upsetting the No. 5-ranked team in the nation and improving to a 6-0 record.

Poise.

K-State battled Nebraska to the finish Saturday at Lincoln, Neb., losing its first game of the season 45-28 in front of 75,721 fans at Memorial Stadium. The loss was the Cats' 26th straight to the Cornhuskers.

"We played hard, but I don't think we played with great poise, and that's what I shared with our team," Coach Bill Snyder said. "We needed a game like this perhaps for the program in order to continue the maturing process and to learn to play with greater poise."

"We came out, and the guys were nervous," wide receiver Andre Coleman said. "A lot of these guys haven't been to the University of Nebraska before. They haven't seen 80,000 people full of red.

"The first series, the guys were nervous, and we didn't have the poise, and it showed. It cost us a turnover and got us down early," Coleman said.

Quarterback Chad May chose to audible the first play from scrimmage, but when the ball was snapped, he pitched to the right, and running back J.J. Smith was running to the left. Nebraska's Ed Stewart recovered the ball, and Calvin Jones took it in five plays later to give the Cornhuskers a 7-0 lead.

"I think it was just miscommunication," Smith said. "It was an audible, and the offense went right and Chad went left."

K-State turned the ball over three times in the contest, with Nebraska scoring on each miscue.

The Wildcats tied the game twice in the first half, and at one point they trailed just 31-28 with 7:44 remaining in the game.

May, who passed for a Big Eight Conference record — 489 yards in one game — hit a wide-open Kevin Lockett down the left sideline to bring K-State within three points in the final quarter.

But the Cornhuskers utilized their successful option attack and engineered a seven-play, 76-yard drive to score their first touchdown of the second half, taking a 38-28 advantage with 5:25 left to play.

"We were inept at being able to play their option game, which created a real problem for us," Snyder said. "We gave up some passes that we should not have."

Nebraska quarterback Tommy Frazier finished with 312 yards of total offense, just seven yards short of a Nebraska record. Frazier also ran for 158 yards on 16 carries with two touchdowns — a career high. Jones rushed for a season-high 138 yards on 29 carries and two touchdowns. He is now fifth on the Cornhuskers' all-time rushing chart.

"We were making a lot of mental errors on big plays," said linebacker Percell Gaskins, who finished with six tackles and one quarterback sack. "Nebraska — they're not ranked (No. 5) in the nation for nothing. You can't make mental

Mistakes play big role in K-State loss

BRIAN ANDERSON

LINCOLN, NEB. — Turnovers and a personal foul — these mistakes hurt K-State in its 45-28 loss to Nebraska last Saturday.

The win for the Cornhuskers moved them to 6-0 and 2-0 in the Big Eight, while K-State suffered its first loss through six games and is 1-1 in the conference.

Nebraska coach Tom Osborne said those mistakes helped Nebraska win the game.

"Turnovers were the big difference in the ballgame," Osborne said.

"I don't know if we would have won without them."

The first of the mishaps occurred on the Wildcats' first play when quarterback Chad May fumbled the ball, and it was recovered by linebacker Ed Stewart at the Cats' 21-yard line.

From there, the Cornhuskers went five plays to score their first touchdown on a four-yard run from I-back Calvin Jones.

K-State coach Bill Snyder said it was a key moment in the game.

"We turned the ball over the first snap of the game and gave them a 20-yard field to work with and gave up seven points," Snyder said.

"Then, we nad them third down and 26, and we had a deadball personal foul, and they went the distance.

"That's 14 points."

The deadball foul happened with Nebraska leading 21-14 halfway through the second quarter.

K-State had just stopped running back Lawrence Phillips to fourth down when both teams started to fight. The officials ruled against the Cats and gave the Cornhuskers an automatic first down.

Twelve plays later, quarterback Tommie Frazier ran around the left to get the football over the goal line for a 28-14 score.

The second turnover happened with 54 seconds left in the first half when K-State had the ball at the Nebraska 4-yard line.

Facing second and goal, May pitched the ball to running J.J. Smith, who ran to the right side of the field, while May went away from the play and into the end zone. Smith stopped running and looked for May.

Nebraska cornerback Tyrone Williams said he knew what was going to happen and intercepted the ball.

"We were in man-to-man, and I had the tight end," Williams said. "I saw that he was blocking, then I saw the quarterback running into the flats, and I broke for the ball.

"I was surprised he threw the ball. I was already on my way over there."

May said the interception was the key to the game.

"I was just running to the pylon. If he (Smith) wouldn't have slipped, he just needed to throw it long enough," May said.

"I thought it was a big play. We could have been down 28-21 going to the half instead of 31-14."

Nebraska moved the ball into kicking range for Byron Bennett as he made a 48-yard field goal with no time left in the first half.

"That play should have worked. He (Coach Snyder) made a good call," May said. "We've never ran that play before."

The Cats' third turnover was an interception from linebacker Ernie Beler with 1:35 left in the game. K-State was trying to get another touchdown to close the 38-28 gap when Beler picked off May's pass.

The interception would increase the Cornhuskers' lead as Lawrence Phillips ran 46 yards for the final score.

Osborne said he was happy about the win.

"I'm glad to get out of that one," he said. "I'm a little disappointed in some things, but we had enough in us to win, and sometimes that's all you can do, is just win."

Former all-American waits for call from the NFL

JEN MESSELT
Collegian

First-team, all-America status does not always guarantee a stint in the pros. Just ask former K-State punter Sean Snyder.

Snyder, K-State's first Associated Press All-American, was seen by many as No. 9 on the football field. While wearing the purple and white for two years, he recorded the best punting in a single game (52.8), single season (44.7) and career (43.0) in 1992.

Snyder was awarded Kodak all-American honors and, in turn, was on the Bob Hope Christmas show last year with the other selected all-Americans.

The National Football League Draft of 1993 was held for four days in April. It is procedure that organizations call the prospective draftees to notify them of the teams' selection.

Not receiving a phone call on the first day, Snyder said he chose not to watch the draft the next day.

"I expected to go. I was disappointed that I didn't," Snyder said. "It was a let-down. Three or four (punters) were taken, and I felt I should have been one of them."

Snyder said New England called him in the seventh round, and they said if he was not drafted, he could go to the Patriots and try out. Right after that phone call from New England, Phoenix called.

The Cardinals wanted to give Snyder a chance to play for them. San Diego also contacted Snyder to try out.

Snyder said he made the decision to sign with Phoenix.

After the draft, Snyder said he started preparing for tryouts.

"It took a while to get into the groove," he said. "It was a let-down (to not actually have been drafted). I would run and lift three times a week."

Snyder left for Phoenix after school ended in May. All the players for the Cardinals reported to camp on June 1 in Flagstaff, Ariz. Snyder said he went to Arizona early to get accustomed to the altitude, facilities and surroundings.

"We went to a couple of mini camps and then to summer school. We wore shorts and ran through the offense and defense to break in the new guys," Snyder said.

"I had a really good camp. I had to learn directional punting."

"As the season gets started, some punters could perform poorly or suffer injuries, so you never know when the call will come."

SEAN SNYDER
FORMER K-STATE PUNTER

Snyder said he worked on the finesse part of his punts, including the hang time to keep the ball in the air longer.

In college, his hang time was 4.4 to 4.6 seconds. Now, he is averaging 4.8 to 5.1 seconds, even though he said he lost some distance.

The Cardinals' first preseason game came against the Los Angeles Rams. Snyder said he punted once, but it was not for distance.

"It was a (intentional) pouch punt, and it doesn't do much for your average," Snyder said.

The second game found Phoenix facing the Chicago Bears. Snyder said his first punt was another pouch punt, and it was not a great punt, but his second punt was 52 yards, and the third kick was 50 yards.

Snyder said he felt good about his effort in Chicago, but when he returned to Phoenix, he received some bad news following the Bears game. Snyder said he received a phone call that he had been cut from the team.

"I was really disappointed. They (Phoenix) said they wanted to give Rich (Camerillo) extra work in the preseason," Snyder said. Camerillo is in his fifth season with the Cardinals.

Disappointed, but not discouraged, Snyder returned to Manhattan and began training to try to get another chance to break into the NFL. Snyder said his agent, Herald Lewis, has tried to get him back into the NFL.

"He does a great job. He has spoken to a lot of teams," Snyder said. "He has given each NFL team a tape on me."

Presently, Snyder is practicing with K-State punter Chad Romano.

"We punt everyday for two hours, and then I punt by myself for two hours," said Snyder, as he continues to lift, run and practice.

He said he still hopes to get that phone call.

"I could leave tomorrow — I don't know. I have to work out and stay in shape," Snyder said.

"As the season gets started, some punters could perform poorly or suffer injuries, so you never know when the call will come."

Until that moment, Snyder remains a student at K-State. He is working on a degree in Arts and Sciences. Snyder hopes to complete school in May 1994, if the NFL doesn't take him away before that time.

Snyder said he will continue to try to break into the NFL.

"As a punter, you keep trying. I will allow myself four years," Snyder said. "I'm going to keep with it and see what happens. I established myself in camp, and my name is known.

"Now, all I do is sit and wait for the call."

THE MATCH-UP

A position-by-position look at K-State's game Saturday against Colorado. The Collegian sports staff compiled the information to pick the team with the advantage at each position.

DEFENSE

| POSITION | | K-State | Colorado |
|---|---|---|---|
| LINE | Colorado's rushing defense ranks second in the Big Eight, holding opponents to 134 yards on the ground. The Buffaloes use three linemen. Nose tackle Shannon Clavelle was Freshman of the Year last year on defense. K-State fell to seventh in the league in rushing defense as it allowed opposing teams to rack up 199.7 rushing yards a game. | ☐ | ☑ |
| LINEBACKERS | K-State stayed in fourth place in the league and now averages 353.7 yards a game defensively. The Cats have given up 20 points a game, ranking fourth in the league. Despite holding Oklahoma's offense to 10 points, Colorado has the worst total defense in the league, as the team gives up 413 yards a contest and has given up the second highest total of touchdowns with 19. | ☑ | ☐ |
| SECONDARY | K-State has the third-best secondary in the Big Eight and ranks 19th in the nation in passing defense. The Cats have given up just 924 yards of passing yardage through six games and are tied for second in the league with seven. Colorado has allowed opponents to throw 11 touchdowns against them, and they give up 211 yards passing per game. Cornerback Chris Hudson has played off and on because of blown coverages. He was named to the all-Big Eight first team last year. | ☑ | ☐ |

OFFENSE

| POSITION | | K-State | Colorado |
|---|---|---|---|
| LINE | Colorado is first in the Big Eight and fifth in the nation in total offense, as the team averages 510.17 yards a game and has the second-best scoring offense in the league with a 34-point average. Four starters from last year return to the line. K-State is third in the Big Eight in total offense with 391 yards per contest and is fourth in scoring offense with 29.3 yards a game. Against Nebraska, who has the best defense in the league, the Cats produced 565 yards of total offense. | ☐ | ☑ |
| WIDE RECEIVERS/ TIGHT ENDS | K-State is first in the Big Eight in passing with 258.2 yards a game and has the third-most receiving touchdowns with seven. Andre Coleman, Mitch Running and Kevin Lockett rank in the top six in both receptions a game and receiving yards a game. Colorado is third in the conference in passing offense with 248.5 yards a game and is led by Charles Johnson, who is first in both receptions per game and receiving yards per game, but is injured. | ☑ | ☐ |
| RUNNING BACKS | The Buffaloes rank second in the Big Eight and 10th nationally in rushing offense with 261 yards a game. Tailback Lamont Warren is the top rusher in the league with 108.5 yards a game, while teammate Rashaan Salaam is third in the league with 79.8 yards per contest. The Cats are sixth in rushing offense with 133.2 yards a game. J.J. Smith is second in the conference in rushing with 88.5 yards a game. | ☐ | ☑ |
| QUARTERBACKS | Kordell Stewart of Colorado is leading the Big Eight in total offense with 266.67 yards a game and is third in passing efficiency, as he has two interceptions in 165 attempts. Chad May is second the conference in total offense with 242 yards per game and is fourth in passing efficiency with four interceptions in 195 attempts. May has thrown more yards (1,33) than Stewart (1,330), but Stewart has rushed for 270 yards to May's minus 81 yards. | ☑ | ☐ |

SPECIAL TEAMS

| POSITION | | K-State | Colorado |
|---|---|---|---|
| PUNTING | Chad Romano is fifth in punting in the league with an average of 40.3 yards a kick, and K-State has the third-best net punting in the league with 39.1 yards a punt. Colorado has kicker Mitch Berger is sixth in punting with a 38.8-yard average and is fourth in net punting with 39 yards. | ☑ | ☐ |
| PLACE KICKING | Berger and K-State's Tate Wright are tied for third in the conference in field goals with 1.17 per game, and both have made seven field goals in 10 attempts. The altitude hurts Berger, who has done half of his punting in Boulder and could have inflated his statistics. | ☑ | ☐ |
| RETURN | Andre Coleman is still in first place in punt returns (12.33 yards a game), kickoff returns (30.1 yards a game) and all-purpose yards (158 yards a game). As a team, the Cats are first in the league. Charles Johnson is third in punt return and all-purpose yards in the league, but the Buffaloes are last in conference in kickoff return. | ☑ | ☐ |

INTANGIBLES

| AREA | | K-State | Colorado |
|---|---|---|---|
| MOMENTUM | Colorado shut down Oklahoma's offense in the 27-10 victory in Norman, Okla., and are 2-0 in the Big Eight. The Buffaloes became the first team to win three straight games at Norman. K-State lost its first game of the year last weekend after winning five consecutive games to start the season. The Cats return home to build on their 10-game home winning streak, but the last team to beat K-State in Manhattan was Colorado. | ☐ | ☑ |
| COACHING | Bill McCartney of Colorado is 78-53-4 in his 12th year at Colorado. The Buffaloes are 27-1-1 in the past five years against Big Eight teams. Bill Snyder is 23-27 in his fifth season as coach at K-State, but is 0-4 against Colorado. He is the fourth winningest coach in K-State's history and has the sixth-best winning percentage in the school's history. | ☐ | ☑ |
| THE EDGE | If May and his receivers can connect with each other like they did at Lincoln, Neb., the Buffaloes will be in trouble. If Warren and Salaam run rampant like the Cornhuskers did last week against K-State, the Cats will struggle. The game should be an offensive showcase. Colorado is trying to maintain its perfect mark in the Big Eight, after losing two non-conference games. The Buffaloes will be playing a ranked team for the fourth time. | ☐ | ☑ |

MISSOURI AT NEBRASKA

FAST FACTS: 1 p.m., Memorial Stadium, Lincoln, Neb.
RECORDS: Missouri (2-3-1/1-1) and Nebraska (6-0/2-0)
ABOUT THE TIGERS:

Missouri is coming off a strong performance after downing Oklahoma State, 42-9.

The Tigers have the second-ranked passing attack in the Big Eight with 249.3 yards per outing. The Huskers have the top running game in the conference, possibly making the game a offensive highlight show.

Last season, Missouri quarterback Jeff Handy threw for 424 yards against Huskers, but Nebraska still defeated the Tigers 34-24. Husker quarterback Tommie Frazier rushed for 158 yards against K-State — a career high.

Wide receiver Kenny Holly tallied 39 yards off five passes last Saturday to move his career catch total to 125. He now needs four receptions to pass Victor Bailey's school record.

ABOUT THE CORNHUSKERS:

No. 6-ranked Nebraska struggled against K-State last week, but still won 45-28. Linebacker Trev Alberts established a career school record of 24-1/2 sacks when he grounded K-State quarterback Chad May. The previous mark of 24 sacks was held by Jim Skow (1983-85) and Danny Noonan (1984-86). Nebraska leads the Big Eight in rushing offense with 296.7 yards per game and the best total defense in the league, as the team gives up 333 yards a game.

Nebraska Coach Tom Osborne is the winningest active coach with a mark of 201-46-3. He is the dean of coaches in the Big Eight in his 21st season. Nebraska has the top-ranked defense in the Big Eight, giving up an average of 333 yards a game. The Tigers are seventh in the conference, giving up over 400 yards per contest.

KANSAS AT OKLAHOMA

FAST FACTS: 1:30 p.m., Memorial Stadium, Norman, Okla.
RECORDS: Kansas (3-4/1-1), Oklahoma (5-1/1-1)
ABOUT THE JAYHAWKS:

Kansas, 3-4, is coming off a 35-20 win against the Iowa State Cyclones. Jayhawk tailback June Henley rushed for 237 yards, the third highest single-game total in Jayhawk history.

Henley had touchdown runs of 7, 20 and 77 yards and racked up 148 yards in the fourth quarter alone.

Last season, Kansas defeated the Sooners for the first time in eight years with a 27-10 victory at Lawrence. Oklahoma's 10 points were the fewest it had scored against Kansas since 1975.

The Oklahoma-Kansas series of 90 consecutive games is the longest uninterrupted series in Division I-A. The Sooners lead the series 60-24-6.

ABOUT THE SOONERS:

No. 9 Oklahoma suffered its first setback of the season in a 27-10 loss to No. 20 Colorado. Quarterback Cale Gundy was knocked unconscious in the fourth quarter. He threw for 177 yards before exiting the contest.

Oklahoma ranks third in the nation in turnover margin, but has six give-aways in as many games.

Sophomore Darrius Johnson is second in the Big Eight in punt returns with an average of 9.14 yards a return.

Both KU and OU have top-notch kicking games this season. Kansas's Dan Eichloff tops the Big Eight in field goals with 1.57 per outing. Oklahoma's Scott Blanton rans third in the league in scoring with eight points per game.

OSU AT IOWA STATE

FAST FACTS: 1 p.m., Cyclone Stadium-Jack Trice Field, Ames, Iowa.
RECORDS: Oklahoma State (3-3/0-2), Iowa State (1-5/0-2).
ABOUT THE COWBOYS:

Oklahoma State was blown out last week by Missouri 42-9. All of the Cowboys' points came in the first half.

In last year's contest, Cyclone running back James McMillon returned a punt 91 yards for a touchdown. The Cowboys came back with 17 unanswered points to build a 17-7 lead. Oklahoma State added 10 more in the second half to extend its lead to 27-7. However, Iowa State fought back, despite the loss of quarterback Bob Utter, with two more touchdowns to close the gap to 27-21 at the end of the game. Oklahoma State kicker Lawson Vaught has hit all seven of his field goal attempts this season.

ABOUT THE CYCLONES:

Iowa State lost to Kansas 35-20 last weekend in Lawrence. The Cyclone's used both Todd Doxzon and Bob Utter at quarterback for the first time since a 49-21 loss to Rice on Sept. 25. The Cyclones are seventh in total offense in the Big Eight with 337.67 yards a game and have the sixth-best defense in the conference with 383 yards a game.

They won their first game against Northern Illinois 54-10, but have lost their past five games. Four of those losses have been by 14 points or more.

WRAP-UP

K-State and Oklahoma tied for third place in Big 8 race

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — It has been 60 years since a Big Eight team went into Norman, Okla., three straight times and came out with three straight wins.

No. 16 Colorado did it last Saturday, coming out with a convincing 27-10 victory over the Oklahoma Sooners that makes the run for the oranges look very interesting.

The Buffs and No. 5 Nebraska are tied at the top with 2-0 records. Oklahoma fell to 1-1 and tied with — believe it — K-State.

In other Big Eight games, Missouri ran past Oklahoma State 42-9, and Kansas held on to stop Iowa State 35-20.

Nebraska was the last team to defeat Oklahoma three straight games on the Sooners' home field, doing it in 1932, '34 and '36.

When Sooners quarterback Cale Gundy was knocked unconscious early in the fourth quarter and had to leave with a concussion, Oklahoma (5-1 overall) coach Gary Gibbs said he knew they were in trouble.

"Once he went down, our hopes basically went down with him," Gibbs said.

Gundy had scrambled 28 yards to near midfield with score 20-10, but the Sooners could do nothing after that on offense.

Gundy was taken to a hospital, but Gibbs said doctors told him the quarterback would be fine.

The Buffaloes (4-2 overall) outgained Oklahoma 314-92 on the ground.

Plagued by inconsistency all season, Missouri (2-3-1 overall, 1-1 Big Eight) vented its frustration against Oklahoma State (3-3, 0-2) on homecoming. "We've been kicking and fighting, and nobody has let us out," Coach Bob Stull said.

The Tigers set up their first score with a 42-yard pass from Kyle Pooler to Greg Smith out of punt formation on fourth-and-one at the Tigers 36.

Michael Washington, who later suffered a season-ending knee injury, scored on a 33-yard run, and Jeff Handy threw a 26-yard touchdown pass to Kenny Holly for a 21-3 Missouri lead.

BIG EIGHT STANDINGS

| | CONFERENCE | | | OVERALL | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | W | L | PCT. | W | L | PCT. |
| Nebraska | 2 | 0 | 1.000 | 6 | 0 | 1.000 |
| Colorado | 2 | 0 | 1.000 | 4 | 2 | .667 |

| Okla. St. | 0 | 2 | .000 | 3 | 3 | .500 |
| Iowa State | 0 | 2 | .000 | 1 | 5 | .167 |

Oklahoma State coach Pat Jones said it was hard to fight back against the Tigers.

"We dug ourselves into a big hole which, in all honesty, I don't know if we're equipped maturity-wise or talent-wise at this particular point to overcome," Jones said.

Missouri had 212 yards rushing for its best effort against a Division I foe since it gained 241 yards against K-State in 1989.

"We're like an old Chevy, just having trouble getting started," said Tiger Steve Martin, who forced a fumble and recovered it to set up a Handy to Mike Jadlot touchdown pass that made it 28-3.

June Henley right, June Henley left, June Henley up the middle. It was enough for Kansas to send a dispirited Iowa State team back to Ames with a fifth-straight loss.

Henley rushed for 237 yards, a school record for a freshman. His 77-yard touchdown run in the fourth quarter probably was the clincher against an Iowa State team that just wouldn't quit on a dreary, rainy day in Lawrence.

The 77-yard run, Henley's third touchdown of the day, was a big part of the 148 yards he gained in the fourth quarter to set another school record for Kansas (3-4, 1-1).

Jayhawk coach Glen Mason said Henley ran the ball well for them.

"It was a great day for him, especially when we've had trouble getting 237 inches on offense," Mason said.

Iowa State coach Jim Walden said he doesn't know what to make of his Cyclones (1-5, 0-2).

"This is the hardest team to coach that I've ever had," he said.

"It's just so frustrating. It's just so damn painful."

Colorado sets example for K-State to follow

BRIAN ANDERSON

K-State's football team missed being tied for the Big Eight lead when they lost to Nebraska 45-28 last Saturday in Lincoln, Neb.

Certainly, the program has come a long way from being the pushovers of the conference, and now they have earned the respect of everyone in the Midwest.

They are following the same footsteps of another Big Eight school who was at the bottom of the conference's cellar with K-State.

The school, just like Wildcats, brought in a new coach to change the program.

It was 1982 — the year Colorado hired Coach Bill McCartney and began its winning ways with the Big Eight and the rest of the country.

Before McCartney was hired, Colorado had not been ranked since 1978 and had three-consecutive losing seasons. Before Snyder filled the position, K-State had only one winning season since 1970.

Snyder is following a similar path McCartney did early in his career at Colorado.

McCartney's first team went 2-8-1 and followed records of 4-7 in 1983. In 1984, the Buffaloes went 1-10, even though Colorado had four losses by seven points or less.

Snyder's first team went 1-10 in 1989, but was followed by a 5-6 record in 1990.

In McCartney's fourth year, Colorado went 7-5, the most wins at the time since 1978, and 4-3 to place third in the Big Eight.

McCartney was named Big Eight Coach of the Year.

In Snyder's three years, K-State went 7-4 overall, the most wins since 1954, and 4-3 to place fourth in the conference. Snyder was named Big Eight Coach of the Year in 1991.

After both coaches were honored, they fell just a little bit. K-State went 5-6 last year, and Colorado went 6-6, even though they finished second place in the league.

Colorado returned in 1987 with a 7-4 record in McCartney's sixth year in Boulder. K-State might equal or surpass the 7-4 of 1991 this year, as it has jumped to a 5-0 start.

What has followed for the Buffaloes?

47-6-3 record overall, 29-4-1 in the Big Eight and a 25-consecutive winning streak against conference foes.

They have had three consecutive league championships and have been ranked No. 1 twice in the past five years, including the national championship, when they beat Notre Dame 10-9 in the 1991 Orange Bowl.

Colorado has had 23 players drafted into the National Football League — 16 of them are still playing; five are all-Americans, and one is a Rhodes scholar.

Already, Snyder has had 12 players go into the NFL — but only Elijah Alexander still plays — and one all-American in former punter Sean Snyder.

McCartney said Snyder has done a great job since taking the K-State job.

"Kansas State has vastly improved," McCartney said.

"I think Bill Snyder deserves all the credit that you can possibly give him.

"To have them playing as competitively as they are right now, in the time that he has been there, is a tremendous accomplishment."

A win over Colorado might be the one that puts K-State and Bill Snyder at the top of the Big Eight.

Whatever the outcome on Saturday, K-State will progress and will reach the same level as the Nebraskas and Colorados of the Big Eight.

Colorado's offensive line strives for consistency

R. MAX HARRIS
The Buffalo Sport News

R. Max Harris is a sports writer for the Buffalo Sport News at the University of Colorado in Boulder, Colo.

Protecting Kordell Stewart was Coach Bill McCartney's top concern heading into the 1993 football season. After three games, and despite some setbacks at the guard position, the Buffaloes' offensive line is among the most reliable units on the team.

Last season, Colorado gave up 39 sacks for 304 lost yards, and Stewart broke his wrist and severely sprained his foot under the assault. He played through the wrist injury (with a cast that he still wears), but the foot sprain took away his elusiveness, adding to the sack totals later in the season.

Heading into the Buffaloes' Oct. 23 meeting with the No. 25 K-State Wildcats, Stewart has been sacked just three times officially, and the Colorado quarterbacks have only been sacked a combined five times.

Credit starters Tony Berti (left tackle), Heath Irwin (left guard), Bryan Stoltenberg (center), Chad Hammond (right guard) and Derek West (right tackle) with the hard work and solid play to protect the passers in 1993.

"I credit a strong running game with the ability to keep the defense off-balance a little bit," McCartney said. "Also, Kordell has gotten rid of the football when we haven't protected him well, and that's been a key ingredient."

There's little doubt that a running game that is averaging 158 yards more than last year (261 yards per game compared to 103) keeps the defense honest.

West said they try to keep the defenses from making any big plays.

"Once we establish the run, they can't just pin their back and come after us," West said after the Texas game earlier in the season.

Stewart's mobility has been a key ingredient to his own self-preservation. Stewart was recruited to run the option, and he became the one-back quarterback because he had the arm strength and the stature to win the job.

He couldn't run well last year on his sprained foot, but he has done well this year, especially against Baylor, when he rushed six times for 39 yards and a touchdown, and last week against Oklahoma, when he ran for 58 yards on six carries.

McCartney and offensive coordinator Elliot Uzelac have installed sets where Stewart rolls with a moving pocket. McCartney said the sets keep the defenses off-guard.

"I think it all fits. If you keep Kordell on the move from time to time, that keeps them (the defense) from always anticipating where you're going to be," McCartney said. "They'll blow you up at the pass if they know you're going to be there, just like the cowboys and Indians."

Colorado's offensive line could have run for cover when two-year starting guard Clint Moore unexpectedly switched to defense, handing the starting job to true sophomore Irwin and both backup spots to still rehabilitating (from a knee injury) Craig Anderson, but instead, it has simply run over the opponents.

Stewart's craftiness in the pocket has been great, but so has his front five.

Stewart said he knows where to send his thank-you notes if his protection continues to hold up.

"It's having faith in my offensive line, which I do have," Stewart said. "They work hard every day, and I respect them for going out and doing the things they do in practice.

"Our tackles are doing a good job. Our guards. Everybody."

Oklahoma's Gundy recovering after concussion from Saturday

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Oklahoma quarterback Cale Gundy was released from a hospital Sunday after being held overnight with a concussion.

Gundy was knocked unconscious in the fourth quarter of Saturday's 27-10 loss to Colorado. He did not regain consciousness for about 10 minutes and was taken from the field on a stretcher.

He spent Saturday night at Baptist Hospital in Oklahoma City. Sports information director Mike Prusinski said Sunday that Gundy was doing much better.

He said Gundy would not practice Monday, but should go through a light workout Tuesday, barring any complications.

Prusinski said Gundy would be evaluated on a day-to-day basis to see if he will play Saturday against Kansas.

Gundy is a four-year starter and is the Sooners' only experienced quarterback. His backup is redshirt freshman Terrence Brown, who has only thrown five passes this season, all of them against Colorado.

K-State has 5-1 record after loss

mistakes and expect to beat a team like Nebraska."

K-State established a 47-yard drive on its last chance at a score, but on fourth and goal, Smith was stopped at the two-yard line on an option play, and the Cornhuskers took over a loss of downs.

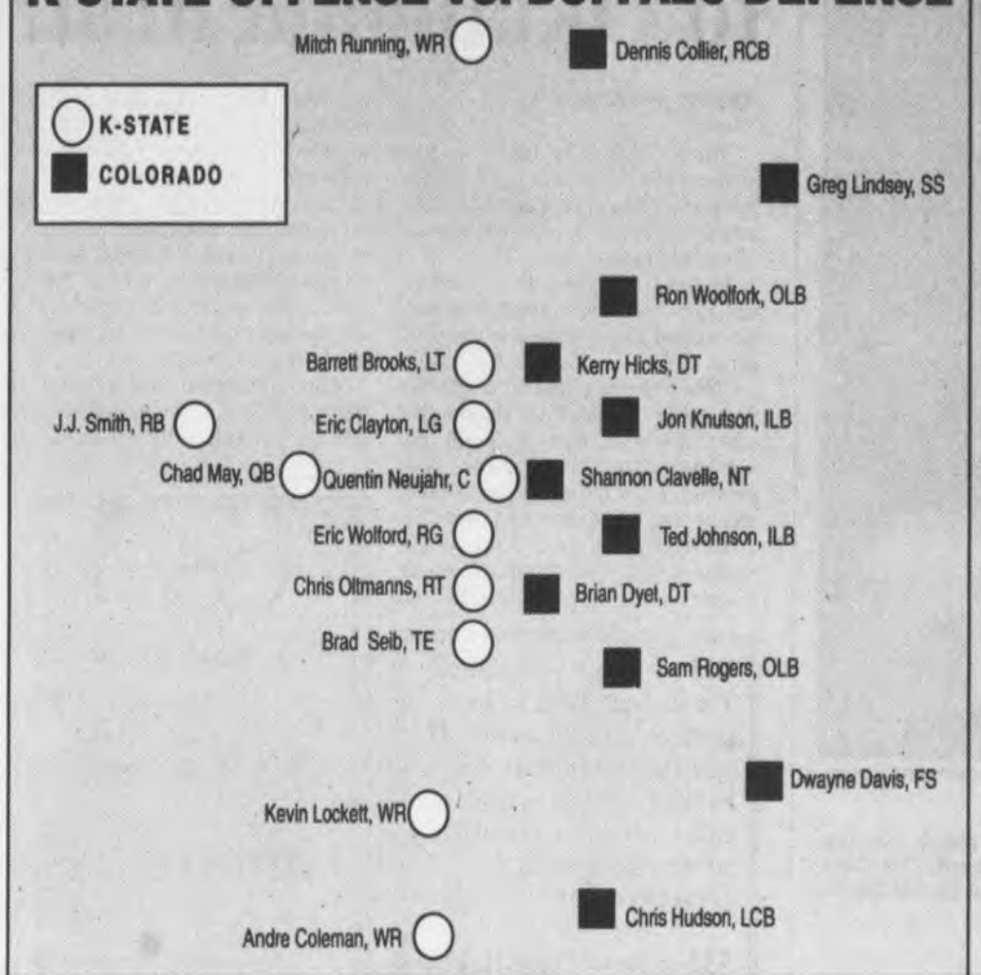
"I wanted to get the touchdown first," Snyder said. "I had in the back of my mind how we were going to play this game in regard to a win or a tie. I ran the option play on the goal line, and I should have run it a little differently.

"Outside of when we scored, we had two opportunities to score, and we fell flat on our faces. The last drive of the ballgame, I made a terrible mistake in regard to play selection."

The other opportunity for K-State to score came late in the first half. Coleman set up the Cats on a 47-yard pass from May to put K-State on the three-yard line for first and goal.

After Smith failed to reach the end zone, the Cats resorted to a little trickery.

On second and goal, May pitched to Smith, who rolled right and attempted to pass back to May in the left corner of the end zone. His pass floated, and Tyrone Williams was there for the interception with 54 seconds left in the first half.



"I was surprised he threw the ball," Williams said. "I was already on my way over there."

The Corhhuskers utilized the remaining seconds, driving to K-State's 32-yard line and setting up a career-long, 48-yard field goal from Byron Bennett to take a 31-14 lead at the half.

"That was a big blow for us," Coleman said. "We definitely needed that touchdown to go into the half. That would have given us excellent momentum. That was a backbreaker."

Volleyball team loses to Oklahoma in straight sets

JEREMY CRABTREE

The K-State volleyball team lost to the Oklahoma Sooners 3-0 in Norman, Okla., on Saturday. The loss dropped the team's record to 7-12 on the season.

In the first game, the Wildcats lost 15-9, then the Sooners captured the second game 15-1 and the final game 15-7.

"We had our chances to win the first game," Coach Patti Hagemeyer said. "It was 10-9 at one point, but we committed some errors that prevented us from taking control and getting those next six points."

Leading the Cats against the Sooners was sophomore Suzanne Hagge. She totaled nine kills and nine digs for the match to lead the team in both categories. Freshman middle-blocker Kate DeClerk also added seven kills for the Cats.

"I'm pleased with what we are trying to do with this line-up," Hagemeyer said. "We are working on playing tough and competitively. I want our attitude to become that we are playing to win, as opposed to playing not to lose."

Gloria Holcomb had 12 kills for the match, but Gretchen Anderson led the Sooners with 16 kills. For the match OU had three players who had more than 10 kills.

"Oklahoma appears to have raised its level of play a notch since beating Nebraska," Hagemeyer said. "With that win came the reality that they could be playing for the regular season Big Eight Championships, and they are playing like a championship is at stake."

The Cats will play Missouri Wednesday at Ahearn Field House.

K-State's golf teams face tough course in Wichita

JEN MESSELT
MELISSA HALL
Collegian

Last week, the K-State women's golf team finished fourth out of 12 teams at the Shocker Fall Classic at Terradyne Country Club in Wichita, while the K-State men's team finished a disappointing seventh in the Kansas Invitational at the Alvarmar Golf Course in Lawrence.

K-State's top four women tallied scores of 347, 333 and 331 for a three-day total of 1,011 for Oct. 11-12, and the men squad finished the two-day tournament on a score of 924 on Oct. 12.

Texas Tech won the Shocker tournament and set two tournament records in the process.

The team compiled a total of 941 strokes, breaking the previous record of 942 strokes set by the University of Kansas in 1988.

Texas Tech set a second tournament record on the third day with a score of 305. Kansas had the single-day record of 308 in 1988.

The tournament was won by Stacey Kolb of Texas Tech, recording rounds of 77, 75 and 74 for a total of 226.

K-State's top performer in the Shocker Fall Classic was third-place finisher Jacque Wright. Her stroke totals of 76, 77 and 80 totaled 233 for the tournament.

Wright is averaging rounds of 79 and is on pace to have the best single season in K-State history.

Coach Jim Brenneman said Wright, a junior, is on track to capture a tournament.

"Jacque played well in her first two rounds," Brenneman said. "It was a good tourney for her, and she is in contention to win a tournament."

Capturing 21st place was senior Sarahayn Morehead, who had scores of 93, 80 and 83 to total 256.

Denise Pottle secured a 22nd-place finish with rounds of 89, 88 and 80 to total 257.

Finishing in the 37th slot out of 61 competitors was Donita Gleason, who tallied an 89, 88 and 88 to finish with 265.

Dallas Cox placed 48th with 95, 95 and 90 for a total of 280 to complete the tournament.

Brenneman said Terradyne was a hard course, and penalty strokes played a significant role.

"Terradyne was a difficult place to play," Brenneman said. "It has narrow fairways, and the grass is five feet tall.

Scores are typically 900 for a three-day tournament, but with narrow fairways and deep roughs we had a lot of penalty strokes assessed against us."

At the same time the women's team were playing, the men were playing in the Kansas Invitational.

Senior Chad Judd said the squad didn't perform like they should have in the invitational.

"We weren't playing up to our potential," Judd said. "There are a lot of district schools here we needed to beat to make it to the NCAA (Tournament)."

Judd finished the tournament with a 239 after shooting 78, 87 and 74.

Placing seventh was a bit of a shock to the team after finishing second in the same tournament last year.

"We needed to shoot well today," Jason Losch, sophomore, said. "We were really disappointed after we did so well in the past."

Coach Mark Elliott said the squad hasn't shown the continuity that he would have liked to see.

"We didn't play well either day," he said, "We have done well in our regional tournaments, but we haven't been as consistent as I thought we would."

One K-State player did fare well. This tournament was the first for sophomore Max Pinney.

"This was my first tournament, so I didn't really know what to expect," Pinney said. "I felt comfortable at this course because I have played here a lot."

Pinney scored a 73 and 76 the first day and 77 in the last round to lead the Cats with a total of 226.

K-State did outscore other teams in the Big Eight. The Wildcats beat both Nebraska and Missouri.

"As bad as we are playing, we are beating the teams that we have to," senior Sean Robertson said. "We beat two Big Eight teams and lost to two."

Robertson shot a three-day total of 239. Scott Hovis shot a 231, and Jason Losch shot a 238.

Kansas came in second with an 880, and Virginia Tech came back from third place to win the tournament with a two-day score of 877.

Oral Roberts was leading the tournament with 586 after Monday's rounds but quickly fell to finish third.

The K-State men will be traveling to Colorado State next week for their last tournament this fall.

"I will be taking Max Pinney and some guys who haven't played yet," Elliott said.

Snyder, Osborne compare teams before facing off

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Two 5-0 Big Eight coaches got together before game time Saturday and wondered how good their teams really were.

Not much was decided by the game.

Sure, Nebraska beat K-State. But the Wildcats were within a field goal at 31-28 with seven minutes to play.

Is there a Big Eight observer out there who can remember the last time Tom Osborne would be wiping his brow and saying "Whew" after beating K-State in Lincoln?

"I'm glad to get out of that one, obviously," Osborne said. "Somewhere down the line, they're going to beat somebody (who is) pretty good."

Osborne and K-State coach Bill Snyder talked it over before the kickoff.

"I told coach Snyder that it's unusual to be 5-0 and not know how good a team you are, and he said he was the same way," Osborne said.

"I tell you, either they're a good team or we're in big trouble."

Wildcat quarterback Chad May had a brilliant passing day, but K-State (5-1 overall, 1-1 in the Big Eight) eventually fell to No. 5 Nebraska (6-0, 2-0) 45-28.

In other Big Eight games, No. 16 Colorado pinned a convincing 27-10 defeat on No. 17 Oklahoma in Norman, Missouri ran past Oklahoma State 42-9, and Kansas held on to stop Iowa State 35-20.

In Lincoln, May hit 30 of 51 passes for 489 yards and two touchdowns to break the Big Eight record of 480 yards set by Mike Norseth of Kansas against Vanderbilt in 1985 and tied by Jeff Handy of Missouri last year against Oklahoma State. It also broke Lynn Dickey's K-State record of 439 yards.

It also was the most against a Nebraska defense, leaving Huskers defensive coordinator Charlie McBride feeling a little defensive.

"We won the game, didn't we?," McBride said. "OK, then, whatever yards they got, it didn't count."

It was most frustrating for K-State, whose players believed in their hearts that they could beat the Huskers.

"It's really frustrating," running back J.J. Smith, said. "Everybody said 'Wait until they get to Nebraska.'"

"Now, they're going to say, 'I told you so.' But we should have beaten them.'"

Oklahoma quarterback Cale Gundy was knocked unconscious and taken to a hospital with a concussion after a 28-yard run to midfield with the score 28-10, and the Sooners could do nothing after that against Colorado.

"Once he went down, our hopes basically went down with him," Coach Gary Gibbs said.

Gundy was taken to a hospital, but Gibbs said doctors told him the quarterback would be all right.

The Buffs (4-2, 2-0) outgained Oklahoma (5-1, 1-1) 314-92 on the ground.

"I thought we won the front on both sides of the ball and that's why we won the game," Colorado coach Bill McCartney said. "Our defense has taken a lot of shots, but that was a good defense out there today."

Plagued by inconsistency all season, Missouri (2-3-1, 1-1) vented its frustration against Oklahoma State (3-3, 0-2) on homecoming. "We've been kicking and fighting, and nobody has let us out," Coach Bob Stull said.

The Tigers set up their first score with a 42-yard pass from Kyle Pooler to Greg Smith out of punt formation on fourth and 1 at the Tigers' 36. Michael Washington, who later suffered a season-ending knee injury, scored on a 33-yard run, and Jeff Handy threw a 26-yard touchdown pass to Kenny Holly for a 21-3 Missouri lead.

"We dug ourselves into a big hole, which, in all honesty, I don't know if we're equipped maturity-wise or talent-wise at this particular point to overcome," Cowboys coach Pat Jones said.

Campbell strives for best

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

The strength of an athlete can be found on the field, in the weight room or any numerous places. For former K-State football player Russ Campbell, he finds his strength from his heart.

"You have to work as hard as you can to get that strength," Campbell said. "You must be a preserver and build character."

Coach Bill Snyder said Campbell is emphatic about working hard to achieve his goals.

"Russ is a wonderful young man," Snyder said. "He has an extremely hard work ethic. He works hard enough to put himself into the NFL."

Campbell played tight end for K-State and, after his senior year, he was drafted into the NFL by the Pittsburgh Steelers. He stayed with the Steelers for one season.

Campbell, who recently married, said he returned to Manhattan with his wife, Melody, to train at K-State.

"I want to give football another try and give it my best shot," Campbell said, "I hope to get into a training camp this year and be more focused."

Campbell said his drive to be the best comes from his close relationship with the Lord.

"I don't want to live my life to please others," he said. "I want to live my life to please God. The Lord taught me many things while I was at K-State. He took me through the ups and downs of football.

"The Lord has been such a big part of my life."

Campbell said he takes pride in what ever challenge that comes before him, whether it is his education, marriage or football career.

"You have to have pride in yourself for who you are as a person and use that pride to strengthen you, not to put other people down," he said. "The things that the Lord has taught me have given me encouragement to keep striving to be the best.

"I feel God has a plan for a person, and playing football is what I should do," he said. "The game takes a lot of physical strength, but you have to have the emotional strength too."

Campbell has been through hard times in his football career. Early in his sophomore year, he injured his knee and required surgery that put him out for four months.

Without the Lord, Campbell said he thought he had it all.

"I thought I had everything. All I needed in life was a good relationship and the ability to play ball," he said. "When that all was taken away, that's when I realized I was leaving an important person out of my life: the Lord."

Though Campbell has other options after football, he said a player can't go into training camp with that idea.

"Football has to mean everything to you to be successful in the NFL," Campbell said, "If another guy without any other options wants the position more, they are likely to get it. You have to want it extremely bad."

Along with learning many things at K-State, Campbell said he has a lot of memories.

"I'm really proud of our senior year and the 7-4 record," he said. "It was great that we knocked off KU that year. Also, the people I have been able to help and touch and those who have helped me are special. Most of all, meeting my wife, Melody."

Riot defendants not guilty

BRIEFLY

- Damian Williams faces 8 years in prison
- Henry Watson served 17 months

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — With a final innocent verdict, the Reginald Denny beating trial ended Wednesday, leaving a scarred city to face a legacy of racial hostility and doubt about equal justice for blacks and whites.

Spectators gasped as the court clerk read the verdict by a multiracial jury, whose tortured deliberations left some jurors ill and prolonged the suspense for days.

A second defendant, Henry Watson, walked free after 17 months because the jury deadlocked on the remaining charge against him, and a mistrial was declared.

"It's a nice day out today, huh?" Watson said as he left jail.

Defendant Damian "Football" Williams clasped his hand to his face and smiled as his acquittal was read.

Williams, 20, and Watson, 29, were accused of beating Denny, who is white, and several others when violence broke out April 29, 1992, at the infamous intersection of Florence and Normandie in South Central Los Angeles.

Denny was dragged from his truck and beaten nearly to death while a TV camera in a helicopter recorded it.

The beating was broadcast live and seen around the world.

The rioting was set off by the acquittal on state charges of four white police officers accused of beating black motorist Rodney King during a traffic stop in March 1991. Two officers later were convicted of federal civil-rights violations and are in prison.

Prosecutors said Williams was the man on the videotape throwing a brick at Denny's head and dancing in glee. But the defense challenged the identification and a prosecution claim that the tape wasn't proof the defendants intended to kill Denny.

Live grenade found at lake

J.R. PRATHER

An unexploded grenade was found Wednesday in the Rocky Ford fishing area near Tuttle Creek Reservoir and later detonated near the shop where it was found.

Larry Leupold, owner of the River Rat Bait and Tackle Shop, said a Manhattan resident was fishing and found a 40-millimeter grenade on the ground. The Riley County Police Department was called at about 12:35 p.m.

The grenade was military ordinance, so the Explosive Ordinance Detachment from Fort Riley was called in. The EOD sandbagged the explosive and detonated it near Leupold's shop.

Leupold said the resident, Wayne Snap, picked up the grenade because he didn't want any kids to find it.

"It could have been serious if someone else had found it," Leupold said. "Especially kids. If some kid had reached down to pick it up, they could have blown their arm off or been killed."

RCPD Capt. Steve French said the grenade was about an inch and a half in diameter and was designed to be shot from a grenade launcher.

The grenade, like all explosives, had a potential to be dangerous, but it was not designed to detonate on contact, he said.

At about 3 p.m., both north- and south-bound traffic on Tuttle Creek Boulevard was stopped briefly by the Riley County Police Department to ensure public safety. Cars were halted by two officers just short of the turn-off to the Tuttle Creek tube area. The grenade was detonated without warning.

The grenade was detonated about 10 feet from the River Rat.

Senate approves 4 minors programs

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

With approval from Faculty Senate, four departments will have minors programs in the spring 1994.

The Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Committee met Tuesday and voted to approve chemistry, speech, dance and theater minors programs, said Steffany Carrel, student representative to Faculty Senate.

Faculty Senate will approve the minors programs in November, Carrel said.

"I feel there shouldn't be a problem," she said.

The minors program has been an issue at K-State since 1969, Carrel said.

"A couple of years ago, it finally got on the agenda and was looked at by Academic Affairs," she said. "This is what students want. We were keeping in the forefront."

At the end of the 1991-92 academic year, Academic Affairs began developing a plan, looking into the feasibility and the need for minors programs, Carrel said.

In fall 1992, the program began to gain speed. Faculty Senate sponsored two open forums during the 1992-93 academic year, and the Academic Affairs Committee developed a proposal for the program. The initial draft was sent to the faculty, and comments and suggestions for changes were made.

Accepted revisions were implemented into the proposed

Finney to give speech at ground breaking

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

After years of planning, the expansion and renovation of Farrell Library will finally begin with ground-breaking ceremonies Friday afternoon.

Gov. Joan Finney will speak during the ceremonies, which will be at 3 p.m. on the west side of Farrell.

"The governor feels that this expansion will be a great benefit for the future of K-State," Mark Sheeks, deputy press secretary for the governor, said.

The state provided $18 million of the $28 million needed to complete the project, Sheeks said. The remaining $10 million came equally from private donations and student fees. Ed Skoog, student body president, said the money from student fees is a vital part of the expansion effort.

"This renovation probably wouldn't have happened without the students putting down the seed money," Skoog said.

The expansion and renovation project, which is scheduled for completion in 1996, features a science library to store science reference materials and a 200-seat, 24-hour study facility, Karen McCulloh, assistant to the dean of the library, said.

"The new addition will almost double the size of the current library," McCulloh said. "We will have enough storage space until the year 2020."

The renovations will also improve access to the stacks, McCulloh said.

"People won't have to duck through doors or walk up ramps any more," she said.

Many students will pay fees for the library expansion and never have the opportunity to use it because it won't be finished by the time they graduate, Skoog said.

"Some one has to make the commitment so that others may benefit," Skoog said. "Besides, many students may not know it, but given the current graduation rates, many will be here to see it completed if they are not careful."

Tutors help Manhattan's students

YES program offers attention, role-models

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

James Pinney was sitting with 10-year-old Ted Williams, intent on helping Williams learn his multiplication tables. As Teddy Williams successfully completed an exercise, Pinney celebrated with him, commending his efforts.

"You just did it! You've got these down!"

Pinney, a sophomore in elementary education, is a part of the Youth Education Service tutoring program, which places K-State students in secondary and elementary classrooms in Manhattan and the surrounding area. The required time commitment is three hours per week, said Kathy Kippes, sophomore in elementary education.

"The tutoring experience is different for everyone," Kippes said. "Some work one-on-one, others help with classroom activities, while others work with small groups."

Kippes is also the student coordinator and a tutor in a first grade classroom at Northview Elementary School in Manhattan.

"Being the coordinator took me deeper into the program," she said. "I now can see things from the administrative point of view."

The community service ethic is a large part of the program, Kippes said, and one that is integrated into the tutors' lives.

"In community service, the rewards are far greater than the work," she said. "My experiences tutoring are not something I will soon forget."

Many of the children in today's school system are in need of attention and a role model, Kippes said.

"So many kids need another role model. This program isn't about simply tutoring the kids. It provides an outlet for the students. Some of the kids live in a very different world. A lot of these kids aren't given a chance, they need to be told that they are OK."

Kippes said before her experience with the program, she was a secondary education major, but working with the younger children inspired a change of heart. She changed her major to elementary education.

"They are enthusiastic about learning," she said of the younger students. "Everything they learn is a new awakening. I can just tell by the look in their eyes when they are excited. I can see the results."

A lifelong involvement and love of children is what Pinney said encouraged him to become a tutor.

"I love kids, and I've always known that I want to be a teacher. I never thought of becoming anything else."

Pinney spends three afternoons a week in Dorothy Claussen's fifth grade classroom at Ogden Elementary school helping with math lessons and also individually tutoring Williams.

"The time goes by really fast," he said. "It is mainly a lot of fun."

"This program isn't about simply tutoring kids. It provides an outlet for the students."

SOPHOMORE IN ELEMENTARY EDUCATION

The tutors' daily involvement with the children places them in a position where they have the opportunity to affect the children's lives. Pinney said many of the children in the classroom look up to him.

This is a role he takes very seriously.

"I see that I have an effect on the kids. Most of the little guys come up and talk to me," he said. "I know that I am a role model, and my awareness of this keeps me paying attention to my behavior."

The children have benefited from Pinney's work in the classroom, Claussen said.

"Jim is a good role model," she said. "He really helps to motivate Teddy. Teddy accomplishes more with the individual attention."

The YES tutoring program is highly regarded and appreciated by school officials.

The program enables the educators to give the individual attention and instruction some children need.

"There isn't a child who can't learn under the right circumstances," Doyle Barnes, principle of Ogden Elementary School, said. "The tutoring program enables the children to work in small groups. When working in a small group, youngsters are more likely to catch the points of learning more quickly."

AGRs exit after being moved to end of line

The Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity withdrew from the basketball ticket campout Wednesday after one member was caught with alcohol.

The fraternity, which had been third in line, was sent to the back of the line in accordance with rules set up by the ticket sales committee.

"We've decided to withdraw," Adam Weigand, president of the fraternity, said.

Dale Silvius, senior in management and marketing and chair of the ticket sales committee, said the committee was simply enforcing the rules.

"The policy is any member that gets caught with alcohol on the first time, the group gets put at the end of the line," Silvius said. "The second time, they are gone."

Silvius said there were 30-40 people in the group.

"It was unfortunate because there was a bunch of people," Silvius said. "One guy got caught.

"We don't want to make an example, but in order to make the rules hold up, we have to enforce them."

Silvius said the history of the campout differs from the way it operates now.

"Before, it's been a drunken brawl," Silvius said. "But people respect the rules from the get go.

"We have no control over people showing up drunk."

Helms terms Aristide a psychopath

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., branded Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide a psychopath Wednesday, as the Senate considered legislation to keep President Clinton from sending troops to the Caribbean nation.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., watered down his own proposals to limit Clinton's authority to send U.S. troops to Haiti and Bosnia, making them merely non-binding resolutions. Helms pushed a more restrictive amendment.

While Aristide, the deposed Haitian leader, was in a closed meeting with the Foreign Relations Committee, Helms stood one floor above in the Senate and accused him of inciting mob violence, abusing human rights and maintaining ties to Cuba's Fidel Castro.

"This man is a psychopath," Helms said. "Aristide may have won an election, but he's not likely to win a medal for promoting true democracy."

Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., said that was beside the point.

New system speeds information to police

TOPEKA (AP) — New technology will allow police to obtain a suspect's photograph and fingerprint from a national crime system within minutes, an FBI agent told Kansas law enforcement officers.

Since 1967, law enforcement agencies have been able to tap into the National Crime Information Center computer to determine whether a vehicle or other property is stolen.

NCIC also provides a national clearinghouse for arrest warrants; so, a Kansas Highway Patrol trooper can know if a driver he stops is wanted for some crime in another state.

The new NCIC 200 system adds the ability to store and transmit images, such as photographs and fingerprints, to a computer in a patrol car, FBI special agent Udy Wood said at a meeting on Tuesday in Topeka.

Wood, who works at FBI headquarters in Washington, said the new technology is expected to be available by March 1994.

Maj. Richard Barta of the Kansas State Highway Patrol said it would take another two or three years to fully implement the technology in Kansas, if the Kansas Legislature approves start-up money for the state's part of NCIC 200.

Barta said the highway patrol, the Kansas Bureau of Investigation and the state Division of Information Systems and Communications will ask lawmakers for the money next year. It's unclear how much will be needed.

Broader interim government wanted

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S.-led mediators presented Haitian Prime Minister Robert Malval with a document this week that calls for a broadening of Haiti's interim government.

The intent of the document was angrily debated by the Clinton administration and supporters of Haiti's deposed president.

A top aide to ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide said the document was an effort by the United States to break the political impasse in Haiti by adding supporters of Haiti's military chieftains to key government posts. The Clinton administration flatly denied it.

On Capitol Hill, Aristide refused to discuss the document or its implications but said, "We are ready to expand the process, but first they have to be removed." Aristide was referring to army chief Raoul Cedras and his lieutenants who seized power in 1991.

The document was presented this week by U.S. and other international mediators to Malval, who was chosen by Aristide as interim prime minister this past summer.

You couldn't read this page without soy ink

WICHITA (AP) — Instead of just putting food on the table from the crops and animals they raise, farmers and ranchers are starting to find new markets in industry — ones that may become increasingly important.

"The only real opportunity not to downsize agriculture, with the tremendous efficiencies we seem to keep gaining, is to find new uses," said Ray Burns, the Kansas State Board of Agriculture's industrial agricultural materials program coordinator.

"Those new uses will be in the non-food, non-feed areas."

After a recent tour of Europe, Burns said he fears the United States is lagging in developing and using such products.

He said European countries have about $150 million worth of ongoing research in the field, while the U.S. investment is probably $25 million to $30 million.

Some successful products are in use in the United States.

Since its development in 1985, printing ink from soybeans has won wide acceptance, with more than 75 percent of U.S. newspapers using it now.

Although it originally was a response to possible ink shortages, soy ink has won customers because it doesn't rub off newsprint as easily as petroleum-based inks, and it is more biodegradable.

Soy ink also is helping pressrooms meet Federal Clean Air Act requirements for a reduction in volatile organic-compound emissions.

A completely biodegradable foam packaging peanut made of corn starch was introduced three years ago and now has 40 percent of the market.

And many cities fighting pollution from vehicle exhaust emissions are switching to or experimenting with biodiesel, a diesel-replacement fuel made by processing agricultural crops.

It works without any adjustment to engines usually fueled by petroleum diesel.

Professor says embargo means unrest in Haiti

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

A K-State political science professor and Caribbean/Latin American specialist said Haiti's future doesn't look bright. Literally.

"The lights are going out in Haiti," said Steven Butler, temporary professor of political science and retired U.S. Army colonel.

He said the country is going to be greatly affected by the arms and oil embargo imposed by the United Nations.

The country is energy dependent; so, there will be no gasoline for the automobiles and no energy to light up cities, he said. The arms section of the embargo is different, Butler said.

"The arms part is just P.R.," Butler said. "They have all the arms they need to control the masses."

The embargo also will bring social unrest, he said. It is in place to bring Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras into compliance with the accord he signed to allow President Jean-Bertrand Aristide's return to power on Oct 30.

Butler said he sees many obstacles to make any form of democracy possible. He cited the lack of literacy and education in Haiti and its legacy of violence and class warfare between the black masses and mulatto elites, the race created by the intermarriage of the whites and their black slaves.

He said there have been no democratic traditions in Haiti since 1804, when the country became independent from France.

The military is also the only political institution for political power to be channeled through. He said there is a limited pool of leadership for the people.

"Under the Duvalier regime, the leaders would have been eliminated, or exiled, and out of touch with the country or coerced to join the the regime," Butler said.

Those in power in Haiti are struggling to keep it, he said.

"Aristide is a liberation theologist who advocates armed revolution against the state," Butler said.

"The elites are concerned that he will destroy their wealth, position and influence.

"Aristide is very anti-U.S., anti-Capitalist and pro-revolution. We don't know if this will be changed by the practicalities of surviving as president."

Aristide was in power for six months before he was ousted in a coup in 1991. The leader of the coup, Raoul Cedras, was made chief of the army for his role in security in the elections of 1990. Cedras remains in power.

"Aristide sees capitalism as the great evil and the U.S. as the biggest practitioner of this great evil," Butler said.

Butler said the United States became involved to stop the flow of Haitian immigrants.

"This situation presents us with a force of moral, ethical and political choices," he said. "We want to keep Haitians in Haiti by allowing them to meet their needs both economically and politically.

"We want to help them toward independence and self sufficiency."

He said the United States also is involved for humanitarian and human rights reasons. However, not all members of the Haitian government are resisting change, he said.

"You can't stereotype all the elite," Butler said. "There are some that are willing to sacrifice their position. They don't want Haiti to just be the basketcase of the Western Hemisphere."

Dolly Levi, played by Aggie Callison, senior in applied music, sings during a dress rehearsal for "Hello, Dolly!" The KSU Theatre and music department's presentation opens tonight and runs through Saturday.

Say 'hello' to Dolly in McCain

STEFFANY CARREL
Collegian

The KSU Theatre and the music department will present what many are calling its biggest production with the award-winning musical classic "Hello, Dolly!"

The show will be performed at 8 p.m., Oct. 21-23, in McCain Auditorium.

"Hello, Dolly!" is the story of Dolly Gallagher Levi, the incredibly resourceful widow and mischievous matchmaker who has her hand in every pot on the proverbial stove of life.

This lady-of-all-trades sets her eye on Horace Vandergelder, half-millionaire. She wins him with her own brand of whirlwind charm and on her own pleasure-loving terms.

Aggie Callison, senior in applied music and veteran actress, will play Dolly Levi. Horace Vandergelder's part will be performed by Kevin Kelly, senior in theater.

PREVIEW

Luke Kahlich, director and choreographer, said he fully recognizes the magnitude of this production.

"This is so big," he said. "To give you an idea, there are four large production numbers, and that is a lot for one show."

Kahlich, professor of speech, said the show is written more like a film script because there is no time in the script for set changes.

"Because the script is written like that and because almost every set change includes a lot of movement, it makes things very, very complex," he said. "But these are set changes that just have to happen."

In addition to the complexities of the set, costume design for the production required a lot of attention.

Tim Blacker, guest professor and costume designer, came to K-State from New York City in August. With more than 60 costumes needed for the show, he said the challenge was clear.

"There are a lot of clothes," Blacker said. "And there is so much detail because of the period the show is set in. There are the spats for the shoes, the dying of gloves, so many things."

Blacker said he is excited to see all of the elements of this large-scale effort come together.

"We've all been working so hard to have this happen," he said.

Kahlich agreed and said he felt this was the biggest production K-State has done.

"I can't imagine a small production of 'Hello, Dolly!'" Kahlich said. "It's just so grand."

EDITORIAL

Once again, another pathetic ruling rises up from the L.A. riots

Justice, not the jury, is supposed to be blind.

This week, a racially mixed, supposedly intelligent jury acquitted Damian Williams and Henry Watson of the most serious crimes in the Reginald Denny beating case.

Jurors could not decide if Denny's beating constituted attempted murder by Williams and Watson.

The jury accepted the ridiculous defense that Williams and Watson were not guilty of attempted murder because they lacked specific intent. Apparently, at least according to this jury, if you get mad enough and claim a mob mentality, you are not responsible for your actions.

What was Williams doing when he smashed a brick into Denny's head if he wasn't trying to kill him? What did the jurors think the intent was — to get his attention?

It does not matter that the defendants were enraged, legitimately or not, by the Rodney King beating verdict.

Angry or not, mob mentality or not, they are responsible for their actions.

They beat a man beyond recognition.

They beat a man out of his job.

They beat a man so brutally he has no memory of that day.

The Rev. Leonard Jackson, a church leader in South Central Los Angeles, said, "There is a sense of calm and there is a sense of true justice. We saw justice working at its best."

Really, Reverend? True justice?

The true definition of justice states that it is the fair treatment or punishment in accordance of honor, standards or law.

Justice does not mean people have the right to maim others in the name of anger without facing punishment.

We hadn't realized justice meant yanking a man out of his truck to mutilate him and then being made a hero for it.

All those claims of a two-tiered justice system are correct.

We have one system for those who cry victimization and one for those who don't have the power to manipulate the system.

Maybe we shouldn't even discuss justice. It obviously had nothing to do with this case.

Oh, what a friend we have in Fred

The format of my column today is not going to be what you have been accustomed to so far this semester. Sorry, but I have a friend who is under attack from a religious zealot (translated "nut"), and I feel that something should be said in his (the friend's) behalf.

You may already know him. His name is Don Fallon, K-State's coordinator of religious activities. If you do know him, then you know Mr. Fallon, or rather, the Rev. Fallon, needs no defense in reference to his character, integrity, open-mindedness and compassion for others.

In fact, he is such a nice guy that, if I (an atheist) did not already know he considered himself a Christian, I would have thought he was an atheist (that's a joke, Don).

However, I am compelled (as is the nature of friendship) to say a few words with regard to the recent attempt by the Rev. Fred Phelps to brand the Rev. Fallon a promoter of the "godless fag agenda on K-State's campus" solely on the absurd basis that the Rev. Fallon is a member of KSU's Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Task Force.

This is absolute horse-pucky.

We could extend Phelps' warped logic and thereby assume Phelps is a promoter of the same agenda because he cannot complete a single sentence without using the pejorative "fag." Which forces me to ask, "How many times a day do you say the word 'fag,' Rev. Phelps?

And how many more times during a 24-hour period does that word go through your head, Phelps? One hundred, 200 ... 1,000 times a day?

I propose that you, the reader, try a short experiment with me. Find a quiet, secluded place where you can sit and be comfortable without interruption. Now, say the word "fag" 100 times out loud.

Again, be sure you are in a secluded place — we would not want anyone to hear you and think you are a TV evangelist or some looney preacher from Topeka's Westboro Baptist Church.

BRAD SEABOURN

Now, having done that, don't you feel just a little, shall we say, "touched?" Wouldn't any normal person conclude that a person who uses a word that often (and 100 is undoubtedly on the conservative side in Phelps' case) in the average course of daily events has a "fixation" or, clinically speaking, a "psychosis?"

Of course you would.

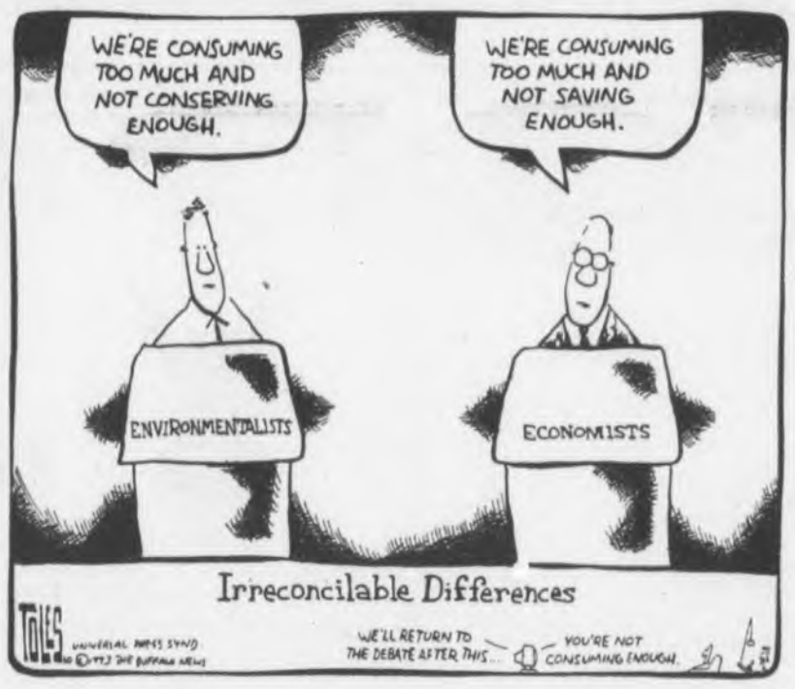
Just as anyone who has experienced meeting and talking with Fallon would conclude that Fallon's participation on the so-called "godless" task force is not one of promotion but of genuine concern and a desire to understand and help. But if you know Fallon, then you already know that he is that kind of guy.

What kind of guy Phelps is is another question entirely. Which is something I have been giving a lot of thought to lately.

I recently watched a documentary about former FBI director J. Edgar Hoover, which affirmed that Hoover had a homosexual relationship with his assistant and close friend. This, of course, was in obvious contrast to the "witch hunt" for homosexual public figures that Mr. Hoover fervently led until his death.

A physician who was interviewed in the documentary offered the explanation that this was Mr. Hoover's way of trying to expunge that which he saw in himself to be evil and immoral.

I am no psychiatrist, but I cannot help but see the similarity between Hoover's actions and those of the good Reverend. Which leads me to ask a rather pointed question: "Are you also a homosexual, Rev. Phelps?"



Well if you are, don't worry about it. There are people out there who understand your sexual frustration, confusion and isolation, and who are willing to help you find some answers without condemnation.

There is even one man I know of who loves you despite your hateful message ... his name is Don Fallon.

Now if that is what it means to promote the "godless fag agenda on KSU's campus," then I say, "Let the 'coming out' begin."

Hoop, there it is... turmoil in K-State's athletic department

Bring back the Madness; let's restore tradition

Hoop, there it was. The basketball season is up and coming strong. The tradition, power, depth and funk the game of basketball brings to K-State is unheard of by any other means in the world.

But now the homecoming tradition of Midnight Madness has come to an end. It has been taken away from our school and fans of the event. It is one of the most emotional nights of the season, but because of our new and improved athletic director, we are not having, and may not ever have again, the Midnight Madness tradition.

My equation of a good baseball, football and/or basketball team is W = FP x HF. In plain English, that is Winning equals Fans and Players times Having Fun. How can our infamous athletic director change our program of winning because his old school (Iowa State) didn't allow a Midnight Madness? How dare him?

Well, my good sir, this is not Iowa State, and if that school had zero tradition, why should we change for you? I know this is the most illiterate, dumbfounded, stupid decision that I, as a student, have ever heard of!

I don't approve of a glorified athletic director coming to our (student and student/players) school and changing things that have been here for years and are tradition. Changing Midnight Madness would be like changing our school colors to pink and baby blue, or doing away with Willie the Wildcat, or tearing the Union down!

The student body and players of any and all sports are concerned— and need to be — about this action, Max Urick! We will not stand for these confounded actions by you. We as a student body will take a stand against such oppression by the administration just because they think they are in power ... NOT.

We as students have the right to have the University's departments run to complement our needs. Without our money and our presence in the school, there would be no administration and no Department of Intercollegiate Athletics. The student players work hard in the sport of their choice and in their academic work as well.

I have a few questions for you as the student body and for the dictatorship administration/athletic department. Without homecomings, pep rallies and other school spirit activities, what would our win/loss ratio be? What gives King Urick the right to dictate with an iron fist and stop Midnight Madness? What makes the school's departments go round? Students and money. No students, no money.

E.B. WILLIAMSON
GUEST COLUMNIST

In closing, Mr. Iowa State athletic director, this is K-State. I would ask you to change your decision about Midnight Madness. Hopefully, this column will aid you in your decision.

If not for yourself, bring back Midnight Madness for the student body. If this column does not work, then students write to your student senators and tell them to get off their asses and do something about this problem we are faced with.

The students and players love this game. Midnight Madness is such a great tradition, the fire should not be put out by our friend in the administration.

Do not let the school run us. It is here for the students, not our administration. If the tradition of Midnight Madness dies, the administration will have beaten the student body.

So students, please do whatever is in your power to stop the snowball effect of this Midnight Madness action. Peace.

Women's Glee Club victim of 'tradition'

Editor,

Last Friday night, the men's and women's glee clubs performed in Lincoln, Neb. After the concert, the men's glee club stayed overnight at a hotel because the men received free tickets to the K-State vs. Nebraska game. The majority of the women's glee club members (everyone but five) had to drive back to Manhattan in extremely foggy weather on two-lane highways under construction.

The choral director, Jerry Polich, claimed that it was "tradition" that barred the women's glee club from being invited to the game.

What "tradition" is he speaking of? The University of Nebraska made enough tickets available for both choruses to attend. And even if they had only offered the men's glee club tickets, it would still be Mr. Polich's responsibility to abolish a sexist tradition such as that one.

Unfortunately, this isn't the first time that women's glee club has received the short end of the stick. For starters, the men's glee club meets four days a week compared to the two days that the women's glee club meets. The men's glee club members also performs a wider array of songs, and they travel more.

I am sick of being treated like some second-class citizen because, in Mr. Polich's eyes, I was born the wrong sex. As a vocal music major, I am required to be enrolled in a chorus of some type, but I am NOT required to endure these discriminatory practices without speaking out against them.

I realize that by writing this letter I am opening myself up to criticism from members of both glee clubs. However, if I don't protest this injustice, I am no longer a victim but a volunteer.

K-State charities doing heckuva job this year

Editor,

I am so proud of the K-State students and the many ways that they work to contribute to local philanthropies. One such effort called "Cats for Cans — K-State's 30 Days of Thanksgiving" is currently underway. From Oct. 15 to Nov. 15, K-State students will be collecting non-perishable food items and money that will be used for the Thanksgiving and Christmas food baskets as well as to stock the local food pantries.

Included in the student efforts are the "Operation Turkey," where the members of fraternities and sororities go door to door collecting food items, and the "Miss-a-Meal" program, where the members of Greek societies miss one of their meals and contribute the funds to the food drive.

Another activity that we can all get behind is the collection of food items at the K-State vs. Oklahoma Homecoming Game on Oct. 30. Members of the Student Governing Association, led by Student Body President Ed Skoog, will be collecting for the food drive at all of the gates into the game.

I would like to ask for your support of this wonderful effort by the K-State students to benefit those in our community who are in need of assistance. Please come to the game and cheer for the Wildcats. And please bring a donation, either a non-perishable food item or a cash donation, to make the food drive a success.

Reasons abound to take diversity classes

Editor,

I am writing in response to the architecture student who wrote expressing his opposition to the diversity overlay program.

What is the purpose of higher education, anyway? Certainly, it does provide the skills and knowledge that will put dimes in our pockets, but it has an even more significant purpose. A college education is a preparation for life.

Suppose the architecture student (or the student in any other highly specialized field for that matter) is only required to take those classes that relate directly to his major. He might graduate and enter the job market in two or three years, but then what will he do for the 16 hours a day when he isn't working as an architect?

Maybe he could read Architectural Digest. What will he do when he finally retires but knows nothing besides architecture? It's a shame he doesn't understand anything about other people because his college never required him to take a sociology class. It's really too bad he never had to take a political science class. Otherwise he might know enough about government and campaigns to follow politics.

He can't even enjoy some simple sports because his lack of physical education has left him in such poor condition. If he had ever taken a psychology class, he might even be able to figure out why his life feels so worthless.

All of this is assuming the fact that he ever finds a job. Given the choice between the strict architect and the well-rounded architect, I would be more inclined to hire the latter. The professional who also has skills with writing, speaking and people, as well as knowledge of other cultures, history and politics, is more employable.

Therefore, I believe it would waste neither taxpayers' money nor students' time for K-State to provide a true liberal arts education.

Multicultural crowd enjoys performance

MIKE BUNCH

Jesus "Chuy" Negrete performed parts of 15 corridos last night for an enthusiastic audience of about 80 people.

Negrete, founder and director of the Mexican Folklore institute in Chicago, performed the historical ballads at Union Station to educate people about the Hispanic culture. The performance was in conjunction with Hispanic Awareness Month activities. Negrete sang parts of the songs in Spanish.

"I want to affirm the culture," Negrete said. "I also want to preserve it and raise consciousness about it, first to the Mexican Americans and then to everyone else."

The show started late, but once it was underway the audience seemed captivated by Negrete's music and the slides that went along with the story.

Negrete opened the performance for the multicultural crowd by getting it involved in a traditional ceremony. The end-of-the-day ceremony was used by his Hispanic ancestors in 1521, before the Spanish came and took over the southern region.

A slide presentation caught the audience's attention as it followed the music, showing pictures of the places and people Negrete was performing about.

The crowd laughed and applauded as Negrete sang about the early life, before there was an America and the coming of the Spanish to the new world.

When Negrete sang about the good and the bad things the Spanish brought, from animals to venereal diseases, the audience laughed and applauded the irony.

Minors program to replace concentrations

policy, and it was voted on and passed by the Academic Affairs Committee. The final version was forwarded to Faculty Senate and approved.

During the process of developing a minors program, Carrel said, the committee looked at other minors programs, mostly of Big Eight Conference schools.

"This was important in the formation of our program," Carrel said.

The implementation of a minors program in a department will replace an area of concentration.

Nancy McFarlin, associate professor of Farrell Library and former chairperson of Academic Affairs, said there are differences between an area of concentration and a minor.

"With an area of concentration, the department that the student is enrolled in has determined what those courses will be," McFarlin said. "With a minor, the degree-granting college will decide the courses you must take to get a minor in."

Another difference between the two is the recognition. With an outside concentration, an actual degree is not recorded on students' permanent record. With the minor's program, students will graduate with a minor's degree.

"Students are taking the classes anyway," Carrel said. "They should be recognized for this work. It's more substantial."

The basic guidelines of the minors program are as follows — Students must take a minimum of 15 hours and are not required to be in the program, and departments are not required to create minors programs.

"Advisers for minor's program will be in the area of the minor, and the departments offering the minor can choose what level the courses will be," McFarlin said.

Carrel said there will be student pressure on departments to create minors programs if the departments feel there is no need for them.

"This will be the key to developing more programs," she said.

Carrel said students will not have a minor degree until a department declares a minors program. When a department does declare a minors progam, past hours taken in the department will go toward a minors degree.

"People who have graduated can come back and change their permanent record or can come back and take classes to fulfill the minors requirement," Carrel said.

Carrel said most departments are in support of the program, but the issue of cost and increase in students in relation to amount of teachers prevents some departments from developing a program.

Richmond scores 18 points in exhibition loss to Nuggets

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

TOPEKA — Six players from the Denver Nuggets scored in double figures as the Nuggets beat the Sacramento Kings 121-99 on Wednesday night at the Kansas Expo Centre.

It was a homecoming for former K-State basketball player Mitch Richmond, who scored 18 points in the first three quarters of the exhibition game for the Kings.

The leading scorer for the Nuggets was Kevin Brook, with 19 points. He was followed by Rodney Rodgers, who had 18 points, and Brian Williams with 15 points.

LaPhonso Ellis and Dikembe Mutombo each scored 14 points, and Reggie Williams had 12 points.

Nugget coach Dan Issel said his team needs to learn how to get a victory.

"I think it's important, especially for a team this young, to learn how to win," Issel said.

"Everybody we threw out there did a great job, and I hope everybody plays this hard for the season."

Mutombo, Denver's 7-foot-2 center, said he hoped the Nuggets would make it to the playoffs this year.

"This team is going to be great," Mutombo said. "This team is young. We just need to get some more experience, and we'll be fine."

Richmond said the Kings are trying to find the right people to play with just two weeks left before the regular season starts.

"We are still trying to fill some holes," said Richmond, who helped the Cats to the Elite Eight in the 1988 NCAA Tournament. "I guess some of us were jet-lagged."

A crowd of 5,126 welcomed Richmond home. He said it was wonderful to see old friends.

"It was great to come back," Richmond said.

"I love this area. This is where I made my mark. I enjoyed it. I miss hanging out with my friends."

One thing Richmond said he worried about was getting back into shape after sitting out the second half of last season with a wrist injury.

"I rushed the open shot," he said. "I've still got to iron things out. I haven't played since January. The doctor said I'm going to have some soreness for a year or so."

Richmond said he has three goals for this year.

"I want the team to get better, to get more wins and make the all-star game," Richmond said.

TRIATHLON CLUB

Athletes to compete in Ironman

Delgado, Anderson and Smith prepare for Triathlon

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Imagine swimming and biking from Kansas City to Manhattan, and then running 26 more miles.

Three K-State students will be doing the equivalent when they compete in the Ironman Triathlon Oct. 23 in Orlando, Fla.

Alberto Delgado, Tracy Anderson and Malcolm Smith, members of the Wildcat Triathlon club, are flying to Orlando to swim 2.4 miles, bike for 112 miles and run for 26.2 miles. They will begin the trek at 7:30 a.m. at Lake Minneola, west of Orlando.

"Feeling healthy is a real high for me," said Alberto Delgado, faculty adviser to the Wildcat Triathlon club.

Delgado, a 38-year-old associate professor of mathematics, has been competing in triathlons for the past six years and said he was never athletic or competitive before he became interested in the sport.

"I started riding bikes with a friend," Delgado said. "When I became bored with that, I started running and swimming, and it all started to snowball into the triathlon."

All three triathletes have overcome some obstacles during the training for their sport.

Delgado sustained a partially torn Achilles tendon, which occurred at a meet in Kansas City, Mo., just four months ago.

"I had to just sit and do nothing for four weeks of the summer," Delgado said.

However, Anderson overcame an even greater obstacle in 1986 — a bout with spinal meningitis that was nearly fatal.

"I woke up in a hospital bed that I had been in for several days, and I didn't even know it," Anderson said.

Anderson said he was released from the hospital just before the start of the spring semester, and he couldn't even walk to class without having to sit down and rest.

Consequently, he started jogging to increase his energy and began to enjoy it.

"I haven't lost a race in two seasons, and I really enjoy the competition," Anderson said.

Anderson has tallied victories in the Wildcat Triathlon, put on annually by the club, as well as races in South Dakota and Kansas City, Mo. He is competing in his first Ironman Triathlon.

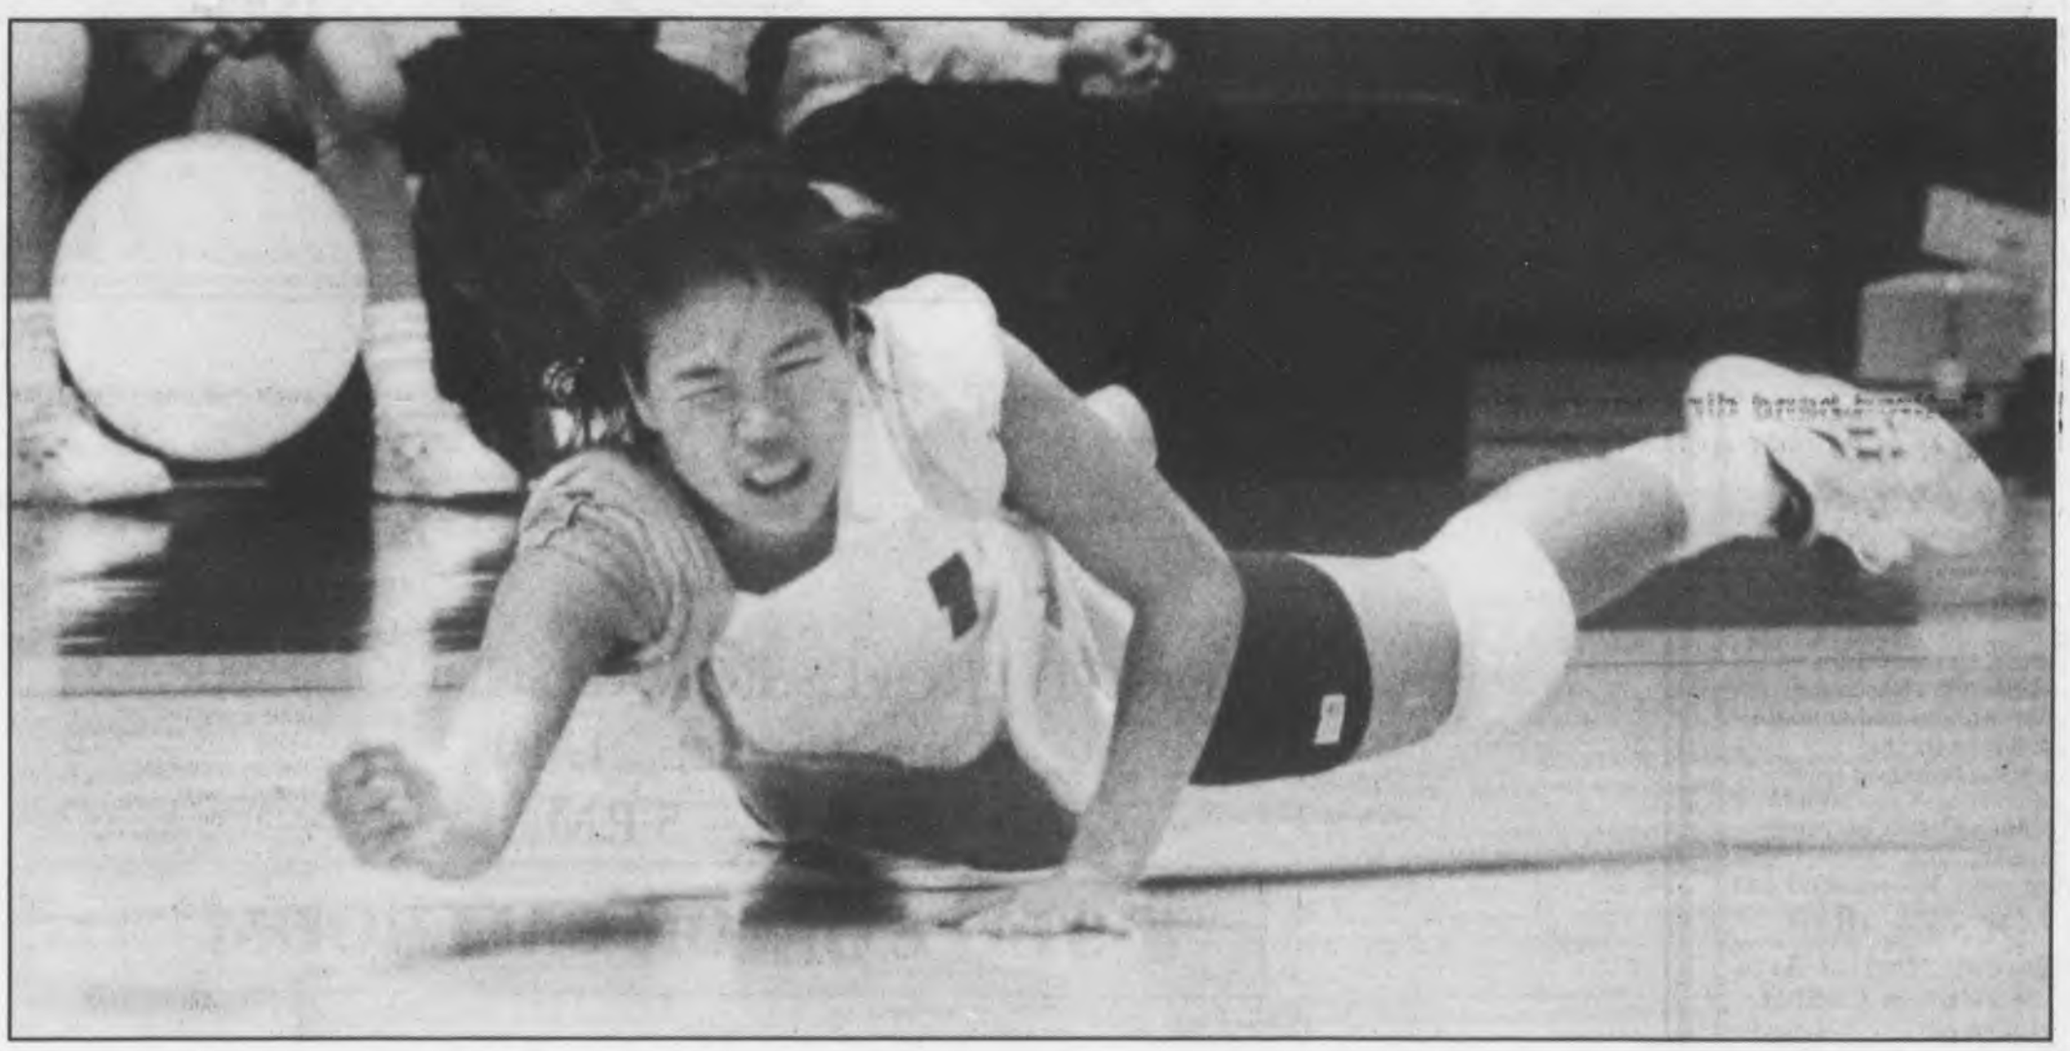
When Smith started jogging in 1986 he weighed 260 pounds.

He now weighs 201 pounds and will be competing in the division for athletes who weigh more than 200 pounds. He placed second in the division at last year's event.

"I enjoy running long distances with friends," Smith said.

"You would be amazed at some of the conversations that you get into."

Smith spends his spare time traveling to local grade schools, showing children his triathlon equipment and promoting fitness and drug awareness.



Triathletes don't have much spare to give because of the intense training regimen involved with the sport.

"It is hard to find time around my work schedule, but if I didn't do it I wouldn't be able to get through some of my days," Smith said.

Delgado said a typical day for him begins at 6 a.m., when he goes for a run. He then goes to teach his classes and then either swims or bikes.

He averages three miles in the water, 150 miles on his bike and 30 miles of running.

"A grad student of mine, who is a marathon runner, said to me 'If you can do it in a week, you can do it in a day,'" Delgado said.

K-State still winless in conference play

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State volleyball team lost its 22nd-consecutive Big Eight Conference match last night when it was defeated by Missouri 3-2 in Ahearn Field House.

The last time the Wildcats won was against Missouri in Columbia in 1991. It was also the fourth-straight match the Cats have lost this season.

After being down 2-1, the Cats battled back and won the fourth game, forcing a fifth game to decide the match.

In the fifth game, the Cats fell behind when Missouri jumped out to 7-3 lead sparked by a 3-0 run. The Cats then narrowed the score to 13-10, before eventually falling to the Tigers 15-12.

Leading the Cats' attack against the Tigers were outside hitters Suzanne Hagge and Yolanda Young. Both Hagge and Young recorded 23 kills in the match.

The totals were career highs for both players. Hagge's former high was against UMKC last season, when she had 17 kills, and Young's career high was 19 kills against Wichita State earlier this season. Middle blocker Jill Dugan also added 14 kills to the Cats' effort.

The first game of the match started out slowly with both teams trading six side-outs before the Tigers scored first.

The rest of the first game continued to be a defensive struggle, as the match was tied nine times, before the Tigers pulled away to win the game 16-14.

K-State bounced back to take the win the second game by the score of 15-12. Young sparked the Cats early in the game with four straight kills. The Cats were down 12-10, when they battled back behind Hagge and Dugan to take the lead 13-12.

The loss dropped the Cats' record to 7-13, and the Tigers improved their record 8-11.

Coach Patti Hagemeyer was unavailable for comment following the game.

Colorado will travel to Manhattan on Saturday to take on the Cats at 7:30 p.m. The Buffaloes are sitting atop the Big Eight Conference with a 4-0 record and a 14-4 overall mark.

PACIFIC PALISADES, CALIF. — K-State sophomore Karina Kuregian downed Texas A&M's Nancy Dingwall Wednesday to become the second Wildcat netter to advance to the main draw of the Riviera All-American Championships.

Kuregian, who beat Dingwall in straight sets 6-3, 6-2, is the only player in the main draw to play through pre-qualifying and qualifying rounds. She started slowly and lost the first 7 points to Dingwall before coming back for the victory.

"Even when she started the match so poorly, she never got frustrated, which was a great sign for her because she has had a difficult time maintaining her concentration this season," Coach Steve Bietau said.

Through the pre-qualifying and qualifying rounds, Kuregian won seven consecutive matches to advance to the 32-player field. Kuregian has dropped only one set in her march to the main draw of the second leg of collegiate tennis' grand slam.

"Karina played the best I've seen her play against Dingwall," Bietau said.

"The fact that she has played so well after going through pre-qualifying and qualifying makes what she has accomplished even more impressive."

Kuregian will face Southern Cal's Petra Schmitt in today's first round of action.

"Now that Karina has advanced to the main draw, it's a big step for her and for our program on the national level," Bietau said.

Kuregian is the only Big Eight Conference player remaining in the tournament.

FLAG FOOTBALL

Men's intramural season to conclude with all-University championship

CHAD HARRIS
Collegian

The men's intramural flag football season will come to an end today, when the game between Haymaker 2 and The Legion of Dome decides who will claim the all-University title.

Wednesday's games decided what teams remain in the finals to determine the all-University team.

At 4:30, the Legion of Dome defeated the Wool Pullers 26-20. In the 5:30 game, the Legion of Dome defeated Tau Kappa Epsilon, 28-24.

Monty Chayer, senior in business education and Legion of Dome player, said the team just wanted to keep up with the TKEs.

"Honestly, we went into the game with the TKEs wanting just to keep up with them. We were tired from the earlier game, but we played hard and were happy with the outcome," Chayer said.

Barry Smith, senior in marketing and Legion of Dome player, said the game with the TKEs was tough.

"It was a good game, very close all the time. We won by a 4-point margin, and it was pretty much that way throughout the whole game," Smith said.

Dustin Zander, junior in civil engineering and TKE player, commented on the loss.

"They were a good team. They came out to play and really stuck it to us," Zander said.

The game between the Legion of Dome and Haymaker 2 is at 4:30 today. Smith, a player from the Legion of Dome, expects the game to be a shut-out.

"I think we'll run over the team of Haymaker 2. I don't mean to sound arrogant, but we're pretty pumped up for the game, and I'm confident with the strength of our team," Smith said.

■ International company donates pharmaceuticals to Vet School

Merck Co., Inc., a company based out of Texas, has contributed more than $15,000 worth of veterinary pharmaceuticals to the College of Veterinary Medicine.

The company operates throughout the world and produces a variety of pharmaceuticals.

"They are an international company with facilities in the United States, Europe and Third World countries," said Jim Brozo, director of development and alumni affairs for the College of Veterinary Medicine. "They are the Exxon of pharmaceuticals."

Merck Co. deals in both human and animal pharmaceuticals four times a year.

"The $15,000 in pharmaceuticals is just for the first quarter of 1993. They donate every quarter," Brozo said.

Donations help the college to provide better service to their clients.

"Pharmaceuticals are a big cost for any hospital, and the donations help us to provide excellent service to clients," Brozo said.

Part of the donations are used on animals for research, but most of the donations are used for client animals, Brozo said.

"We ask pharmaceutical companies to help us by donating products that we can and do use on client animals. Most of the donations are used exclusively on client animals," Jerry Gillespie, professor of clinical sciences, said.

Gillespie said the department purchases about 90 percent of all its pharmaceuticals, and the rest come from donations. Merck Co. is the biggest pharmaceutical contributor.

"They contribute pharmaceuticals as we need them and give us a report on what they provide us every quarter," Gillespie said.

■ Retired band director receives award for his achievements

Stanley Finck, K-State's band coordinator and director of bands for the past 10 years, won the outstanding band director award last summer for the 1992-93 year.

Finck, who retired last year, competed against band directors all across Kansas during his career. He was given the award by the Phi Beta Mu fraternity, a fraternity that is comprised of band directors.

Finck said most of the awards of this category are usually given to older directors or those who have already passed away.

"I was very surprised to win the outstanding award," Finck said. "Usually, it is given to someone that is dead. I'm obviously not."

The former band director retired this year because he has multiple sclerosis, and there are everyday demands he must keep up with because of the disease, Finck said.

■ Professor is given award for grassland burning research

Twenty-nine years of researching Kansas grasslands has paid off for a K-State faculty member.

Clenton Owensby, professor of range management, was awarded the Irvin Youngberg Award for excellence in research in applied sciences by the Higuchi/Endowment Achievement Awards in September.

Recipients of the Youngberg Award must be faculty members of Kansas Board of Regents' institutions, and their research must affect the lives of Kansans, Owensby said.

"Some of the research projects I've done, like the research work on grazing systems and fire research, directly affected Kansas ranchers' ability to produce at a profit," Owensby said.

Through research, Owensby and team members have shown burning Kansas range lands enhances livestock performance.

The U.S. Department of Energy provided the funding for Owensby and his research team.

His team includes five graduate students and several undergraduate students.

"This is truly a team approach," Owensby said. "I'm the leader, but the group does the work."

Owensby was nominated for recipient of the award by Gerry Posler, head of the department of agronomy.

"This is a recognition of the excellence in research that has been conducted here by Mr. Owensby and is also a recognition of the value of research on burning and intensive early stalking to producers, particularly here in the Flint Hills," Posler said.

Kansas Farm Bureau workers are being put through the paces by K-State's kinesiology department, and they're paying for it.

"We are very interested in the overall wellness of our employees, and we thought K-State could help us give them more opportunities to improve their wellness," Karl Russell, employment manager for Farm Bureau, said.

Dan Dekat, computer project leader of Farm Bureau, said he has found the program beneficial.

"Essentially my motivation to come was to lose 10 pounds," Dekat said. "Now, I've lost 20. On the mental side, I'm more alert, more focused in on what I'm doing."

Edmund Acevedo, assistant professor of kinesiology at K-State and director of the K-State center for exercise research, said more companies are understanding the relationship between wellness and better job performance.

Wellness programs such as Farm Bureau's are becoming an established part of the workplace. But, he said he especially enjoys the relationship K-State shares with Farm Bureau.

"I think it's very unique, with up-to-date knowledge for the benefit of the employees of Farm Bureau and the K-State students," Acevedo said.

The program started in 1990 when Farm Bureau approached K-State with the idea.

"It's a contractual agreement," Acevedo said. "They pay for the service — not the employees themselves — but Farm Bureau pays for them to have this benefit."

The Farm Bureau Wellness Center is run by coordinator Carol Stites, instructor of kinesiology at K-State. K-State kinesiology students assist Stites with the daily operation of the center and receive academic credit.

"This gives students an opportunity to apply the knowledge they have gained in their classes," Stites said. "Some students don't know what corporate fitness is, and this exposes them to that real world situation."

There are many health benefits for the workers of Farm Bureau, Stites said.

"We provide one-on-one continued training and nutritional analysts as well as blood pressure screening, personal screening and structured exercise classes. There are also periodical seminars on wellness."

The center is located in the lower level of the Farm Bureau building. It consists of one room with free weights, machine weights, tread mills, exercise bikes and a rower, along with mirrors and other equipment for aerobics.

Before employees can use the wellness center, they must be fitness tested. If employees do not meet fitness guidelines established by the American College of Sports Medicine/American Heart Association, they are referred to a doctor before an exercise program is prescribed.

About 70 percent of the employees have been fitness tested and can use the center.

"There have been cases when we have contacted physicians. Usually we contact a physician when there are questions about limitations," Stites said.

As people get older, the way they need to exercise changes, Acevedo said.

"You have to learn to negotiate with your body as you get older," Acevedo said. "When you are younger you tell yourself, 'I will hit the wall (threshold of pain) and push my way through it.' When you're older, you have to approach the wall and ask your body, 'What are we going to be able to do?'"

Del Brooks, senior systems analyst, has enjoyed the support the program offers.

"It took me about six weeks to get in the habit of coming down," he said. "Now if I miss, I start to feel guilty. I started coming in to gain strength, endurance and to tone up. And, it couldn't do anything but help my cardiovascular system."

"I like coming down at noon because it gives me a new outlook on the afternoon."

DEL BROOKS
FARM BUREAU SENIOR SYSTEMS ANALYST

Many employees have found the program to be a great alternative during the lunch hour.

"I like coming down at noon because it gives me a new outlook on the afternoon. In here I can take out my frustrations," Brooks said.

Acevedo said fitter, healthier employees are more productive and happier, and they show up for work more often than unfit employees.

"Corporate America is realizing they need to provide a service that can maintain and improve employees' health if they want to improve production."

Political science professor returns from second mission to Pakistan

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

A K-State professor is continuing his efforts to foster democracy in Pakistan.

Bill Richter, professor of political science, recently returned from his second trip to Pakistan within a month.

"I served as part of a survey team in September and just returned from participating in the observer delegation," Richter said.

The National Democratic Institute, based in Washington D.C., sponsored the three-phase observation of the 1993 Pakistani elections.

The first phase included a team of eight people who spent 10 days in the country to assess the situation prior to the elections.

Six people participated in the second phase. They were responsible for handling the logistical preparation for the third phase of observing the actual election.

"Observer missions have developed over the past decade. One of the main values of having international observers at an election like this is because it conveys the fact that the world is watching," Richter said.

Bill Richter

He said they encountered observer groups from other nations as well.

"The European Community, the British Commonwealth and the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation all had delegations observing the election," Richter said.

During the observer mission, Richter's team observed more than 20 polling stations.

"Part of our function ended up being to check out rumors and see if there was any truth to them," he said.

He relayed an incident in which the team heard of some possible rigging at one polling station while they were observing at another. After traveling to the second location, the rumors proved to be false.

Pakistan is still working on developing a democracy.

"The first general election wasn't held until 1970. Pakistan has experienced great difficulty in establishing an effective democratic system," Richter said.

The nation of Pakistan was created in 1947 and experienced several military coups during the first few years of its existence.

"If this recent election succeeded in establishing an effective government, then it is a further step in the building of democracy there," he said.

The results of the election are not clear.

"The Pakistan People's Party, led by Benazir Bhutto and the Pakistan Muslim League, led by Mian Nawaz Sharif are the two major political parties, and neither received a majority of the votes," Richter said.

"Benazir Bhutto was appointed Prime Minister on Oct. 19. "She was able to put together a coalition with smaller parties to command a majority of votes in the National Assembly.

"For the most part, Pakistan can feel a considerable amount of satisfaction from having conducted good elections."

Dale Herspring, professor and department head of political science, said Richter also has the right to a sense of satisfaction.

"The fact that he has been invited back several times means he is someone they trust to go out there and do an excellent job," Herspring said.

"It's a real plus for him."

Minors plan is in the works

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

After two years of discussing, developing and approving a plan, K-State will have a minor's program for the spring semester.

Approval of the minor's program occurred last spring. So far, four minor's programs have been approved by Faculty Senate's Academic Affairs committee and await approval from Faculty Senate.

Many departments at the University have varying views on this issue.

David Procter, interim head of the speech department, said student interest prompted the development of a minor's program.

"We have many people in our classes who have indicated they would like to pick up a minor," Procter said.

The speech department received approval of its minor's program on Tuesday from Faculty Senate's Academic Affairs committee. The proposed program will be sent to Faculty Senate for approval in November.

Procter said there will be three minor's programs offered within the speech department: rhetoric/communication, dance and theater. For a minor's degree, students will choose elective courses along with some required courses.

To complete a rhetoric/communication minor and a dance minor, students will be required to take 18 hours of classes. A theater minor requires 19 hours.

Procter said the elective classes will be taken from the speech department's curriculum.

There are basic guidelines to the program, but alterations and additions will be made as the program progresses.

"We all are in a learning process, and we'll see how it goes," Procter said. "We want to see what responses we get. In the future, we may propose additional degrees."

He said he does not foresee any significant problems with the minor's program. There will be an increase in students, he said, and the number of sections for certain courses will have to be increased.

"There will be more benefits than drawbacks," he said.

Procter said he believes a minor will make students more appealing to potential employers.

"We believe it will help students in class and in the work force," he said. "They will be able to communicate better."

Bradley Shaw, associate professor of the modern languages, said he is supportive of the idea. But, he said he feels the program could work in a positive or negative way for the department.

"In the department, more than half of the students are double majors," he said. "If we have a minor's program, students will have the minor's degree and will not take anymore classes. Students will not improve on their skill."

With the program, there may be a decrease in enrollment in upper-level language classes, Shaw said.

Conversely, he said, students who are majoring in other fields may decide to minor in a foreign language. This, he said, will increase enrollment.

"We may have one or two upswings in a class, and others will drop."

Shaw said though the department has some reservations about the program, it is working on a proposal for a minor's program. The department will propose that plan to Faculty Senate at the first of the year. If approved, it will be implemented next fall.

4 K-State graduates to represent America abroad

KIM HEFLING
Collegian

This is the second in a three-part series about K-State student and faculty involvement in the Peace Corps.

For some K-State graduates who are leaving for Peace Corps service, the biggest fear is what life will be like when they return to the United States.

Darla Allen, 1993 K-State graduate, leaves Manhattan on Oct. 31 to serve in Botswana, a country she had never heard of before joining the Peace Corps.

During a 12-week training program in Gaborone, Botswana, Allen will be assigned to a school where she will teach home economics.

Allen said she believes life will be much different in Botswana.

"In the Peace Corps, you live modestly," she said. "You represent America, so you're under constant watch."

Because she will be working as a teacher, Allen said her living conditions will be better than many other Peace Corps volunteers. Her housing will probably be equipped with a concrete floor, a bathtub and running water.

Allen's interest in the Peace Corps began in high school during a Close-Up Washington trip, in which she attended a seminar about the Peace Corps. After that, Allen talked to Peace Corps representatives on the K-State campus every year.

Allen said her biggest fear is returning to the United States after her term in the Peace Corps.

Mark Vogl, 1993 K-State graduate, leaves Feb. 14 for Peace Corps training in Costa Rica. After two months of training, he will begin serving in Panama.

Vogl was introduced to the Peace Corps by his cousin.

"I really got interested in high school when my cousin was serving in the Peace Corps," he said. "Last summer when I was touring in Washington D.C., I stopped by the main office and talked to a recruiter."

In Panama, Vogl will be dealing with environmental education. He will work with both students and teachers to develop curriculum to teach biology and ecology to students, he said.

Vogl said it will not bother him to live without electricity and running water, but he does have some fears about the possible risks caused by consuming the food and water in Panama.

"To be honest, the food and water there scare me," he said.

Vogl said he has confidence in the Peace Corps and said the policy is to not send an American citizen to a country experiencing turmoil, such as a civil war or riots.

"The Peace Corps does a good job of not sending anyone to a place where it would be dangerous for an American," he said.

"What people don't realize is that Third World countries have to invite the Peace Corps in, so, generally, it means that country is going to have a good relationship with the U.S.," he said. "Usually, the country is without a dictator and is looking out for the best of the people."

Vogl is taking Spanish classes at Ohio State to prepare for his Peace Corps service.

"I've never had a foreign language before. Hopefully, this class will be enough to give me some background."

After returning from Panama, Vogl said he would like to attend graduate school and find work related to low-income housing and community re-building.

Liana Riesinger, 1992 K-State graduate, will be spending her Peace Corps term in Namibia. During her 12-week training session in Wind Hook, Namibia, she will learn where she will work and live.

"Over there, I'm told I'll have to boil water just to wash my hands. They say not to eat food off the street because of parasites."

LIANA RIESINGER
1992 GRADUATE

In Namibia, Riesinger will be teaching English to all ages, just as she did at the International Student Center at K-State.

Riesinger is not sure if she will have electricity and running water but knows living in Africa will be different.

"Over there, I'm told I'll have to boil water just to wash my hands," she said. "They say not to eat food off the street because of parasites."

Like Allen, one of Riesinger's biggest fears is returning to the United States after serving in the Peace Corps.

"I keep asking myself, 'How will this affect my life? How will I be when I return?'"

"It's almost like I'll be lost in time, I'll go away and bleep out. The biggest shock and adjustment to me may be relating possibly to the people around me (after returning)."

Since graduation, Riesinger has worked as a free-lance writer for the Kansas City Star. If she has time, Riesinger said she hopes to occasionally publish articles in U.S. trade publications about Africa.

David Boone, 1993 K-State graduate, leaves Jan. 31 for service in Mali.

"I'm looking forward to it, but I have some apprehensions," he said. "The next two years should be an exciting time.

"I had no choice in what country to pick, but on my application they asked me my preference. The most important thing is to be flexible," Boone said. "I said in my interview that it was not important where I went, that I was just interested in going."

Boone will be working as an agricultural extension agent involved with agricultural gardening. He will probably live in a two- or three-room adobe with no running water or electricity and will be the only Peace Corps volunteer in the area, he said.

"I think being out of the cultural aspect of America for two years will be difficult," Boone said.

Boone said he will especially miss the New York Times, hockey games and marlin fishing.

Boone lives in Norfolk, Va. In preparation for his service in the Peace Corps, he is practicing French and studying the culture.

French speakers gather for lunch

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

A touch of France comes to the K-State Union every Monday at noon.

French-speaking individuals bring their lunches to Union Stateroom 1 and practice their French skills from noon to 1:30 p.m.

K-State faculty members, students and Manhattan residents gather to talk about whatever is on their minds and what is happening in the news, said Glenna Burckel, Manhattan resident and regular at the French table.

The weekly lunch date allows people who speak French to maintain their level of speaking.

"This helps us maintain and use the French language like the living language it is supposed to be," Burckel said.

Although the group did not meet last year because of lack of organization, it had previously gathered at lunchtime for several years, Burckel said.

In the past, the modern languages department conducted the French table to help students improve their speaking and comprehension skills.

Visiting French students regularly attend the table, providing the opportunity for participants to ask questions about French culture and their views on current events.

Low attendance has been a problem this year, Burckel said.

"It's always been difficult to get and maintain attendance with these language tables, and I would be very happy to have more people," she said.

An opportunity to teach in France and an interest in the French culture spurred Don Setser, professor of chemistry, to learn French.

"The French table helps me so I don't forget what I've worked so hard to learn," he said.

French speaking skills do fade over time, Burckel said.

"Words you knew and could readily use fade," she said. "Language not in use by you is getting away from you.

"There is no substitute for doing some speaking," Burckel said.

Burckel and Setser said they encourage anyone to bring his or her lunch and attend.

"It isn't the equivalent of a high-level class," Burckel said.

"We encourage people who feel their French is rusty to come and listen and get back into it," she said.

Relief convoy feeds north Bosnia

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSTAR, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The first aid convoy in five months reached more than 100,000 Muslims on Wednesday in a besieged pocket of northern Bosnia.

The arrival of food and medicine in the town of Tesanj came on the same day about 6,000 ethnic Croat refugees from central Bosnia reached safety in territory controlled by Croatian troops.

The events highlighted the suffering of the one-time allies in an 18-month-old war that began as a battle with Serbs over secession from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia and degenerated into a fight to splinter Bosnia into ethnic states.

This is the first relief convoy since May to reach Tesanj, said Peter Kessler, a U.N. aid representative in Zagreb, Croatia.

Ron Redmond, a U.N. representative in Geneva, said the 103,000 inhabitants of Tesanj had been under siege for 115 days without relief supplies except for some food dropped by parachute.

The nine-truck convoy, carrying 84 tons of supplies, was permitted to cross Serb-held territory, and Bosnian army engineers had to remove land mines before it reached the town, Redmond said.

Serbs had delayed earlier attempts to reach Tesanj and nearby Maglaj.

Redmond said U.N. officials now would try to get aid trucks to Maglaj, home to 40,000 hungry people, as soon as possible.

"In Maglaj, when people are wounded, they're carried usually by horse or on foot on the three-hour journey to Tesanj to the hospital," Redmond said.

He said people in Tesanj had run out of medical supplies and were desperately hungry.

"People have actually been fighting over some of the air-dropped food," Redmond said.

Somewhere along the way, a crowd stopped the convoy and stole about 100 bags of flour, Kessler said.

"The food situation in Bosnia is becoming more difficult, and people are more desperate to take it one way or another," he said.

Elsewhere, a convoy of 75 trucks, buses and cars carrying mostly women and children arrived in Capljina near Bosnia's border with Croatia, Mara Jurkovic, a local official, said.

They had been on the move since June, when they fled Croat villages for Vares, a Croat-held town of 12,000 people in central Bosnia north of Sarajevo.

But their trek was not over because Capljina already has 3,500 refugees and has no room for more people.

About 2,000 are to go to the Croatian port of Ploce, and then be taken by boat to the Istrian peninsula along the northern Adriatic. The remainder will be sheltered in Croat-held western Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Meanwhile, a Croat-Muslim operation to swap prisoners hit a snag, officials said.

Civil war could resume without U.N. crackdown

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — U.S. helicopters drew grenade fire Wednesday, and a clan leader warned Somalia may plunge back into civil war if the United Nations does not crack down on Mohamed Farrah Aidid's militia.

Mogadishu has been largely quiet since Aidid announced a unilateral cease-fire on Oct. 9.

But occasional shooting incidents have occurred, and there are signs of increased tension between Aidid and Ali Mahdi Mohamed, his clan rival who controls northern Mogadishu.

Mohamed Kaniare, representative of Ali Mahdi's faction, which has not challenged the U.N. operation, said to reporters Wednesday that Aidid's militia was continuing to fight.

If U.S. troops and other U.N. peacekeepers cannot do anything, then they have to defend themselves, he said.

"The resumption of civil war is imminent — that is how it looks."

A rocket-propelled grenade exploded in mid-air about 40 yards from a U.S. Army Blackhawk helicopter flying over an Aidid stronghold in southern Mogadishu before dawn Wednesday. No one was injured.

A few hours earlier, another Blackhawk pilot on patrol over Bakara market, an area teeming with Aidid supporters, said he saw what appeared to be a grenade passed within 20 to 40 feet without exploding.

U.N. officials said they believed the incidents were isolated and not a sign the cease-fire was about to break down in southern Mogadishu, where Aidid's faction is concentrated.

President Clinton has sent heavy reinforcements to Somalia to strengthen the U.N. peacemaking force before he recalls American troops by March 31.

At the same time, the United States has backed away from confrontation with Aidid and taken a more conciliatory approach in seeking a political settlement.

Maj. Gen. Thomas Montgomery, head of U.S. forces in Somalia, said Tuesday American troops would stay off the streets of southern Mogadishu except for emergencies, such as going to the aid of U.N. peacekeepers.

In Washington, Madeleine Albright, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, testified Wednesday that the U.N. is not actively pursuing the search mission for Aidid in an attempt to hold him accountable for attacks on U.N. troops.

But she said that U.N. forces would continue to pressure those who put obstacles in the way of aid work.

"Force and diplomacy go together," she said.

By painting himself as the aggrieved party in a war with U.N. colonialists, Aidid has increased his stature in his own clan since he began attacks in June that killed dozens of peacekeepers, including 18 Americans on Oct. 3.

Nearly all the violence has occurred in southern Mogadishu; the rest of the country has been largely quiet except for bandit activity and localized inter-clan violence.

Optimists have said Somalia is getting better; pessimists have said Aidid and rival warlords are biding their time until U.S. forces leave.

Ali Mahdi's backers are not pleased Aidid remains at large and is forcing himself back into the political picture.

They criticized the United States on Wednesday for dropping the effort to capture Aidid and refocusing on a political solution.

"We are sorry about what President Clinton is saying — of giving everything to Aidid. That is how it looks," Kaniare, the ally of Ali Mahdi, said.

He said his people were organizing for the possibility of new fighting in the civil war.

The fighting caused the deaths of an estimated 350,000 Somalis in 1992, many who starved to death.

A U.S.-led military force intervened last December amid pressure to assure that humanitarian aid reached the Somalis.

Kaniare said his faction was willing to negotiate with all the other 14 major factions, including Aidid's, but would not meet with Aidid personally.

"What he wants is to be the president of this country, and we have refused that from the beginning. We will never accept it," he said.

Clinton's special envoy, Robert Oakley, met with representatives of several factions, including Aidid's, last week.

But negotiations are on hold while he is out of the country.

In another development Wednesday, about 1,000 Bantu refugees left Mogadishu refugee camps for their homes in the south.

They are among the thousands of people who fled their farms during the three-year civil war.

Agriculture extension helps flood victims

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

It may take two or three years for some farmers to recover from the floods of 1993, but the K-State Agricultural Cooperative Extension Service is helping ease the process.

"They will not go out because of one bad year, but because they are already dealing with other rough years before, they have no cushion to deal with the flood," he said.

Farmers are in need of financial guidance and technical advice to rehabilitate fields, Griffin said. Some also need mental health counseling.

"The stress levels are high," Griffin said.

"Tough weather and tough finances have combined to strain family relationships."

In cooperation with the Extension Service, the Farmers Assistance Counseling and Training Service runs a 24-hour information hotline, Griffin said. FACTS employees try to answer farmers' questions about clean-up assistance and disaster aid, he said.

"We are working closely with other government agencies such as the Red Cross," Griffin said. "We realize that the recovery may not be complete once these agencies leave, and we are trying to assess unmet needs."

FACTS is only one of many other divisions within the extension service that are working to assist farmers affected by the flood.

Extension specialists are, among other things, conducting educational workshops, answering questions on radio call-in shows and producing TV programs intended to help farmers deal with problems stemming from the summer's adverse weather, Ray Lamond, K-State extension specialist in soil fertility and management, said.

Everyone, including the extension specialists, are having trouble coming up with viable solutions to some of the problems created by the floods, Lamond said.

"It is frustrating because there is very little research data available on flooded soils and how to rehabilitate them," Lamond said.

Lamond said he has seen flood damage during his travels through the state.

"I've seen huge potholes created by erosion, and I've seen areas where several feet of sand were deposited," he said.

Correcting these problems will be difficult and sometimes impossible to correct, Lamond said. The sand, for instance, must be removed because it is a poor growing medium for crops, he said.

When the sand is less than 8 inches deep, it can be plowed under. But if it is deeper than 8 inches, it must be hauled away, Lamond said.

"Either option is expensive and in some cases it may not be economically viable to do," Lamond said.

"Farmers are going to have to do a lot of pencil pushing."

Crop production is likely to be affected for several years, not only because of the deposition of sand but also because soil nutrients and organic matter were washed away, Lamond said.

"It may be two to three years before these sites get back to their production potential before the flood," Lamond said.

D.A. says justice not perfect

Monday of one felony count of mayhem and four misdemeanor assaults on motorists, faces a possible sentence of eight years in prison. He remains in jail. Sentencing was set for Dec. 7, to be preceded by a hearing on Dec. 1.

Watson was convicted of only one misdemeanor, which has a maximum jail term of six months.

They were acquitted of a total of 14 felony counts.

"Justice is not perfect. It's certainly not perfect in this case," said District Attorney Gil Garcetti, whose office was flooded with angry calls about the verdict. "Perhaps justice is always imperfect."

Edi Faal, Williams' lawyer, said the defendants were widely overcharged.

"From the beginning we felt the individuals charged with assaulting Mr. Denny did so with no specific intent to kill Mr. Denny," he said. "We decried the district attorney's decision to file excessive charges."

Watson's mother, Joyce, fell sobbing into the arms of her husband. A gasp went up in the courtroom, and defense supporters whooped with joy when the verdicts were read.

After the verdicts, Williams' mother, Georgina Williams, stood in a court hallway, her arms linked with friends. They sang "Praising My Savior, All the Day Long."

She smiled. "I said it wasn't over 'til the fat lady sings," she said. "I just sang."

Last week, the case seemed headed for a mistrial when the judge replaced a black woman juror after fellow jurors said she was failing to deliberate. Four others also were replaced during the trial that began July 28, three for personal reasons and one for talking about the case with friends.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

■ Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. # Don't ask until class is over

Dear Cassandra,

I'm 21 years old, and my problem is I've fallen in love with this woman. She is pretty, intelligent and a real classy person. The problem is she is 32 years old, and she is my professor. She isn't married, and I don't think she is seeing anyone.

Should I tell her my feelings for her now or wait until after the class is over? Should I say anything at all? Do you think there could be problems with our age difference? I've heard of older women being happy with younger men. Are there rules prohibiting this sort of thing by K-State? Please help me.

Signed,
Uncertain about romance

Dear Uncertain,

Lots of questions you have here. I'll do my best to answer them all.

First of all, if you decide to tell this woman about your feelings, you should wait until the class is over. It is my feeling it is unethical for a student and teacher to be involved in a relationship while the class is ongoing.

There are no specific University rules concerning this, but I know other universities have similar policies discouraging students and teachers from dating while in class together. There is, however, a policy regarding sexual harassment. Be careful your behavior does not step into that arena.

Regarding the age difference, it may or may not be a problem. It doesn't have to be, by any means, but everyone has their own ideas about age. I suspect you'll have to consult with this woman about her thoughts on the issue.

Lastly, you mentioned you've heard of older women being happy with younger men. That's true, but this, again, is a matter of individual preference. What I'm saying is that you can't generalize on the preferences of all women. Every person is different on what they want from a relationship.

It can't hurt to tell her how you feel after the class is over. But there is the possibility of rejection.

REVIEW

Los Lobos

Oustanding music featured in new collection

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

Hooray for lazy Sunday afternoons.

To recover from this weekend's festivities, kick back with a soulful compilation from one of Los Angeles' most durable and talented bands — Los Lobos.

"Just Another Band From East L.A.: A Collection" features Steve Berlin on saxophone and keyboards; David Hidalgo on guitar, vocals and accordion; Conrad Lozano on bass; Louie Perez on drums; and Cesar Rosas on additional guitar.

This two-compact disc, 41-song compilation showcases the 20-year-old band with live tracks as well as previously released and unreleased material.

The first tracks from the compilation take the listener to the Barrio of Los Angeles. "Volver, Volver, " "El Cuchipe," "Sabor A Mi'" and "La Bamba" highlight the early days when Los Lobos primarily worked Cinco de Mayo parties, VFW and American Legion Halls, performing for anyone who liked the flavor of Spanish music.

As Perez explains in a recent press release, he wanted the compilation to show where the band has come from since the beginning.

"We didn't want to just have a greatest hits package," Perez said. "What we wanted was a testament to our roots. We've never lost sight of the reason we got together and we thought that, for a retrospective like this, it was important to uncover our musical heritage.

Another important musical style Los Lobos displays successfully is rhythm and blues.

From Texas-style to Tower of Power, the band cooks up some boogie-woogie numbers hot enough to melt any foot-tappin' inhibition.

Upbeat, mean and dirty, both "Don't Worry Baby" and "Shakin' Shakin' Shakes" rock the house.

Conversely, an absolutely breathtaking cover of Marvin Gaye's "What's Going On" softens the heart and soul.

Surprising, some of Los Lobos' material shows a country music influence.

Like its blues material, Los Lobos takes a simple backbeat and makes it sound good.

For example, "One Time One More" is fun and filled with musical talent.

It rolls like a fast-moving convertible down a deserted highway.

The best parts of the two-CD set are the vocals from Hildago and the featured live material. While Hildago's beautiful, rich vocals are similar to those of Jack Bruce and Steve Winwood, Los Lobos' live tunes spotlight how intricately and pleasantly the band conveys a musical message.

When listening to "Just Another Band From East L.A.: A Collection," grab some friends, fill a tall glass with any favorite beverage and enjoy some outstanding music.

Don't worry. Los Lobos will provide a wonderful way to wrap up the weekend.

Widespread Panic at Wareham

Athens band plays for K-Rock's 3rd anniversary

SUSAN HATTEBERG
Collegian

Expect a mixture of Grateful Dead, the Allman Brothers Band and the Blues Traveler when Widespread Panic hits Manhattan.

Widespread Panic, a band from Athens, Ga., will be playing at 10 p.m. Friday at the Wareham Opera House.

Jason Wright, program director for KMKF-FM 101.5, said Manhattan is fortunate to have a band like Widespread Panic. K-Rock is sponsoring the band for its third anniversary.

"They are a tremendous band and play quality music," Wright said. "This is the kind of show that will appeal to the market and bring people out."

Steve Anthony, disc jockey for K-Rock, said this is not a show to miss.

"Widespread Panic is an incredible band, definitely a live band," he said. "It's a guitar-rich sound with strong percussion."

The band plays a mix of folk, alternative and country rock, Wright said.

"They rock a little harder than the Grateful Dead and have some southern tendencies," he said.

Wright also said the band has strong jazz influences.

In addition, Anthony compared the band to the Allman Brothers Band.

"It's southern rock. It's organic — a neat sound," Anthony said, "Widespread Panic is in the same class as Blues Traveler."

Anthony said Widespread Panic is an improvisational band, and every show is different. The band doesn't use a song list.

"They just go up on stage and whatever rolls, rolls," he said.

Anthony said Widespread Panic is one of the most popular touring bands and the hottest touring act on the road.

He said he wants to see more bands of this nature in the Manhattan area.

"If you like the Salty Iguanas, Lonesome Houndogs and L.A. Ramblers, you'll like Widespread Panic," Anthony said. "You would be a fool to miss this show."

Before the show, Wright said K-Rock will have on-air interviews with the band at 3:30 p.m. In addition, an autograph session will be held at the Wildside.

Doors to the Wareham open at 9 p.m., Wright said.

Tickets are $10 and are available at Rusty's Last Chance, the Wildside and at L&H Mobile Electronics in Topeka. Tickets will also be sold at the door.

CAMPUS

Club helps with struggles of returning to school

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

A club is being reorganized to meet the needs of nontraditional students at K-State.

Nontraditional students include any students who return to college after leaving school for a few years, Jan Schanbeck, senior in broadcast journalism and club member, said.

The club, formerly called the Nontraditional Student Association, was formed in the 1960s by a group of Vietnam veterans, said Bobbie Piper, sophomore in psychology and sociology and club member.

"It was formed to inform other nontraditional students of other organizations on campus where they can get in touch with people who will help them get through their struggles when they are coming back to school," Piper said.

Although the club is not new to K-State, it is undergoing a reorganization because of low participation, Piper said.

"Because the adults here are balancing a family, a job and are, at times, commuting, participation goes in cycles," Nancy Blaine, assistant director of Adult Student Services, said. "And it's time to get rolling again."

A name change and election of new officers is in store for the club, Schanbeck said.

The group, which has been funded by Student Governing Association allocations in the past, works closely with Adult Student Services, a reference center for nontraditional students.

Orientation information, such as the location of campus buildings, financial aid requirements and registration guidelines, are discussed among members to familiarize nontraditional students with the campus, Piper said.

"We also help in getting to know other people on campus," Piper said. "It's nice to see a friendly face and to be able to stop and talk with someone."

Community service is a goal of the club. Members collected teddy bears and donated them to the Riley County Police Department and emergency shelters for needy children last Christmas, Schanbeck said.

The club is searching for a faculty adviser in order to gain organizational status.

"This is kind of a demanding group," Blaine said. "Our lives are very complicated, and it takes lots of advisement."

Members agree that the club is a valuable tool for nontraditional students.

"It is needed," Blaine said. "The adults don't have lots of time, but it is nice to sit down and commiserate about children, spouses and school because most of their peers aren't doing this.

"That kind of support is important for them to be able to finish school."

Legislature may increase tuition

Money will be used to raise faculty salaries

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

Student Senate was informed Thursday night that tuition at K-State will increase 9 percent for in-state students and 13 percent for out-of-state students if approved by the Kansas Legislature.

Sue Peterson, assistant to the University president, said that, if accepted, the proposal would increase tuition at K-State beyond the 1994 academic year.

"It goes up 9 percent every year for the next three years starting in the fall of 1994," Peterson said.

She said all of the money gained from the increases will be earmarked for faculty salaries.

"Our faculty salaries are lagging about 12 percent behind our peer institutions," Peterson said. "Right now, we just don't have the money to pay them."

Peterson said the Kansas Legislature plans to help.

"The tuition increase will be coupled with a 3-percent increase from the state general fund," she said. "You pay 9 percent, and the legislature pays 3 percent."

Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said K-State students pay less for an education, even with the tuition increase.

"Kansas has traditionally been a low-tuition state," Rawson said. "Your tuition bears about 32 percent of the education your receive.

"At our peer institutions, tuition pays for about 87 percent of student education."

Phil Anderson, Faculty Senate representative to Student Senate, said the state pays the remaining 68 percent.

By the fall of 1996, Rawson said faculty salaries should be comparable to that of K-State's peer institutions, which are Iowa, Colorado, Oklahoma, Oregon and North Carolina state universities.

Rawson said $1.6 to 1.8 million will go into faculty, tenure track faculty and graduate teaching assistant salaries.

"After the first couple of years, we'll be at 97 percent of our peer institutions and by the third year, we'll catch up."

Chad Schneiter, engineering senator, asked Peterson if increasing the tuition would have an effect on the ability of some students to attend K-State.

"I think that is a valid question," Peterson said. "We're just unsure."

Ed Skoog, student body president, said he was pretty sure about what the increase would do.

"There are a lot of studies that show conclusively that it does have an effect," Skoog said. "We've all had friends who have had to drop out of school or haven't been able to go to school because it costs too much."

In other business, Senate spent nearly two hours allocating $345.20 to the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society.

Elsa Diaz, engineering senator, suggested Senate allocate $325 to BGLS for a social dance.

"This group has a need for a social event, and the only way they can have it is for SGA to sponsor it," Diaz said.

"They can not just go into Union Station or go down to Aggieville and exercise their freedom because their is not a gay bar or a gay friendly bar in Aggieville."

Steffany Carrel, arts and sciences senator, said in the past, Senate has not funded social functions.

"This amendment and thus the direct funding of this dance is in violation of finance committee guidelines," Carrel said.

Diaz said Senate does not have to follow any guidelines it does not want to.

"The way I understand it is that this body has the freedom to change some of the informal guidelines," she said.

"That is what I am doing."

Senate approved zero funding for the dance.

SGA HEARS TUITION PROPOSAL

The three-year tuition increase must be approved by the Kansas Legislature and the governor.

| | Fall 1993 | Fall 1994 | Fall 1995 | Fall 1996 |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| In-state tuition | $786 | $857 | $934 | $1,018 |
| Out-of-state tuition | $3,095 | $3,497 | $3,951 | $4,464 |

■ The tuition figures are semesterly and do not include student fees. In-state tuition would increase 9 percent each year, and out-of-state tuition would increase 13 percent each year.

Jackson to speak at Bramlage

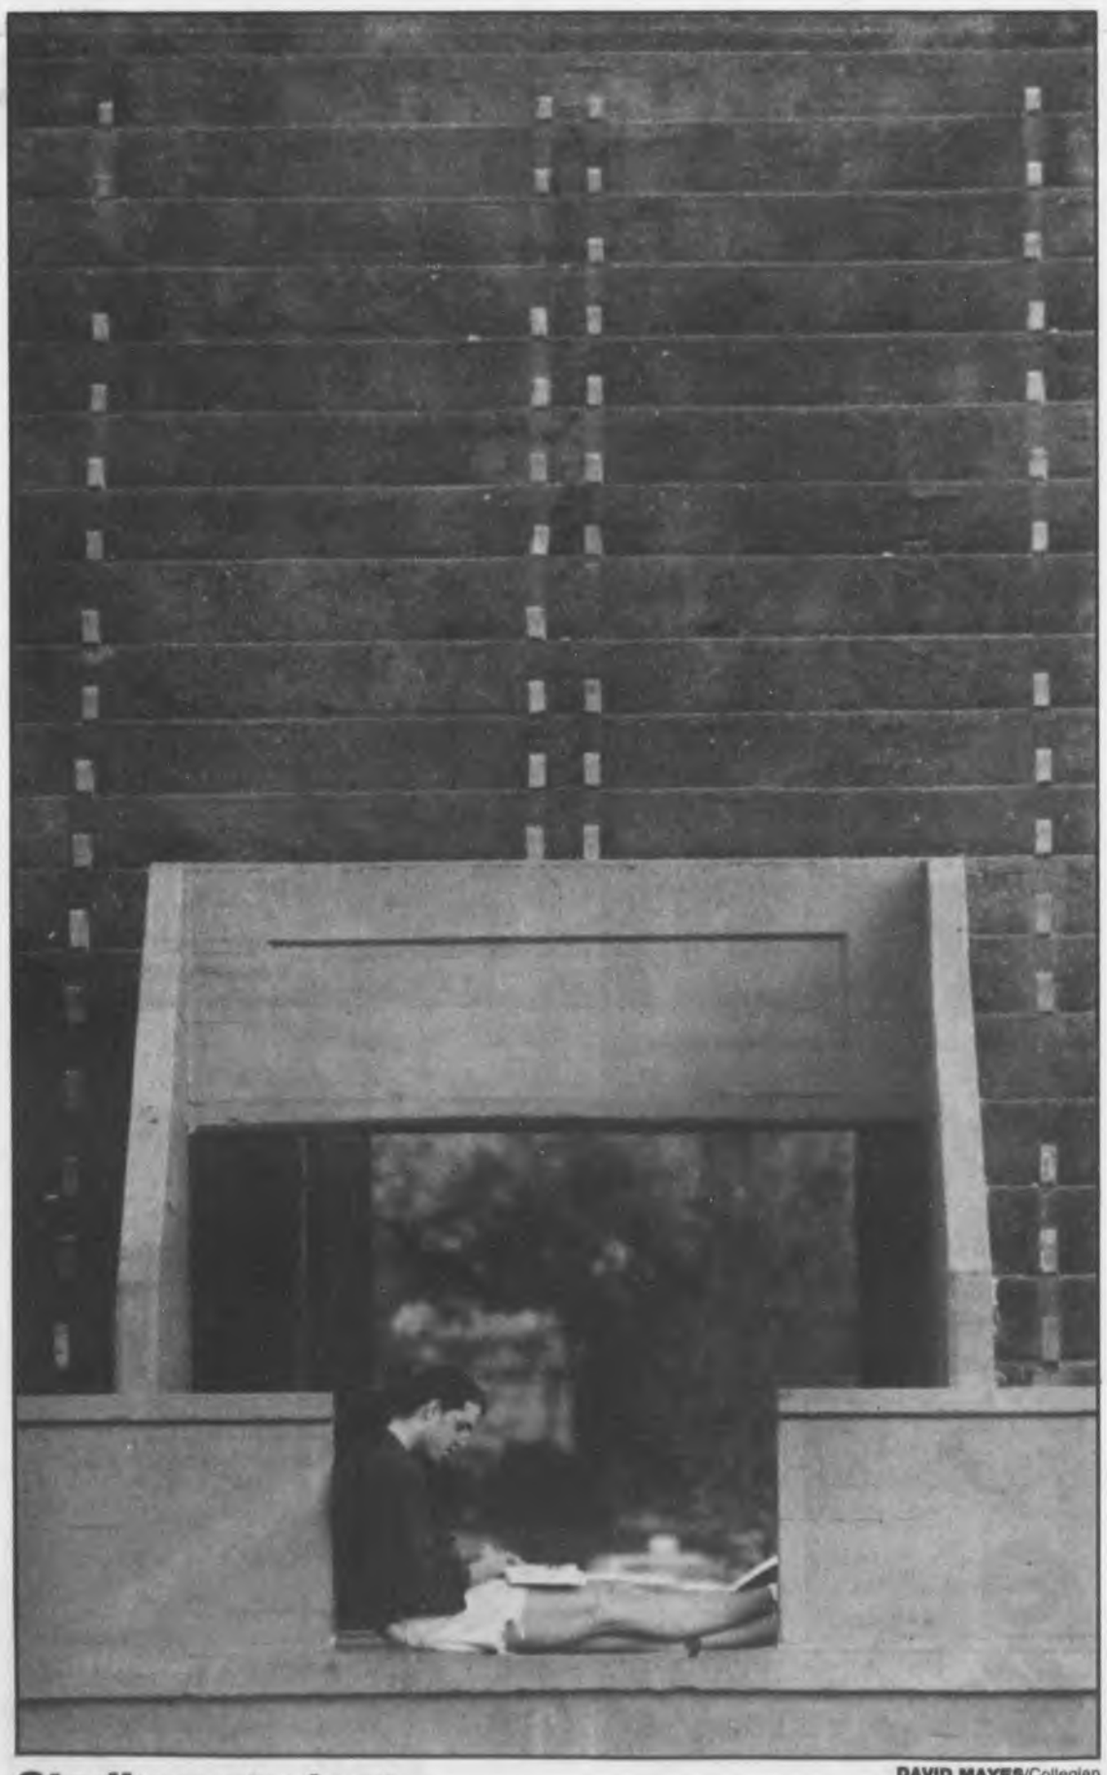
KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Jesse Jackson's Landon Lecture will be at Bramlage Coliseum, not at McCain Auditorium as reported Wednesday in the Collegian.

Jackson's lecture is still scheduled for 10:30 a.m. Nov. 29.

"Bramlage is appropriate, based on the expected number of people who will want to attend Jesse Jackson's speech," Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture committee, said.



The audience for Jackson may be larger than the overflow crowd that attended Pat Robertson's Oct. 12 Landon Lecture, Reagan said.

"We think, due to Jackson's high visibility, there will be a lot of interest from area schools to attend as well as the public at large," Reagan said.

McCain is preferred for Landon Lectures because it is more convenient for students to attend, and it is easier for Landon patrons to walk to the luncheon that usually takes place after the lecture, Reagan said.

Reservations for Bramlage had not been confirmed until after the press had been notified of Jackson's scheduled appearance Tuesday morning, Reagan said.

"Confirmation was made sometime later that day," he said.

Kidnappers add to tensions in Haiti

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Militia reportedly grabbed a legislative ally of Jean-Bertrand Aristide, sending another chilling message Thursday to supporters of the U.N. effort to bring the exiled president back to power.

Samuel Milord, a National Assembly deputy whose family said he was dragged from a house late Wednesday, had only recently come out of hiding since denouncing leaders of the bloody coup that ousted Aristide two years ago.

His seizure followed the assassinations of pro-Aristide businessman Antoine Izmery on Sept. 11 and Justice Minister Guy Malary a week ago. Malary was part of the interim government appointed by Aristide, Haiti's first freely elected president, under a U.N. plan for restoring democracy.

Although the army commander Raoul Cedras signed the plan in July, increasing violence and threats by army-backed civilian gangs have derailed the timetable for implementing the plan and rebuilding this impoverished nation.

A U.N. embargo on fuel and weapons shipments, enforced by at least 11 U.S. and other warships, was reimposed Tuesday to pressure Haiti's military leaders to live up to the accord for returning Aristide to office Oct. 30.

For the first time since the embargo was renewed, lines of cars formed at gas stations in the capital and along the highway to Leogane, 25 miles to the southwest. Although Haiti is thought to have about three months of fuel reserves, there appeared to be a slow-down in the delivery of fuel.

Prime Minister Robert Malval's government, which recommended the sanctions, said he had received a statement from fuel distributors saying they would respect the U.N. sanctions.

The office did not say whether the statement was signed by all three international companies that distribute fuel: Esso, Texaco and Shell. Executives could not be contacted immediately for comment, and it was unclear whether they would defy any order from the army to release fuel.

Parliament has been trying to draft laws to implement provisions of the U.N. democracy plan, and Milord's abduction likely was a warning to lawmakers not to proceed. Many soldiers and rightists oppose the plan's requirement for the army to give up control of the police and for Cedras to step down.

Two weeks ago, Milord told the Associated Press that he was on a death list circulated among army-allied civilian gangs.

Family members told local radio that militia burst into a

Student, doctor tell about their experiences

As American and Canadian warships move into Haitian waters, one K-State student said he believes Americans are receiving the wrong impression of the events taking place in Haiti.

Michael Bonnefil, a native of Haiti and senior in finance and accounting, said Americans are not being given all the facts.

"The people of Haiti do not want Aristide returned," he said. "The man is crazy."

Bonnefil said during his term, Jean-Bertrand Aristide committed acts against people's human rights, and these were presented to the United Nations.

"Cedras had documented incidents about crimes and beating, but these were ignored. The United States wants Aristide back in power, not the people of Haiti," he said.

A Topeka doctor, who was on medical mission, returned from Haiti Monday and said President Clinton is in a bind.

"I feel that the Clinton administration doesn't want Aristide in power, but they don't want to allow a coup of a democracy," Robert McElroy said.

"Aristide is a violent, leftist, defrocked priest," he said. "A large segment of the people who voted for him are afraid for him to return."

Aristide openly promoted the killing of his rival during a public speech.

"During a speech he said he enjoyed the burning smell of his rival's flesh," Bonnefil said. "Haiti was pretty peaceful before the coup and now. Haitians aren't violent people."

"The people of Haiti do not want another country telling them how to run their country."

MICHAEL BONNEFIL
NATIVE OF HAITI, SENIOR IN FINANCE AND ACCOUNTING

Bonnefil said his relatives in Haiti told him the violence is mostly along the ports.

"The people of Haiti do not want another country telling them how to run their country," he said. "The United States didn't send troops to Russia when they tried to overthrow Yeltsin."

During the summer and now, the foreigners have felt safe, Bonnefil said.

"My friends who have visited went out to the bars and all around and didn't feel threatened," he said." The U.N. officers hung out at the hotel and really did very little."

McElroy said things were tense in the town of Cap Haitian, but the doctors he was with were not afraid.

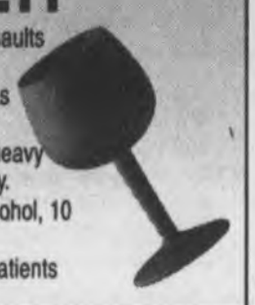
The job of the peacekeepers has brought some animosity against the United Nations.

"It was a bad joke in the area that I was in," McElroy said. "The peacekeepers were paid $4,000 a month to sit around the hotels by the pools."

Like all embargoes, the poor are always hurt the most, he said.

"Shops have gone out of business," McElroy said. "It is estimated that one salary feeds at least 10 people."

They have found ways to get around the embargo, but people are still suffering, he said.



Bonnefil said it bothered his family and others that American ships were already in Haitian

DRUG ABUSE IN SOCIETY

- As many as two-thirds of homicides and serious assaults involve alcohol.
- Overall use of alcohol, illicit drugs and cigarettes has declined, but heavy use has not subsided.
- Men are three times more likely than women to be heavy drinkers and twice as likely to use marijuana frequently.
- By eighth grade, 70 percent of youths have tried alcohol, 10 percent have tried marijuana and 2 percent cocaine.
- Between 25 and 40 percent of all general hospital patients are there for alcoholism-related complications.

Mother sues county and school district

KANSAS CITY (AP) — The mother of a teen-ager who drowned in Wyandotte County Lake while on a school outing has sued the Kansas City, Kan., school district and the owner of a boat-rental service.

Vanessa Green, mother of 15-year-old Randy Payne, filed the lawsuit Tuesday in Wyandotte County District Court.

Green claims her son, who couldn't swim, wasn't given a life jacket to wear while on paddleboats the students and the school district rented. She also contends the school district was negligent in not notifying her a picnic was planned or that the district intended to rent boats.

The lawsuit seeks damages of more than $50,000.The school district declined comment on the lawsuit.

Woman test drives car through window

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. (AP) — Ed Parker thought someone had an accident when he heard metal crunching and glass breaking in the showroom of his Independence car dealership.

But police said it was no accident Wednesday when a 34-year-old woman drove a new $30,000 Chrysler LHS through the glass storefront of Champion Chrysler-Plymouth Inc.

And she kept going, careening into several cars before stopping.

No one was seriously injured. The dealership's sales manager was cut on the knee when a cubicle toppled onto him. Police had no record of any other injuries.

Parker said usually the batteries would have been disconnected on the cars in the showroom, but he was planning to move the cars later to make

Substance abuse study warns of costs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cigarettes, alcohol and drugs are killing more than 500,000 Americans a year and spawning a host of social maladies from street crime to homelessness to gang violence, according to a new study.

Unless Americans stop abusing these substances, efforts to hold down spiraling health costs are doomed to failure, the study's sponsors said on Thursday.

Three-dozen organizations representing the nation's doctors, lawyers, employers and educators responded with a call to make substance-abuse prevention and treatment a top national priority.

The study sponsored by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation and conducted by researchers at Brandeis University cataloged the toll exacted by substance abuse.

It estimated the total economic cost of smoking, drinking and drugs was a staggering $238 billion in 1990 alone.

That included $99 billion in alcohol-related costs, $72 billion from smoking and $67 billion from drug abuse.

Israel agrees to release Arab prisoners

TABA, Egypt (AP)— Israeli and Palestinian negotiators reached agreement on the release of Arab prisoners Thursday, but differences remained over the withdrawal of Israeli troops from occupied lands.

By early next week, Israel will free four categories of prisoners: women, the sick, and people younger than 18 and older than 50, according to a joint statement released after the talks.

The accord was the first concrete agreement to come out of the talks at Taba on implementing Israel's pact with the PLO on Palestinian autonomy.

Delegates refused to say how many people would be released. But the Mandela Institute in the occupied West Bank city of Ramallah, which tracks prisoners, said 715 fall into those four categories.

"The release of prisoners will be implemented gradually and continually," the statement said, but delegates said the timetable would be discussed at further talks.

Israel had said 12,000 Palestinians were being held, but Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said Thursday that the number was 9,500. There was no immediate explanation for the discrepancy.

Date rape acquittal sparks British debate

LONDON (AP) — The acquittal of a London University student in a date-rape case has touched off a firestorm in Britain, bringing demands that laws be changed and rekindling the debate over what sexual consent means.

Photos of Austen Donnellan, who was found innocent of raping a woman student after a drunken party last Christmas, appeared on the front pages of nine national newspapers on Wednesday, a sign of the intensity of the debate.

It has focused on some of the same issues that have driven the date-rape controversy in the United States: the legal definition of rape, college disciplinary codes and efforts to shield the identities of women in rape cases.

CORRECTION

The article on Mon., Oct. 18 titled "Bad Checks Persist In Manhattan" needs a correction. If the defendant comes in prior to the court date, the defendant must pay the service charge, filing fee, the registered mail letter fee, the amount of the check and attorney fees. The defendant then avoids paying for damages and the full amount of attorney fees. A second error was in the example describing what damages are. In the example, damages would equal $600, which is three times the amount of the check and does not exceed the amount of the check more than $500. The Collegian regrets the errors.

White Faces Day recognizes drunk-driving fatalities

BACCHUS members try to raise awareness

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

Last year, 105 people in Kansas were killed in alcohol-related driving accidents. It could happen to you.

That was the message behind White Faces Day, an event presented Thursday by BACCHUS (Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students).

Students who participated in the event painted their faces white and walked through campus wearing signs that read: "I am unable to speak today because I represent one of the 105 people who were killed last year in Kansas in alcohol related traffic accidents."

By not saying anything at all, the people in the white faces were trying to say a lot. Most of all, they were trying to create awareness.

"People need to understand that it can happen to anybody," Kiersten Lundblad, a BACCHUS member who helped organize the event, said.

Lundblad, sophomore in English, was involved in a drunken-driving accident 10 years ago. It inspired her to become involved with this event, she said.

"Out of the five people in the car, I was the only one who survived," Lundblad said. "People need to realize that statistics were once people."

Christine Farr, co-organizer of the event, said she became involved because her high school had a similar day.

"That had an effect on me," Farr said. "We need to reach out to university students and make them realize that it can happen to them."

The responses Lundblad has received from people upon seeing her white face have been mixed, she said.

"Some people read the sign and say 'Oh, that's good.' Some look at it as a game and try to get me to talk, but they are still aware of what it means. The awareness is important," she said.

Farr said she would have liked to pull people out of classrooms to paint their faces and get them to participate.

"But you can't do that here," she said.

As Lundblad went to class Thursday morning, she got a lot of interesting looks and double-takes. Once people read the sign, however, their responses changed.

"At first I thought it was something for Halloween," Linda Rowlison, sophomore in social work, said, "but I think it's a good idea. It makes people aware of the dangers of drinking and driving."

Rebels kill Burundi's president

Soldiers fight resistance; officials in hiding

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NAIROBI, Kenya — The president of Burundi was seized Thursday in an army coup that halted the tiny Central African nation's transition to democracy and stirred fears of new ethnic bloodletting.

In Belgium, Burundi's former colonial power, BRTN radio said unidentified sources reported the rebels had killed President Melchior Ndadaye. BRTN said Burundi's neighbor, Rwanda, had broadcast similar radio reports, but that none of the accounts had been confirmed.

Earlier reports from Burundi said Ndadaye, 40, and three Cabinet ministers were being held at a military base near the capital, Bujumbura, and a search reportedly was underway for other leading government figures.

Burundi's minister of information told state radio in neighboring Rwanda that soldiers were putting down resistance to the coup and that he and other government officials went into hiding in the capital after Ndadaye was seized.

"We have noticed spontaneous movements of demonstration in favor of President Ndadaye, which are apparently being violently suppressed by the soldiers," Jean-Marie Ngendahayo said to Radio Rwanda by telephone. "The entire town is currently tightly controlled."

The country's borders and the port at Bujumbura were closed, and a 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew imposed, according to radio reports from the region monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp.The United States and other Western countries condemned the assault on Burundi's infant democracy and suspended millions of dollars in aid.

The Burundi embassy in Rwanda said the coup was masterminded by former President Jean Baptiste Bagaza and led by the army's chief of staff, Col. Jean Bikomagu. The coup leaders belong to the minority Tutsi tribe while Ndadaye belongs to the majority Hutus.

Burundi, a mountainous country about the size of New Hampshire and with a population of 5.4 million, lies on the northeast side of Lake Tanganyika and is bordered by Tanzania, Rwanda and Zaire. Its people survive mostly on subsistence agriculture.

Tens of thousands have been killed in periodic clashes between Hutus and Tutsis since the country won its independence from Belgium in 1962. Although a minority, the Tutsis dominated Burundi's government and economy until Ndadaye became the first democratically elected president in June.

Communications to Burundi were cut. It could not be determined if there were any casualties when the army stormed the national palace before dawn.

Alcohol policy strayed from campout rules

The traditional K-State campout for season basketball tickets should be preserved.

The campout is part of the excitement of K-State's basketball season.

But last year's unfortunate alleged rape forged an underground movement to discontinue the campout.

Tuesday, an Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity member who wasn't signed up on AGR's campout roster was found with alcohol, which is in violation of the campout rules as amended in the Fall 1992 semester.

The amendment strictly states that "no alcohol shall be allowed at the campout. A camper found in possession of alcohol, as well as his/her group, will lose the group's place in line and be removed from the campout area."

The AGRs were bumped to the back of the ticket line after being found in violation of this amendment. They later withdrew from the line entirely.

The Athletic Ticket Sales Committee, which bumped the AGRs, is responsible for organizing and regulating the campout. It is made up of one ATSC chair and nine student members.

This year's policy stated that, on a first offense of the alcohol amendment, a group would be moved to the end of the line.

The second offense would result in the removal of the group from the campout area. This policy was handed out to all groups at the beginning of campout.

Everybody knows what they can and can't do.

Dale Silvius, senior in management and marketing and chair of the ATSC, said he wrote up this year's campout policy.

The 1992 amendment says nothing about first and/or second offenses, just the first offense that expels the group from the campout.

Theoretically, by Silvius' policy, a group in last or next-to-last place could have alcohol and get caught and not lose any place in line and still get tickets.

This may be stretching things a bit, but it is still possible.

All parties involved should have checked the wording of the rules and applied them to the campout.

The campout is a time-honored tradition. Let's all follow the rules to ensure the campout for future K-State basketball fans.

Senseless violence only stigmatizes KSU

Editor,

Very recently, K-State had its annual forensics/competitive speech tournament. Of course, many schools were in attendance.

One of those was Oklahoma University. After competing, the OU squad returned to its vehicle to discover it had been vandalized. Windshield wipers were torn off, and serious damage was done to the mechanism.

Unlike athletic departments, most speech teams, like all academic activities, are underfunded. We here at K-State are lucky to have a supportive staff. OU, however, does not have the kind of funds to take care of vandalism on this scale.

Many of us on the forensics squad have friends on other teams. It does not look friendly to force another squad into paying $400 for repairs to a squad vehicle.

I have this advice for whoever did the damage: Grow up. OU is a squad of higher learning, not thugs. They did not chase you down and pummel you. Was it that important to force a group of academic kids to risk their life on a six-hour ride home in the rain without windshield wipers?

We are an academic institution first, and unless we act like adults, we will always be perceived as out of control junior high kids instead of people who want to learn.

Law to blame for poor verdict, not jury

Editor,

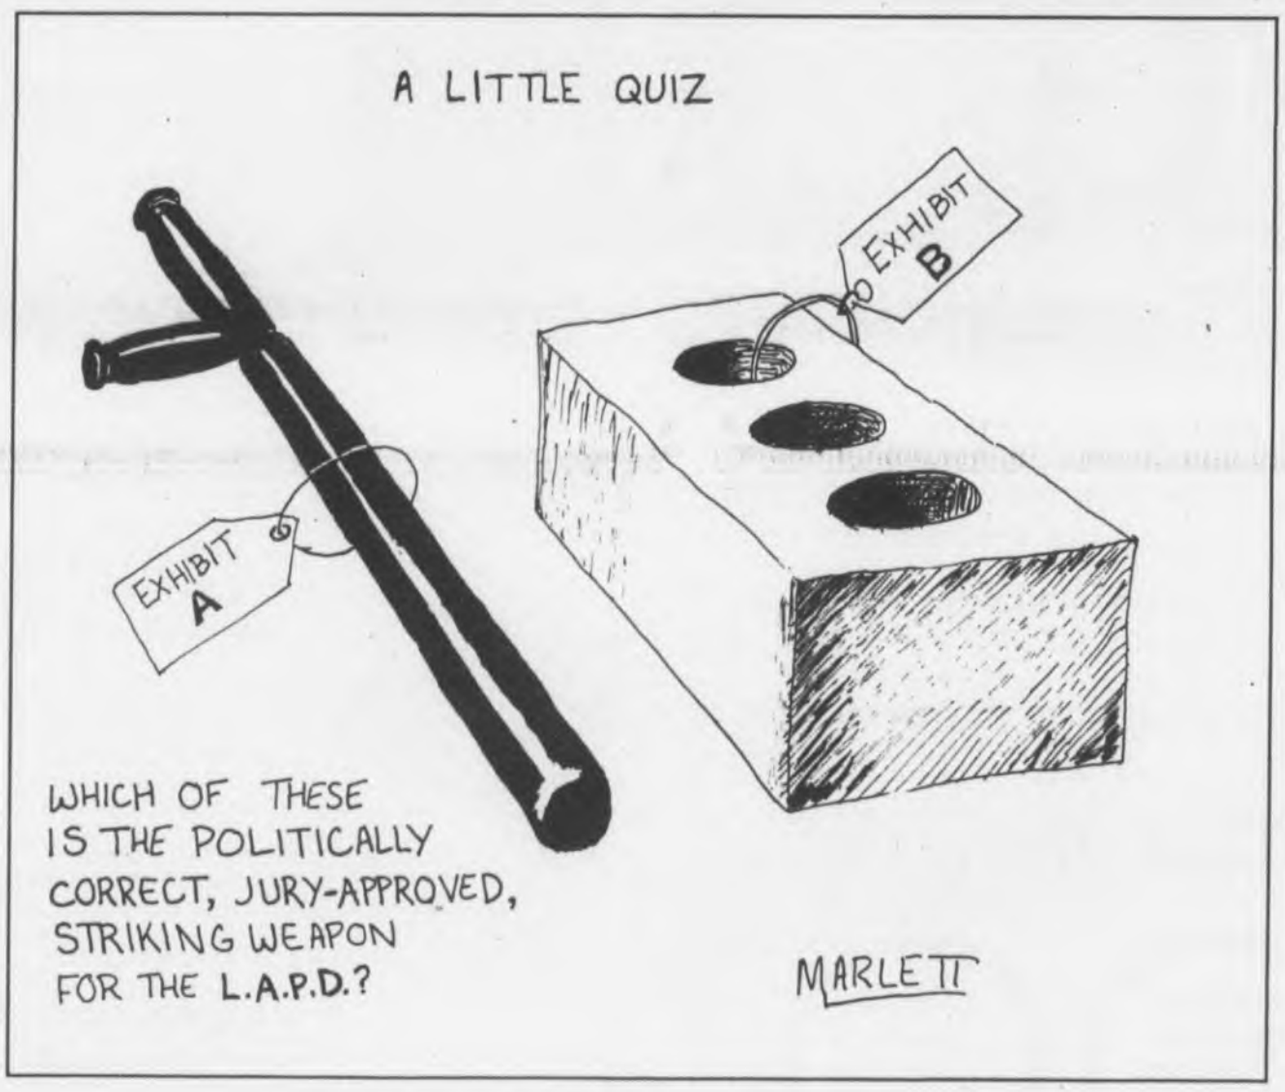
Although I, too, was surprised by the verdict in the Reginald Denny beating case, I must disagree with the unsigned editorial that appeared in the Collegian Oct. 21.

It is true that a mob mentality does not release an individual from responsibility for his actions, but you implied that the jury was at fault in this case.

The jury found Mr. Williams and Mr. Watson innocent under the same set of laws that acquitted the police officers that beat Rodney King.

If you look at both of these cases, the outcomes have been very consistent.

This points not to a biased jury, but rather to poorly written laws.



Perhaps, instead of blaming the jury, a more constructive response would be to examine the laws under which these cases were tried and reassess them in light of these two trials so that the same situation does not occur again.

As far as the comments surrounding the quote by Rev. Leonard Jackson, there is truly a sense of true justice surrounding the Denny case.

It served to prove the Rodney King verdict was not racially motivated but was rather the result of a set of laws that were followed by the letter by the juries in both cases.

MARLETT'S WORLD

Robertson, Phelps promote negativity

On Monday evening, Fred Phelps staged a demonstration against me because of statements I had made at the Pat Robertson rally. I would like to share the concerns I expressed at the rally regarding compassion and justice for women, for our gay/lesbian and our pluralistic religious communities.

I am troubled by the hate and often the violence Fred Phelps fosters.

At the rally, I affirmed Pat Robertson's right to express his views, even to politicize them. I also support Fred Phelps' right to express his views.

However, his challenges to debate, his protests and actions become a platform for proclaiming his agenda, his hate and punishment toward the homosexual community. Dialogue is impossible; human dignity is violated in his actions to disrupt worship services and funerals of homosexuals.

My concern is that Fred Phelps and Pat Robertson would like to enforce by law their religious views on all people. In our pluralistic society, the beliefs of Jews, Christians, Muslims, Buddhists, American Indians and atheists are to be protected and respected under the separation of church and state. Pat Robertson's Christian Coalition is supporting a movement toward state-mandated prayers in the public schools, censorship of literature, required teaching of creationism, funding of private schools and the elimination of sex-education programs.

The Christian Coalition has a stated goal to control the Republican Party.

Its detailed manual spells out how to gain grass-roots political offices and school-board membership using what are called "stealth" candidates. They deceitfully conceal their hidden agenda until after election and then attempt to enforce by law their goals on the whole community.

Although faith in God is important in the private and public life of Americans and does influence our political decisions, our Constitution protects us and our children from majority and minority religious rule.

We are not a "theocracy." Our KSU Religious Guidelines support our freedom of belief and practice, encourage interfaith dialogue, even persuasion, but always with respect for religious diversity, pluralism and the right to individual conscience and belief.

Although both men claim to hold the correct religious truth, neither represent the whole Christian community. In my understanding, the essence of the Christian Gospel is God's unconditional love for all — calling us to stand in compassion, particularly with the oppressed and marginalized persons in our society.

In his opposition to the Iowa Equal Rights Amendment movement, Pat Robertson accused the ERA supporters of encouraging women to "leave their husbands, kill their children ... and become lesbians." Such attitudes stereotype women into a narrow family role, increase guilt, stifle freedom of lifestyles and growth, foster low self-esteem and may lead to abuse — the very legalism Jesus confronted.

REV. DON FALLON
GUEST COLUMNIST

The Christian Coalition would deny women by law the right to choose a therapeutic abortion — a choice that should not be an issue of government, but of individual conscience.

Fred Phelps claims "God hates gays." Pat Robertson states God loves the homosexual person, but not the behavior. These views underlie so much of the guilt and fear of homosexuals.

For two years, I have served on our KSU Bisexual/Gay/Lesbian Task Force commissioned to give support and safety to our gay/lesbian community.

Our survey has uncovered homophobic attitudes, hate and even violence undergirded, at times by literal, selective Biblical interpretations.

There are other Biblical interpretations based on the historical context of a time when sexual orientation, as we know it, was not known to Biblical writers.

Biblical references refer to exploitive sexual behaviors whether heterosexual or homosexual or to sexual behavior in non-interpersonal cultic worship. The Bible is silent as to what sexual behavior is appropriate in a loving relationship — heterosexually or homosexually.

Based on the heart of the Gospel, God's unconditional love for all and Jesus' ethic of the new commandment, "to love one another," I see same-sex loving, committed relationships, as with heterosexuals, as a gift of the Creator.

I believe most, not all, gay/lesbian persons do not choose their sexuality — it is their endowment.

Our University Task Force will recommend a network of support, a call for acceptance and an affirmation of human rights. Fred Phelps and Pat Robertson would deny by law equal rights (not special rights) to gay/lesbian persons — the right to a job, access to housing, and freedom from fear and violence on the streets.

Pat Robertson sees even a loving, committed homosexual relationship as sinful. Such views reinforce guilt and isolation, feed homophobic attitudes when we desperately need open and public advocacy and support for gay and lesbian persons. I am aware the No. 1 cause of death for homosexual youth is suicide, often a result of fear and guilt.

In one last cry for help, a student who I'll call Jim came to our home on a Saturday afternoon after going to Tuttle Creek Reservoir to take his life.

For three hours he knelt on our living room floor pounding the sofa, tears running down his face, crying out, "Why did God make me this way?"

Jim had sought psychotherapy to change his sexual orientation; he tried marriage but was not compatible; he joined the army but was released on an incompatible discharge. The church where he sought acceptance called him a sinner and a queer.

He longed for family support and love, but when at Christmas he told his parents of his sexual orientation, his father, a physician, threw him out of the house.

Now is the time for love and compassion given in very different and painful decision-making.

Now is the time to break the silence and give public and open support, human and civil rights to our gay/lesbian friends.

Now is the time for affirmation of our humanness and openness to loving relationships, not a closure of mind and emotions.

Now is the time for freedom of conscience, respect for diverse beliefs and persons.

Now is the time for dialogue and understanding of multicultural diversity as we have affirmed in our recent Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, as we plan for Martin Luther King Jr. Week.

Now is the time for a world view that identifies with the marginalized and the oppressed.

This is the time for non-violence and a time to affirm our oneness under God.

This is the time to "love our neighbor."

Treat yourself to 'Hello Dolly'

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

REVIEW

Playing to a near-capacity crowd, "Hello, Dolly!" was an unmitigated success and certainly one of the better efforts made here at K-State.

Dolly Gallagher Levi, played by Aggie Callison, reigned like a queen and managed to act and sing beautifully, although the speakers had annoying feedback. Her voice carried well, with little need for the microphone she wore. Her character was well-developed, and the title song was more like a Broadway production than a college level musical.

One of the highlights of the musical was Irene Molloy, played by Karen Doerr. Her voice was incredibly beautiful and full of feeling.

The only problem was with the microphone attached to her dress, which kept cutting out when she moved or added to her costume. Her voice carried well, though, and was easily heard throughout the auditorium.

Horace Vandergelder, played by Kevin E. Kelly, was hilarious in his attempts to find a mate who would perform the duties of a "proper wife."

One would expect problems to occur with the movable set, which was rearranged on the stage during practically every scene. However, the only problems were when the edges of the scenery scraped together. At first, the moving set was a little annoying, but as the audience grew accustomed to it, it added to the musical.

The costuming was as grand as the rest of the production and seemed authentic to the time period of the musical, which was set in New York, 1898. Despite the size of the heels on the shoes they wore, the actresses seemed to have no fear of falling as they danced and flung themselves about the stage set.

In short, this musical is a must-see and well worth the $7 price.

Drugs cause weight loss

MILWAUKEE — An experimental combination of two widely used diet drugs produced dramatic weight loss and reduced high blood pressure, sugar and cholesterol to normal.

"This is comparable or superior to any medical treatment of obesity," said the study's author, Dr. Richard L, Atkinson of the Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Hampton, Va.

Atkinson and his colleagues gave the two drugs to 506 women and 57 men, most of whom have been followed for at least six months, and some for more than a year.

The subjects also were encouraged to exercise, counseled about changes in their eating behavior and were limited to 1,200 calories per day. Most adults eat at least 800 more calories daily than that.

After three months, the patients had lost an average of 22 pounds. That climbed to 29 pounds at six months and 37 pounds after nine months, Atkinson reported Wednesday at the annual meeting of the North American Association for the Study of Obesity.

Blood pressure in 49 subjects with high blood pressure dropped to normal. Twenty-four patients with high cholesterol saw those levels fall to normal, Atkinson said. And blood sugar — an indication of diabetes — also dropped to normal.

"That's dramatic stuff," he said.

The combination of the prescription drugs — fenfluramine and phentermine — was superior to either drug alone, he said.

"We're fixing high blood pressure, high sugar and high fats by treating the underlying disease — obesity," Atkinson said.

"It looks to be very effective," said Dr. David York of Louisiana State University. Questions remain about whether the drugs will continue to work over the longer term and whether they will have any side effects if given for years, York said.

The drugs appear to be safe in the short term when taken individually or together, Atkinson said. But he, too, said longer studies are needed to be certain they are safe, because patients may have to take them for a lifetime to keep the weight off. Atkinson plans to continue the study for five years.

The drugs are chemically similar to amphetamines but don't produce the stimulating effects that can lead to abuse, Atkinson said.

The study follows a report last year by Michael Weintraub of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, who was the first to try the drug combination. Weintraub showed that it was safe and effective for up to 3 1/2 years, Atkinson said.

The study underscores what Atkinson said is the growing belief among obesity researchers that diet, exercise and behavior change are not enough in most cases to produce long-term weight loss in overweight people.

"We need to look for additional treatments," he said.

No. 16 Colorado next for Wildcats

Ten-game home winning streak on the line for K-State

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

K-State has only scored 21 points in the last four years against Colorado.

Since 1990, the Wildcats have scored just 10 points to the Buffaloes' 128.

K-State will try to narrow that margin against the 4-2 and No. 16 Buffaloes at 1:10 p.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium.

The Cats, 5-1 overall, 1-1 in the Big Eight and ranked 25th in USA Today-CNN Coaches Poll, will face the worst defense in the conference in Colorado.

The Buffaloes have given up an average of 413 yards per game, but last week, the Buffaloes held Oklahoma to 286 total yards in a 27-10 Colorado win.

Oklahoma also gained just 98 yards on the ground.

K-State coach Bill Snyder said the Buffalo defense came together last weekend.

"They went through some personnel changes, partly because they were giving more of their youngsters more playing time. It took a while for them to gel," Snyder said.

"Holding Oklahoma to less than 100 yards of rushing is quite a feat."

Snyder said the best way to attack the Colorado defense is for his offense to control the ball.

"We've got to run the football more, throw high-percentage passes and keep the ball in-bounds," Snyder said.

"If there was a plan to run, that would be the way."

Snyder said the Buffaloes will be one of the top teams the Wildcats play this year.

"Colorado is the best balanced football team we have faced," he said.

"Their offense presents a lot of problems. I have great respect for Colorado.

"We have fine athletes, but I don't think there are many teams in the country that can match them position by position."

Colorado coach Bill McCartney said the win against Oklahoma last week was pivotal.

"The game was a turning point for our season," said McCartney, who has won his last eight games against K-State.

"If we lost, we'd be sitting 3-3 and questioning ourselves.

"We took our frustration and turned it into something positive," he said.

"It had been a frustrating season up until this point, and all that talk about us not competing in the Big Eight or playing well on the road wasn't fair."

Snyder said he would like to see his defense cause more turnovers.

The Cats were second in the turnover margin last season but haven't recorded a takeaway in the last two games.

"We have been attacking the ball, but things aren't bouncing our way," Snyder said.

"We've got to win the turnover margin against them. I would like to see them bounce in our way."

Containing quarterback Kordell Stewart is going to be another problem, Snyder said.

"You almost have to have 12 guys out there," Snyder said of defending Stewart, who leads the Big Eight in total offense with 266 yards a game.

"They'll spread the defense thin. A defense either has to protect the run or the pass. Then, he takes off. It's going to be a dilemma."

Snyder said another problem is the Buffaloes' running attack.

"We are going to have to defend the run well," Snyder said. "That is the most significant part of the game. It will be a real challenge for our secondary."

Cornerback Kenny McEntyre said it is important for the Cats to keep its 10-game home winning streak intact.

"We want to beat Colorado. We don't want to lose at home and break the winning streak," McEntyre said.

The Cats have won 19 of their last 21 games at home, the last loss coming to Colorado in 1991.

Quarterback Chad May said he is ready for the Buffaloes.

"If we drop two games, it will be very disappointing," May said. "I have all my focus on Colorado."

Snyder said he thinks Colorado is the favorite to win the Big Eight.

"I think there are several good teams in the conference," Snyder said.

"It looks like we are playing the best team in the conference."

VOLLEYBALL

Hagge hoping to spark Cats to 1st Big Eight win

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State volleyball team will take the court against No. 11 Colorado Saturday night in Ahearn Field House, and sophomore outside hitter Suzanne Hagge said she will be trying to repeat her Wednesday performance.

Against Missouri, Hagge had 23 kills to lead the Wildcats in a 3-2 loss. But Hagge said even though she racked up kills, it didn't matter unless the Cats were winning.

"My kills felt better when the team's attitude was positive," Hagge said. "When we were down, and the team's attitude wasn't up, the kills didn't feel the same for me. It was the hardest volleyball that this team has played all season."

Earlier in the season, Hagge wasn't getting much playing time because Coach Patti Hagemeyer was using a different line-up. Hagge said the time she spent on the bench has been difficult, but at the same time, it was also necessary.

"I'm not going to lie," Hagge said. "It was hard sitting on the bench, but it was something that I needed to go through. My goal was to start this season, and if I didn't start, I was prepared to be in the games mentally."

In the third game against Drake, Hagemeyer switched the line-up around and gave Hagge an opportunity to play. Hagge said she now considers herself important to the team.

"Now that I'm playing, I consider myself a leader," Hagge said. "I'm not the oldest, but I am an older player with my experience from last season. I have found that I have to be very vocal to help motivate people."

Hagemeyer said that Hagge hasn't reached her peak yet, and Hagge agrees with her coach.

"I believe everything that coach says," Hagge said. "I know that I don't always do well in practice, but that just makes me work hard. I know that I can do better and that I have a lot of potential."

Hagge also said the Cats shouldn't be timid going into Saturday's match, even though Colorado is ranked 11th in the nation and first in the Big Eight Conference.

"I think that we don't need to be scared of playing a team like Colorado," Hagge said. "We need to approach the game just like we are playing an unranked team. To win, we have to play our game at our level, not at theirs.

"A freshman on the team commented that the upperclassmen played scared up against them last time. We don't need that type of attitude. Everyone has to give 100 percent and be mentally prepared for Colorado."

The Cats are in a four-match losing streak, and they haven't won a Big Eight match in 22-straight matches. The loss against the Tigers dropped the Cats record to 7-12 and 0-4 in the Big Eight this season.

It also has been 11-straight matches since the Cats defeated the Buffaloes.

Coach anxious for rowing tournament in Knoxville

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

Calm waters and cool weather await the K-State rowing crew at the Head of the Tennessee Regatta this Saturday in Knoxville, Tenn.

Coach Alex Binkowski said he is anxious to see how the team will compete.

"I'm hoping to see how competitive we are outside the Midwest and how we stack up to other crews our size," Binkowski said. "We are expecting good rowing conditions. The Tennessee River runs through the middle of Knoxville and is wide and flat."

Binkowski said he is expecting good races from all of the rowers.

"I'm looking for great races from the novice men and varsity women who rowed well in Kansas City," he said.

The rowing crew had some top finishers in the Head of the Kaw Regatta last weekend.

Amy Bowman, freshman on the women's squad, said the teams placed high in their events in Kansas City.

"The two novice women's boats placed second with a time of 14.41 and 15.03 minutes, and the men's novice placed third and fourth in the two mile open race," Bowman said.

The women's varsity eight-woman boat placed third, and the men's varsity four-man boat placed seventh, Bowman said. The men's varsity open placed fourth and fifth in the head race.

Binkowski said he is looking for the Manhattan High School team to win at the Tennessee Regatta.

"I'm expecting the Juniors (the name of the Manhattan High School team) to really clean up and to win," he said. "The Juniors competed in the open race in Kansas City and came in one second behind the men's varsity boat."

Binkowski said he has been pleased with the performance of the team this season and is excited about the upcoming race.

"Frustrations have been high, and our motivation has been low, since our racing and practicing time have been so little," he said. "This regatta will be good experience for our new men's varsity members, but most of all, I want the team to have a good time and enjoy themselves."

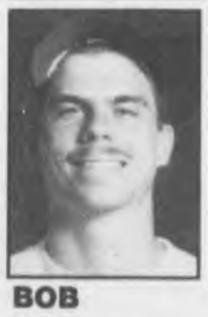
An analogy of respect between gridiron and forest

A long, long time ago, in a forest far, far away, there was a bunny rabbit named Carl. He was quite an intelligent animal, but Carl was widely regarded as a wimp. The fact he had purple ears didn't help matters any, either.

Anyway, every year at wilderness school, the same things happened. Carl was repeatedly beaten by the other bunnies in the wilderness-school equivalent of gym class.

Away from the gym, however, Carl succeeded quite often. Unfortunately, these victories never attracted him much attention or respect.

Not from his classmates, his neighbors nor his superiors. Nobody but those close to him cared because he always lost in the gym.



Carl very much disliked being ignored. He would try something new every year to get over that hump. At times, this seemed to do more harm than good. Carl just began to confuse himself, and things would just get worse.

With frustration building, Carl was about to give up and resign himself to going through life as an anonymous bunny. There would never be any respect from his peers, despite his classroom successes.

It was at that point in his life that Carl met an important friend. He met Henry. Henry was going to be the new wilderness-athletics teacher at Carl's school. Henry took a liking to Carl and proceeded to take him under his wing.

As he was getting to know Carl, Henry continually tried to figure out what was keeping Carl from success. After a short while, it became apparent it wasn't a lack of ability or knowledge that kept Carl down. It was purely a confidence problem.

There were very few rabbits around Carl that thought he could succeed. Consequently, Carl didn't think he could either. Henry took it upon himself to instill that confidence in him.

BOB LEHMAN

It was rough going for the both of them in the beginning. Carl found it difficult to believe in himself, and Henry found it difficult to "teach" confidence. They believed in each other, though, and the effort came easy.

Before long, there was marked improvement in Carl's showings. He began to challenge, and even defeat, other rabbits. This confidence stuff was working!

All the rabbits around him started to notice Carl. They were also beginning to respect him and what he was doing. Much to Carl's credit, his classroom prowess remained unaffected during this time. This, most of all, gained the respect of his superiors.

Finally, after several terms, Carl had improved so much he started to consistently beat several of the other rabbits.

Not only that, but even the really big rabbits started to worry about him. It was obvious it was only a matter of time before Carl would take one of them down, too.

Combining all his newly gained confidence and ability with all the respect and support he was gaining from those around him, Carl finally broke through. He beat one of the big rabbits. He challenged Ralph. He beat Ralph.

Things would never be the same for good old Carl.

Carl always had the desire. It took Henry to instill confidence. The rabbits around him supported him. Those are the three ingredients needed for success.

Our Wildcat football team is in much the same situation as Carl the rabbit. The Wildcats have the chance to break through against Colorado tomorrow.

They have two of the ingredients for success. It is up to us, the fans, to provide the third: support.

If we get off our hands and use our vocal cords, the Cats can do it. It won't be easy, but it is possible.

If Carl could do it, so could the Cats. Let's help.

Tripping Daisy shares legacy with Jane's Addiction

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

It's amazing what a talented singer can do for a good band.

There are a lot of good bands out there. Dallas' Tripping Daisy is one of them.

REVIEW

In its debut release, "Bill," Tripping Daisy churns out 10 meaty tracks that more than prove the band's label-worthiness.

Bryan Wakeland plays his drums forcefully and effectively. Mark Pirro's bass flies all over the place; yet, it isn't busy enough to clutter up the flow of the songs. Wes Berggren sets up a wall of scratchy guitar that screams to be noticed.

The standout member of Tripping Daisy, however, is singer Tim DeLaughter. He sets the band apart from its competition and is undoubtedly the reason Island Records picked these guys up.

DeLaughter's voice has the same ethereal bite that propelled Perry Farrell and Ozzy Osbourne to fame. It seems to float above the music, drawing on the energy of the rhythm and feeding it back twice as strong.

Thanks to DeLaughter, a comparison between his band and Jane's Addiction is inevitable. Tripping Daisy sets up the same type of groove as Farrell's old band, layering simple changes and shuffly rhythms to create a monstrous sound.

DeLaughter's lyrics weave in and out of this vibrant montage, tying it all together. The lyrics themselves are thoughtful and precise.

DeLaughter sings of overwhelming confusion and frustration and makes them sound enjoyable. His vocals have an almost-conversational quality to them, telling listeners a story, asking them for feedback.

The album's opening track, "My Umbrella," typifies the band's appeal. Tripping Daisy ups the energy ante beat-by-beat, working up to a chorus then washes over the ears in catchy waves.

The catchiness continues throughout the album, all the way to "Triangle," the final track. "Triangle" features a couple of slow, poetic breaks that reek of old Doors tunes like "When the Music's Over."

Anyone who sits through five minutes of silence at the end of "Triangle" would be treated to a beautifully deranged, three-minute soliloquy. Delaughter describes a twisted walk through a psychedelic jungle with a girl named Pink Jelly.

That's as good a metaphor for Tripping Daisy's sound as any.

U.S. remains, negotiation sought

Boutros Boutros-Ghali may visit Somalia

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — U.S. Army Rangers began heading home Thursday, their mission to capture clan leader Mohamed Farrah Aidid eliminated by the United Nation's emphasis on finding a peaceful solution to Somalia's problems.

But Mogadishu remained tense. Rumors circulated that U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali might visit the U.N. peacekeeping force, sparking fears of riots.

The first 105 Rangers boarded two planes back to the United States. Journalists were allowed to photograph their last-minute preparations but were not permitted to ask questions.

The Rangers arrived Aug. 26. They were put in charge of finding and arresting Aidid, the faction leader who had gone underground since 24 Pakistani peacekeepers were killed June 5 in coordinated ambushes blamed on his militia.

But intelligence breakdowns led to a couple of quick embarrassments for the Rangers, including a raid in which they arrested U.N. aid workers by mistake.

An Oct. 3 battle that killed 18 American soldiers, a Malaysian peacekeeper and, according to Aidid, 300 Somalis led to the re-emphasis on political negotiations that had somewhat withered since June.

While Aidid remains wanted with a $25,000 bounty on his head, he no longer is being actively sought, officials said.

Other U.S. reinforcements have been arriving daily. In addition to tanks and other heavy armor, they include 5,200 soldiers on the ground, a 200-member Air Force contingent and 3,600 Marines anchored off the coast in landing ships.

Their task is to provide security for U.S. troops and other U.N. forces and to back up any peacekeepers who run into trouble.

About 750 Rangers — an initial group of 400, about 250 reinforcements and 100 support personnel — are going back to the United States during the next few days.

Diplomatic efforts are continuing, but have reached a stalemate, with both U.N. officials and representatives of Aidid's faction claiming the ball is in the other's court.

Other factions have said they will not negotiate directly with Aidid, who they claim wants to be president of a rebuilt Somalia.

Boutros-Ghali, an Egyptian Copt, is widely disliked in predominantly Muslim Somalia. A visit to the country would run against President Clinton's recommendation.

▶OBESITY RESEARCHERS FROWN ON NEW CREAM

MILWAUKEE (AP) — One of the developers of a cream that appeared to shrink women's thighs says it can't be concocted at home from other remedies that contain the same active ingredient.

Dr. Frank Greenway and his colleagues reported that the cream reduced the size of women's thighs by one-half inch to 1-1/2 inches over five weeks.

Obesity researchers expressed doubts about whether the cream was truly reducing fat and whether its effect would persist. Yet, many agreed that further testing was in order.

"One of the worst things we can do in science is to stone things like this, say it's no good," said Dr. Ahmed Kissebah of the Medical College of Wisconsin, who organized the meeting where the research was presented. "I think we should give it a chance."

Greenway's office in Marina del Rey, Calif., was besieged Thursday by callers seeking more information.

That'll teach you to wear ugly green suits in public

Michael Allen just didn't know when to quit.

Allen recently shot himself in the foot while making a court appearance in Flint, Mich. He had been charged with credit card fraud, automobile theft and concealing weapons, all stemming from a Sept. 24 house robbery.

He showed up at the hearing with a green double-breasted suit, presumably trying to make a good impression on the judge.

There was just one problem: The suit belonged to the man whose house was robbed.

Okay, so there were two problems: That man was in the courtroom.

"He's wearing my suit," the victim hollered in court.

The victim, whose name wasn't released, suggested a check of the label in the jacket. The suit was custom-made and had a unique label, he said.

Sure enough.

Allen then was then hit with a new charge: receiving and concealing stolen property.

The suit was seized as evidence.

In unconfirmed reports, Weekend learned that Allen was later arrested for indecent exposure and disturbing the peace, the result of his naked rendition of the Bobby Fuller Four's "I Fought the Law," sung while he was walking home from the courthouse.

America held hostage: Rush invades holidays

We can just hear it now:

"'Twas the night before Christmas when all through the house, not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse — most likely because Mom had just completed her weekly house cleaning.

"The stockings were hung by the chimney with care — irregardless of what those wacky environmental tree huggers think about the stolen plant fibers that make up the stockings — in hopes that St. Nicholas soon would be there."

Ahh, yes. Weekend can think of no better way to start off the holiday season than by hearing Rush Limbaugh, that cuddly conservative, recite "'Twas the Night Before Christmas" on a Christmas album.

Indeed, Limbaugh is joining forces with other Hollywood types in a holiday album that benefits charity.

'Tis definitely the season for jolly, plump men whose large bag of goodies is, in the minds of millions, nothing but make-believe.

'Get down, turn around, go to town ... get stitches'

Country music star Kix Brooks has been boot scootin' a little too hard.

The 38-year-old Brooks, half of the duo Brooks & Dunn, accidentally smacked himself in the face with his guitar on stage in McMinnville, Tenn., recently.

That's right — he smacked himself in the face.

The incident left him with a black eye and a cut that required seven stitches.

Brooks & Dunn was voted the duo of the year by the Country Music Association. Among their songs is "She Used to Be Mine."

She used to be yours, Mr. Brooks? Suddenly, we understand why.

PHONE TAG

Time: 10:15 a.m.
Date: Thursday, Oct. 21.
Place: K-State Union.
Number of rings: 3 (a new low!).
Answerer: Tricia Britt.
Year and major: sophomore in elementary education.

Q. Why did you answer the phone?
A. "Because I knew it was you guys. Nobody else would call a pay phone in the Union."
Q. So, were people actually fighting to get to the phone, all hoping to talk to me?
A. "Actually, no." (I'm shocked.) "We were sitting here before when you tried to call that one guy. He walked off — so we just figured it was you again."
Q. That other guy was a nice guy. It's just that he was here on business and was talking to his fiance on another phone.
A. "That takes talent. He was talking to both of you guys."
Q. Yeah, he was pretty smart. Must have been a KU grad.
(awkward, annoying silence here)
A. "Uh! That wasn't very nice. I just got that!" (Already? Case in point.) "So, who invented this idea anyway?"
Q. It was one of those deals where a bunch of Collegian editors were all sitting in a circle, passing around a bottle of vodka and seeing what we could come up with.
A. "So, you guys are normal students after all." (Hey — that's pretty good!)
Q. So, other than Calvin and Cassandra, do you read the Collegian?
A. "Yeah. I read the (columns) just because they piss me off. You know, the people who are on their soap boxes tirading about nothing. A highly objective newspaper, you guys are not."
Q. Wow. That's awfully harsh.
A. "I'm not judging you guys. I'm just telling you like it is."
Q. Well, don't do it anymore.

WEEKEND

WHAT'S GOING ON: A quick look at some events in and around Manhattan.

▶ SATURDAY

The K-State/Colorado game will be at 1:10.
It will be televised at 10:30 p.m. on Prime Sports Network (Channel 24).

The K-State/KU rugby match will be at 1:30.
The game will be played in Lawrence at Shenk Park.

THIS WEEKEND CAMPUS WILL BE OVERFLOWING WITH STUDENTS' FAMILIES

Clean the house, leave the books out and empty the fridge — Family Weekend is here.

Families will be arriving from all over to spend time with their K-State students, whether it be attending the football game, touring campus, eating out or going shopping.

About 642 tickets have been registered for Family Weekend activities, which represents more than 3,600 individuals, Becky Klingler, director of constituent programs, said.

"A lot more families will be here, though," she said. "This year there are a lot of formalized tours and new activities, which include the siblings. The weekend keeps growing."

Departments, organizations, greek housing and residence halls have formed together to welcome the families of K-State students to Family Weekend, Friday through Sunday.

Throughout the weekend, departments will be giving tours, having receptions and barbecues.

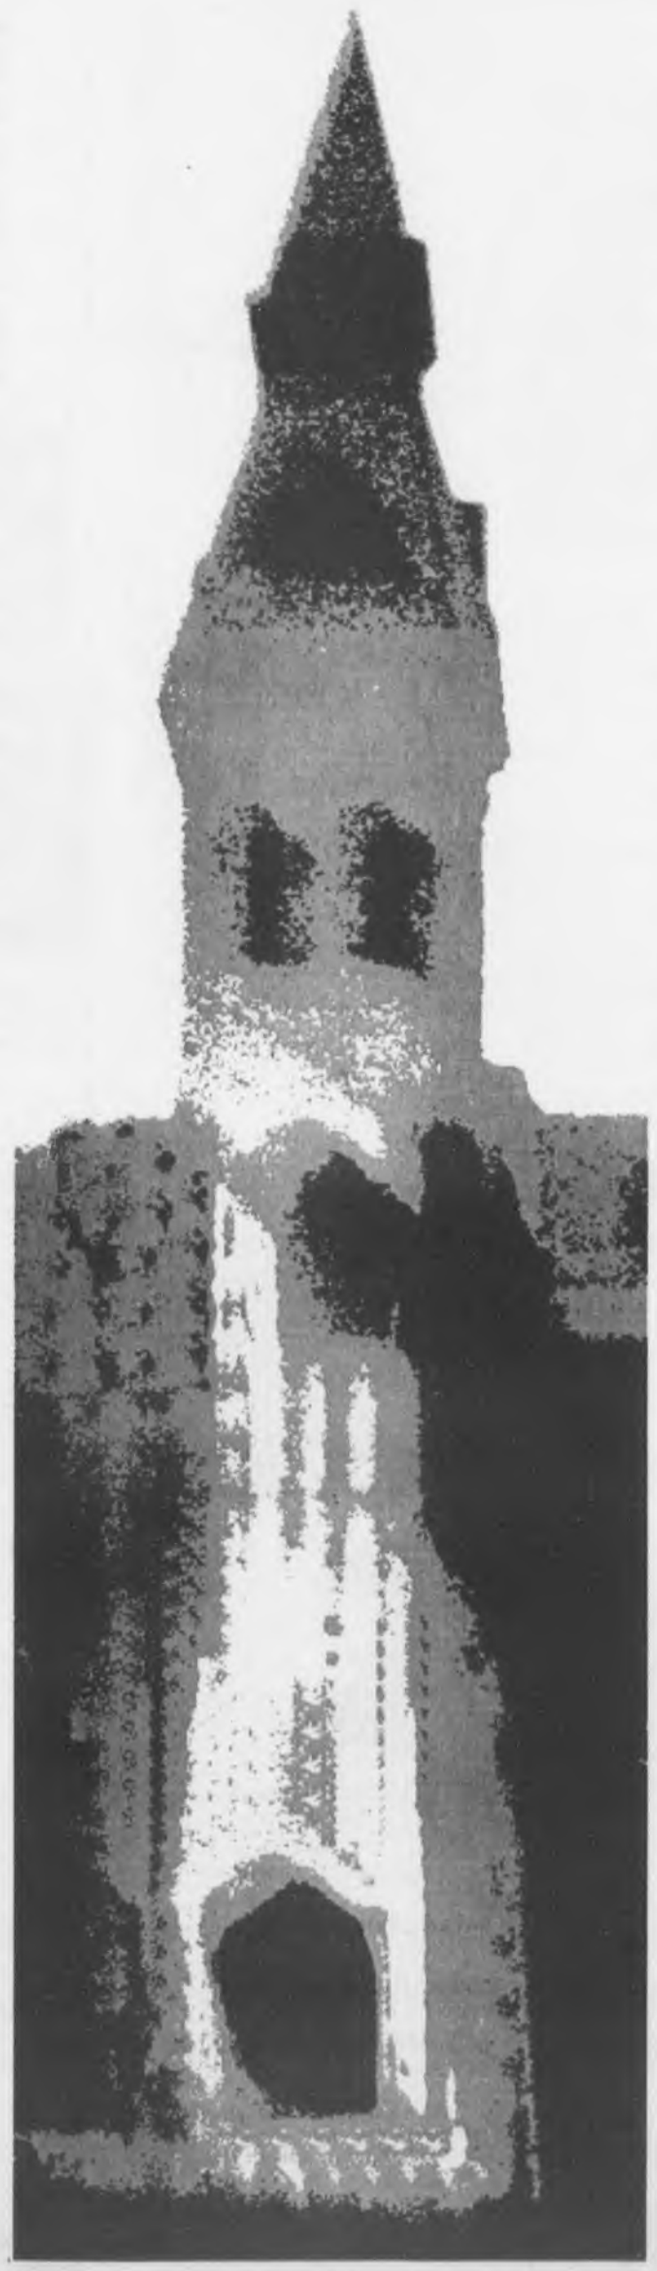
Garrett Cress, freshman in architecture, said he is looking forward to attending the architecture cookout with his parents, even though they live in Manhattan.

The K-State Union also will be having a pig roast, burger bar, family and pasta buffet during the weekend, Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said. This has been a tradition for several years.

With 670 pre-registered tickets, the family buffet has already been sold out, Klingler said. There also have been about 350 tickets sold for the pig roast. The dinners seem to be going over well.

Besides serving food, the Union will be extending hours in the bookstore, and they will have a variety of entertainment in the Union Courtyard. One of the most popular features is getting a family photo taken with Willie the Wildcat.

Klingler said about 150 picture spots have been reserved for Willie the Wildcat.



Even though the University has a lot of Family Weekend activities planned, many students are not sure what they will be doing with their parents besides going to the football game.

The most popular event of the day is a given — the football game. An attendance of about 30,000 is expected to cheer on the Wildcats.

"I can't wait to kick back with my dad and have a few brewskies before the game," Dan Ott, sophomore in nuclear engineering, said. "We will probably do the tailgating thing."

Paul Freeland, freshman in architecture, plans to tailgate with his parents.

"My parents and I are going to tailgate after we eat at the architecture dinner," he said. "I also plan on introducing them to my house mom and fraternity brothers and watching a slide show about the house."

Greek housing is also involved with Family Weekend. Most of them have open house, barbecues or even auctions.

The Delta Sigma Phi fraternity house has a traditional auction every year during Family Weekend.

The parents bring items, such as cookies, quilts or items with the fraternities letters on them, to auction off to the other parents.

"My mom always makes two quilts, which sell for about $250 each," Jerod Overley, junior in business management, said."She has done this for three years."

Last year the auction brought in about $2,000 to spend on house improvements, Jane Copp, Delta Sig housemom, said.

"The auction has become bigger every year," she said. "This year we are hoping to raise enough money for a computer, which the fraternity has wanted for a long time," she said.

Kyle Shipps, senior in criminology, said his parents will participate in the auction in the morning and then attend the football game. He said he wasn't sure what they would do after the game.

"After the KU game, my parents said they were going home. However to my surprise, I ended up running into them in Aggieville," he said. "I guess they decided to go bar hopping also. So, I don't know what will happen after this game."

Other students have their parents weekend completely planned.

"My parents are going to listen to me sing in the morning, and maybe I can bribe them into taking me shopping in the afternoon," Karen Looney, senior in psychology, said. "Saturday night, we will eat at the University Inn and then go see 'Hello, Dolly!'"

She said her parents will have to go home because the hotels are booked in town.

"I will send them home and then go out," she said.

Peace Corps experience offers friendship, learning

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

This is the last in a three-part series about K-State student and faculty involvement in the Peace Corps.

Before coming to K-State, many faculty members gained experience working as volunteers in the Peace Corps.

Janet Benson, associate professor of anthropology, served in Kenya from 1964 to 1966.

In Kenya, she had a variety jobs dealing with the redistribution of land to African farmers. She also helped form women's groups and taught members about clean milk production. If given the chance again, she is not sure if she would join the Peace Corps, Benson said.

"It would depend on the kind of project," she said.

"Countries are different, and projects are all different. You don't know what you're getting into before you go."

Benson said she would encourage people to join the Peace Corps but said to do so involves risks. Because Americans begin to look at members of a foreign country as real people instead of in a stereotypical manner while serving in the Peace Corps, Benson said she believes it is sometimes more beneficial for the United States than for foreign countries.

"You make individual friendships and learn how things work," she said.

Benson said she has some concerns about Peace Corps volunteers being sent to areas where they're not needed. She said the administration of a country may make the decision to invite the Peace Corps in, but it doesn't work with the people.

Another has returned to his host country several times since leaving the Peace Corps.

Barry Michie, director of Study Abroad and program officer in the Office of International Programs, served in India from 1966 to 1968.

He worked with rural public health and sanitation for the Department of Medical and Health Services for the government of Rejafthan.

Since his term in the Peace Corps, Michie has returned to India several times and lived there seven years. He will be returning to India next year on a research grant in agro-forestry.

Michie offered advice to students interested in the Peace Corps.

"Don't think of it as a sacrifice. If you do, you will be miserable," he said.

Peace Corps volunteers should have a deep interest in living abroad in adverse conditions and be curious about how other systems work, Michie said.

"Don't go into the Peace Corps to find yourself, because you won't," he said. "It can be a real challenge."

"Have a good sense of humor, even when you make a jerk of yourself. A sense of humor will pull you through the low points."

During his service in the Peace Corps, Michie met his wife, Aruna, who was working as state director for the Peace Corps at that time.

Don Watts, professor of architecture, served in Afghanistan from 1973 to 1975. He said he believes his service in the Peace Corps affected his career choice and how he teaches today.

Because Watts served as an architecture professor at Kabul University and therefore lived in the capital city, he had a higher standard of living than some Peace Corps volunteers.

His living quarters had electricity and running water. Both the water heater and the main heating system used donut-shaped cakes of sawdust for fuel.

"The people were very resourceful in how they used everything they had," Watts said. "They were very creative."

Watts said he had a better understanding of America's relationship with the rest of the world after serving in the Peace Corps.

"I feel I gained much more from the experience than the people I went to serve," he said.

"The Peace Corps is an old organization, although it's changed a bit since I was in it," Watts said. "It's still an organization that is trying to serve the interests of the host country."

Before returning to the United States, Watts spent nine months traveling in other parts of the world.

Other volunteers didn't have such high standards of living.

Damian Bresnan, research assistant for the Department of Horticulture, Forestry and Recreation, served in the Philippines from 1983 to 1985. While in the Philippines, Bresnan lived alone in a bamboo house without electricity and running water.

Bresnan worked as an extension agent for the forestry bureau in the Philippines. One of Bresnan's jobs was working to develop different techniques of soil conservation.

Bresnan said the Filipino people are very nice and love Americans.

"You have friends there like you have friends here."

Faculty award recipient named

Presentation will honor chemistry professor

MIKE HIND
Collegian

The 1993 recipient of the Segebrecht Distinguished Faculty Achievement Award is Professor James Copeland of the chemistry department.

Copeland will receive the award at a banquet at 1:30 p.m. Nov. 2 on the fourth floor of King Hall.

Following the award presentation, Copeland will present a public lecture titled "The Third Law — A Footnote to the Other Three? or: Entropy, Continued."

The award, established in 1986 by the Segebrecht family of Leawood, is named for the late Ervin W. Segebrecht, a 1938 K-State industrial chemistry graduate. Segebrecht, who was a native of Kansas City, had a long and distinguished career as a business and sales manager of the Thompson Haywood Chemical Co. in Kansas City, Kan.

The award is made possible by a monetary donation from the Segebrecht family.

The purpose of the award is to honor the late Mr. Segebrecht and those professors at K-State who provide inspiration and excellence in teaching.

Dale Hawley, professor and head of the chemistry department, said Copeland's work ethic and dedication are some of the reasons he was recognized.

"He is the only chemistry faculty member who goes in the lab each lab period and works with the students," Hawley said. "He is insistent on well-written lab reports."

Copeland, a native of Champaign, Ill., said chemistry just came naturally.

"I was always interested in chemistry," he said. "I became more interested in it in high school.

"My parents encouraged the interest I had, but they had no scientific background," he said.

Copeland, who came to K-State in 1962, said he feels his insistence on thoroughness will only benefit his students in the long run.

"I demand rigorous write-ups for lab reports," Copeland said. "I demand the same as what will be expected of them throughout their careers. We try to model as best we can what the industrial laboratories have. Good science demands you keep accurate records."

Jason Smee, senior in chemistry, said he feels Copeland's accessibility and common sense are of great assistance to students.

"He is easy to get a hold of," Smee said. "If he can't answer your questions, he finds someone who can.

"He seems to have a good feel for classes that are worthwhile for chemistry majors," Smee said. "He knows if a particular class is going to help you out."

Health care plan draws criticism, support

Seventy-five-cent tax to help pay insurance costs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Struggling to regain momentum on health care after weeks of criticism and foreign-policy distractions, President Clinton defended his plan Thursday and won cheers for promising a 75-cent cigarette tax increase.

Clinton rebutted Democratic and Republican critics and cast his health-care plan as not only socially responsible but also hardheaded economically.

"There are times when doing the right thing morally and ethically is also good business," he said to business leaders.

"We can make money if we make our workers more secure and whole."

Clinton unveiled his health-care plan in a nationally televised address to Congress on Sept. 22. But a month later, he has yet to send a bill to Capitol Hill containing the details. Public-opinion surveys show that support for the plan has slipped.

Foreign policy problems in Somalia, Haiti and elsewhere have been the focus of Clinton's attention while the president's critics advanced rival proposals and tried to pick his plan apart.

In the latest political sting, a bipartisan group of senators — led by John Breaux, D-La., and Dave Durenberger, R-Minn. — introduced a managed-competition plan Thursday they portrayed as a mainstream alternative to Clinton's plan. The bipartisan plan does not include Clinton's requirement that employers provide health insurance for all workers or as much regulation.

A day earlier, the National Association of Manufacturers, a business group Clinton had hoped to enlist, criticized the president's plan as too ambitious and said it should be reduced.

The White House released a letter from NAM President Jerry Jasinowski on Thursday that apologized for the negative comments without taking them back.

"Your health-care proposal has far more positive elements than problems," Jasinowski said.

Clinton wants to guarantee health coverage to all Americans by the end of 1997. He would require employers to pay at least 80 percent of their workers' average health-insurance premiums, with employees paying the rest. Small businesses and low-wage workers would get subsidies to help pay their share.

Clinton's speech to Businesses for Social Responsibility, a group that promotes responsible business practices, answered his critics point by point and rejected their alternatives one by one.

The president denied his plan would create a cumbersome bureaucracy of regional health alliances and push the nation too quickly toward guaranteed health coverage for all Americans.

"When you hear all this stuff, that these alliances are big bureaucratic nightmares and government creations, that's not true," he said.

The president said the health-purchasing alliances would merely give small businesses and individuals the same bargaining power already enjoyed by big corporations.

As to complaints his plan was too ambitious in promising coverage to all Americans, Clinton said, "I personally don't think we'll ever get costs under control, nor do I ever think we'll be the society we ought to be. ... until everybody has health insurance.

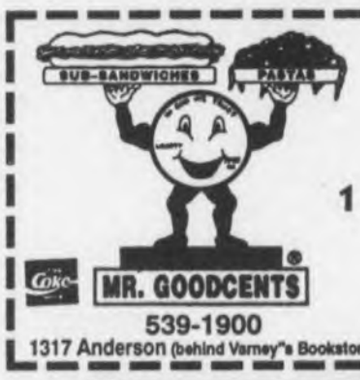
"Don't walk away from the plain obligation to have every American family with the security of health care."

Answering complaints from insurance companies and others about the plan's proposed limits on overall health-care spending, Clinton said there was plenty of room left for cost increases.

"It's not as if we propose to drive folks into poverty," he said.

The president drew cheers when he confirmed for the first time that his health-care legislation — expected to be sent to Congress next Wednesday — would include a 75-cent increase in the federal cigarette tax, now 24 cents.

He said his package also would include a tax on big companies that set up their own health plans rather than joining the health alliances. Administration sources say the tax will amount to 1 percent of payroll.



Separately, deputy budget director Alice Rivlin said the Clinton plan would hold down medical costs in part by putting most people in health-maintenance organizations.

The administration is considering scaling back that subsidy and keeping companies responsible for some of the costs, said an administration official who insisted on anonymity.

Automakers and other heavy manufacturers with aging work forces have complained that footing the bill for early retirement benefits would put them at a competitive disadvantage.

Meanwhile, Hillary Rodham Clinton said Thursday she believes Americans will insist Congress overhaul the nation's health-care system because the status quo is too costly — in money and in human suffering.

"All of us will have to give direction to our members of Congress," she said. "We know what will happen if we do nothing."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Friends don't harass friends

Dear Cassandra,

My problem is my roommate, or more specifically, the guy who is obsessed with her.

Don't get me wrong. He's a nice guy. We both enjoy his company as a friend. But that is all she wants from him.

She has told him this. I have told him this. My other roommate has told him this. But it hasn't sunk in.

He still comes over to visit. He still calls, still asks her out and still goes out of his way to talk to her. He will not leave her alone.

There is no way to avoid him. This is not possible due to the way we are involved with him. It's gotten to the point she is afraid to go anywhere alone for fear she might run into him. And she has to call home to see if he's there.

I'm getting annoyed because it's been going on for two years. What should we do?

Signed,
Tired of this dude

Dear Tired,

If it looks like a duck, smells like a duck and quacks like a duck — you guessed it — it is a duck. And to be perfectly honest with you, this scenario looks, smells and smacks of harassment.

You say you enjoy his company as a friend. That's interesting when you look at this so-called friend's behavior. Ask yourself what friend would continue to behave in the menacing way he has, in spite of your asking him to stop.

It just doesn't sound very friendly.

Sit this "dude" down, all of you, including your roommate who is the object of his pursuit, and tell him again what is wrong. Tell him his behavior is NOT acceptable. Tell him the friendship can be salvaged if he stops the harassment. And tell him quite honestly that you will take action with the police if he does not stop.

This is not an over-reaction. The fact your roommate doesn't like to go out alone for fear of running into him tells me this. It should tell you the same.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES By Gypsy Rose

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Celebrate Mahalia Jackson's birthday tomorrow. Sing, baby!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Forgive your friends for being too frantically busy to send you a birthday card. Please?

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Dads are cool, so show yours some appreciation this weekend. Buy him a drink with your monthly allowance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You had better think about canceling Christmas. During Parents Weekend, friends will tell your mom and dad all about this semester's drunk escapades.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Let the sun shine in today. Open your eyes to the wide world of life.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Swim against the current. Explain to your professors — during class — that their lectures really blow.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Clean your place, open your text books and listen for the doorbell. A surprise visit from Mom and Dad could make or break this weekend.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Don't be a compulsive-obsessive psycho today. Instead, rest your stressed brain with music from pianist George Winston.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Show Mom and Pop all of the best sights in Manhattan: Dillons, Dillards and your favorite drinking establishment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Venus is in your seventh house, and Uranus is on the couch. What's wrong with you, anyway?

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Call that special someone and tell them, after many, many beers, you need them in your life.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): If it weren't for your stamina and endurance, your significant other would leave. Although it's hard, keep up the good work.

REVIEW

'Son-in-Law' forgettable bit of fluff

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

Pauly Shore is Crawl, a California beach bum, in the very shallow comedy "Son-in-Law." Sophomorically speaking, this film is just plain stupid.

Crawl, an older, more experienced college student, changes everything about fellow student Rebecca (Carla Gugino), an innocent farm girl from South Dakota. He introduces her to mud wrestling, booze, materialism and abnormality in general.

In return, Rebecca takes Crawl home for a Thanksgiving weekend to show her appreciation.

But a would-be quiet holiday on the farm becomes more than exciting. Crawl untruthfully says he and Rebecca are engaged, to prevent her from getting engaged to the high-school sweetheart she doesn't love anymore.

The charade the two kids play is somewhat reminiscent of a "Three's Company" episode in which a lie complicates the situation more than the truth would. This plot is very weak.

"Son-in-Law" is simplistic and obnoxious. It is not subtle enough to be witty; yet it isn't even absurd enough to be slapstick. It's just senseless fluff.

The acting only adds insult to injury. Shore, a charismatic ball of energy, is about as endearing as your common gnat.

In addition, Gugino, who overacts on every line she speaks, is easily forgettable. Who did she play again?

The real star in this film is Tiffani-Amber Thiessen. As the bad girl in town, this talented actress gives a comparatively memorable and misplaced dramatic performance that would deserve some attention if in a better film.

There are a few funny scenes in this film, but this is a fairly unsung comedy. This isn't the type of film that overwhelms the viewer with its charm.

"Son-in-Law" is illogical and unrealistic, and, therefore, impervious to analytical criticism. It might just be the perfect way to occupy some time with your visiting parents this weekend, though.

Godzilla returns, battles mutants

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — What's big, loud, vaguely reptilian and vents its spleen by pulverizing Japanese cities?

If you guessed Godzilla, Japan's favorite radiation-mutated building renovator, you're right.

Godzilla will be doing what he does best when "Godzilla vs. Mecha-Godzilla," No. 20 in the series, hits Japanese screens Dec. 11.

The date for U.S. release has not yet been announced.

After 39 years, Godzilla has his job description down pat: Get across town to battle some other horrific mutant beast, and crush everything in your way.

Reckoning that if the monster ain't broke, don't fix him, Godzilla's creators tend to stick to the same formula for every movie.

Director Takao Okawara says about 80 percent of each film's material — the story, special effects, set designs — is carried over from previous films.

"We tried a slight alteration in Godzilla's voice in the last film, but we got a lot of letters from angry Godzilla fans, so we changed it back," Okawara said, referring to "Godzilla vs. Mothra."

Fee proposal threatens NAFTA

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration was told by senators of both parties Thursday that its plan to raise fees on international travelers is costing support for the North American Free Trade Agreement.

There is a non-starter in the proposal to charge arriving plane and train passengers an extra $2.50, Sen. Slade Gorton, R-Wash., said to Mickey Kantor, President Clinton's trade ambassador. "You are in the process of losing supporters without converting any opponents."

Gorton supports NAFTA. Democratic Sen. Richard Bryan of Nevada, who has not announced his position on the agreement, said he finds the transportation fee increase troubling because of his state's dependence on tourism.

The administration originally recommended doubling the $5-per-trip customs fee to replace an estimated $500 million a year that would be lost when the trade agreement eliminates U.S. tariffs on most Mexican products.

Kantor told the Senate Commerce Committee the increase has been reduced and that the administration now favors some spending reductions to help make up the difference.

"That's the best option we have been able to come up with," Kantor said, noting that half the extra $2.50 per trip would come from foreigners. He repeated the administration's willingness to look at any options lawmakers offer.

Meanwhile, Sen. Carol Moseley-Braun, D-Ill., said after meeting with Clinton on Thursday she supports the agreement. Before, she had been leaning toward it. She said to reporters at the White House she was persuaded by arguments there would be solid job retraining programs for any workers who lose their jobs as a result of the pact, although she also said she didn't believe there will be a great number of losers.

The transportation fee already is under attack from two dozen House Republicans, whose support is essential to congressional acceptance of the trade agreement.

The agreement would gradually eliminate most tariffs and other barriers to free movement of goods and services between the United States, Mexico and Canada. It would create the world's biggest and richest trade zone.

The pact is opposed by most U.S. labor unions and by perhaps most congressional Democrats.

KTA members not subject to gift limits

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Members of the Kansas Turnpike Authority may continue accepting gifts in excess of a $40 annual limitation, the commission that administers state ethics laws that apply to state officials and employees ruled Thursday.

Backed by an attorney general's opinion, the Commission on Governmental Standards and Conduct held that the five KTA members and certain employees of the turnpike are subject to state ethics laws.

But in a setback for critics of KTA operations, the commission said the authority's members may legally accept such gratuities as free passes to use the turnpike and expenses for attending international meetings, even if they exceed the $40 limit.

In a unanimous opinion, the commission said it would take legislation to block acceptance of excessive perks and gifts by KTA members.

"The commission has stated once again that the KTA is a state agency. They're not above the law."

ROCKY NICHOLS
DEMOCRATIC REPRESENTATIVE

The commission sent another draft opinion back to its attorney to rework. It concerns an inquiry by Maxey Irwin, campaign manager for Democratic gubernatorial candidate Joan Wagnon, who asked whether EMILY'S LIST, a national group that lines up support for women candidates, is a political action committee subject to regulations that govern them.

The commission instructed its lawyer, Dennis Prater of Lawrence, to toughen the language to express the commission's concern over the bundling of checks from contributors by organizations such as EMILY'S LIST.

Carol Williams, the commission's executive director, said numerous state groups also gather checks from individual contributors and forward them to candidates. Chairman Pete Loux said that constitutes a political action committee activity in his judgment, and the Kansas Legislature should address the issue statutorily because the practice is proliferating.

The turnpike opinion said three legislators who serve on the KTA, Sens. Richard Rock, D-Arkansas City, and Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina; and Rep. Rex Crowell, R-Longton; and Transportation Secretary Michael Johnston are not subject to the $40 gift limitation when they receive perks from the KTA.

"We are constrained to rule that the acceptance of passes on the turnpike and travel by legislators in their capacity as members of the board of directors is not prohibited by (the applicable law), so long as all members of the board have historically been treated equally in this manner," the opinion stated.

Despite that setback, Rep. Rocky Nichols, D-Topeka, who sought the opinion, said he was encouraged because the commission, as Attorney General Bob Stephan did on Wednesday, had determined that the KTA is a state agency, subject to the scrutiny and oversight that applies to all state agencies.

"The black hole is closing," said Nichols, who is among a handful of lawmakers who have led an effort to bring what they say is greater accountability to the Turnpike Authority.

"The commission has stated once again that the KTA is a state agency. They're not above the law," Nichols said. "Before, the turnpike said it wasn't a state agency, but now we know it is a state agency, subject to the laws that govern all state agencies."

Nichols said this week's opinions by Stephan and the commission, coupled with previous Stephan opinions that the KTA is subject to state open records and open meetings laws, has forced an openness on the authority that did not exist before this year's campaign by him, Rep. Tom Bradley, R-Topeka, and Rep. Walker Hendrix, R-Ottawa, said.

However, Nichols said it is not his goal to single out the KTA and pass special legislation aimed only at it.

"I want to look at the entire spectrum (of ethics legislation)," he said. "I am concerned about the loopholes. I will re-examine the laws. We will discuss what we need to do, not just specifically as regards the turnpike.

"This shows we do have some problems with the conflict-of-interest laws."

Thursday's ruling means not only KTA Chairman Nick Badwey of El Dorado, but also KTA General Manager R.D. Fogo and Chief Counsel Paul Dugan will now be under the ethics rules.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

radio that militia burst into a home in which he was staying in the capital's Debussy section and took him away. Shots were reported in the neighborhood Wednesday night. An official with Milord's pro-Aristide coalition, the National Front for Change and Democracy, confirmed the informations. The government of Prime Minister Robert Malval was checking into the report.

Milord, a civil engineer, was one of the first lawmakers to publicly denounce the Sept. 30, 1991, coup, and he refused to take part in parliament sessions in which lawmakers were forced at gunpoint to declare the presidency vacant.

Like many Aristide supporters, he went into hiding after the coup and just recently emerged in public. Houses of two relatives were attacked by army-backed gangs in his native Desdune area of the north-central Artibonite Valley.

Milord and Fignole Jean-Louis, both deputies in Haiti's lower house, told the AP about the hit list. Jean-Louis said he learned of the list from a contact in the military, which is close to shadowy civilian gangs known by Haitians as attaches.

The United Nations has accused the gangs of targeting Aristide supporters for violence, including the assassination of Izmery.

The United States demanded Wednesday that the Haitian military disarm the gangs as one of the conditions for lifting the U.N. embargo.

waters before the embargo had been voted on by the United Nations.

The people of Haiti and the United States both want democracy for Haiti, but not everyone understands what democracy means, Bonnefil said.

"Democracy is not the same thing to an illiterate person as it is to an educated person," he said. "Some of the lower-class people think that looting and stealing is good because that is what Aristide promoted."

Aristide is receiving support from the United States through the Black Caucus, Bonnefil said.

"He had pumped money into the caucus for years and is gaining their support — that is why Jesse Jackson visited Haiti," he said.

The people aren't pushing for General Cedras because that would be military rule," Bonnefil said. "They just want a new government and the war ships out of their waters."

Somali protest may take place on Monday

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Submachine gunfire crackled across central Mogadishu Sunday on the eve of a protest that threatens to explode into clan violence.

Somalis said two people were killed and three wounded in an hour-long shootout over a water well.

The gunfight was adjacent to the Kilometer Four traffic circle in the southern stronghold of Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid, whose supporters held their regular Sunday rally barely a mile away. It wasn't clear if those in the shootout were affiliated with Aidid or his opponents.

"If anyone tries to interfere, we will cross by force."
ALI MAHDI MOHAMED CLAN LEADER

Aidid's deputy, Mohamed Nur Aliyo, repeated warnings against a demonstration planned for Monday. Protesters plan to cross the Green Line dividing rival clan leader Ali Mahdi Mohamed's territory from southern Mogadishu.

Tens of thousands of people are expected.

"If they come over, we are not responsible for what will happen," Aliyo said to hundreds of cheering people at the rally. "They want this to create problems not support peace."

Ali Mahdi broadcast a message Saturday night that said, "If anyone tries to interfere, we will cross by force."

More guns were seen on the streets, and both sides reportedly were arming themselves.

There are fears Ali Mahdi wants to provoke conflict in hopes the 33-country U.N. peacekeeping force will be forced to intervene and renew its fight against Aidid.

U.N. sources said Ali Mahdi has refused their suggestions for less provocative routes for the march. U.N. troops no longer patrol Mogadishu's streets and are visible mainly at fortified checkpoints outside their 11 strong points.

Peacekeepers are supposed to fire only when they are in danger, but an attack on U.N. troops could drag them into the fray. If U.N. forces then were overwhelmed, U.S. soldiers could be forced to intervene.

"If there is a requirement for us to go on the ground, then we will do so and we will do so in force," U.S. military representative Col. Steve Rausch said.

An American army helicopter dropped fliers over the city on Sunday warning, "If any attempt is made against U.N. Operations in Somalia installations or its army, UNOSOM forces will take appropriate action."

The demonstration also threatens to spark internal clashes in Aidid's Somali National Alliance.

On Sunday, pickup trucks with armed guards toured south Mogadishu with megaphones, urging people to march. They were operated by dissidents from Aidid's alliance who believe he is obstructing peace.

"If anyone tries to create problems for those people coming from the north, we will fight you because we want peace," one message said.

The planned march is a result of a U.N.-sponsored peace conference last week of leaders of the Hawiye clan, which includes Aidid's Habre-Gedir and Ali Mahdi's

Farrell event marks beginning of construction

TARA FOSTER

After years of fund-raising efforts for the Farrell Library expansion and renovation, a groundbreaking ceremony has signified its reality.

Nearly 250 people gathered around the Library's west lawn Friday afternoon to view the groundbreaking and to hear remarks by those involved with the improvement to the library.

"Our improved library space is going to provide better access to information, not only for the students, but for the faculty as well," Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said.

"One of the features of this new library addition and renovation is going to be, hopefully, a forward-looking idea, such that the tradition of the books and the computerized future are going to be brought together in this very important transitional time," Hobrock said.

The addition will unify the original Collegiate Gothic structure and two post-World War II additions.

It will be 153,000 square feet, more than doubling the current size, and will accommodate 1,200 students.

It will provide more space for stacks, reading rooms and staff. An area within the new addition will be open 24 hours a day with seating capacity of 200.

The $28 million needed for the improvement was made possible through state funding and donations. With the assistance of Gov. Joan Finney, the state was able to contribute $18 million. The library was able to raise $5 million through alumni donations and $5 million through student fees. Richard and Marjorie Morse led the library's campaign to raise money.

Part of the $5-million alumni contribution came from Joseph and Joyce Hale. The Hales made a $2-million donation in November 1991, Hobrock said, and this was the catalyst to the fund-raising efforts.

The Hales had three children who attended the University, and they became aware of the deficiencies of the library.

"I just want to say we are so proud and pleased to have been in the right place at the right time and have the ability to be a part of this project, because I know there has been so much more that has gone into it," Joyce Hale said.

The architecture firms of Brent Bowman and Associates of Manhattan, and Hammond Beebe Babka of Chicago were selected over a year ago for the expansion and renovation.

"What a glorious day for Kansas State University," President Jon Wefald said. "It had to be a glorious day, because, ladies and gentlemen, today and this afternoon, this groundbreaking will go down as one of the most important days in the history of this illustrious land-grant University.

"It also has to be a day of thanks. For example, we have to be very grateful that we had a governor that was willing to use one-time monies from the federal government for some important building projects in the state of Kansas, like Hoch Auditorium and the Farrell Library addition."

Wefald also thanked students of past and present for building momentum in the fund-raising efforts, including two student body presidents, last year's president, Jackie McClaskey, and the current president, Ed Skoog.

"What we're talking about here today, ladies and gentlemen, is a brand-new library that will put K-State on the forefront. It will be so beautiful, you won't believe it," Wefald said.

It will be the architectural centerpiece of the campus, he said.

Gov. Joan Finney said she was pleased to have been a part of the project.

"The library is the heartbeat of a university, and this opportunity that I had to provide this appropriation to see the completion, the expansion of this building is one of the heartwarming opportunities I have had as serving as your governor," Finney said.

After some closing remarks, the Hales were presented with a watercolor painting by Richard Forsyth, dean of architecture and design, in honor of their substantial contribution.

Hobrock said actual construction on the new addition will begin early next spring, and the projected finishing date will be August or September of 1996.

For 'Eagles,' rules change in Somalia

Soldiers' role shifts from peacekeepers to fighters

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT CAMPBELL, Ky. — Trained to fight under any conditions, to fight better than any enemy, to deploy quickly and hit hard, the soldiers earned the nickname "Screaming Eagles."

But in Somalia, the battlefield rules were changed. The mission was humanitarian, to serve as so-called peacekeepers, and the airborne unit from the Fort Campbell Army post was under orders not to shoot first.

"That was very stressful," Sgt. Scott Clemons said.

Clemons, 23, spent five months in Somalia as a Blackhawk helicopter crew chief with the 5th Battalion of the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault).

"We would do missions at night and see 20 or 30 armed Somalis walking through the streets," he said. "But unless they engaged you, you were unable to engage them."

The goal was clear enough in the beginning — deliver food to starving masses.

It changed in June after 24 Pakistani soldiers in the U.N. force were killed by clan guerrillas. The rules became combat rules, and U.S. soldiers were on the alert, but they still couldn't shoot first.

This month, the rules switched back just as suddenly to diplomacy, winning the release of U.S. Army helicopter pilot Michael Durant from his Somali captors. By next March 31, all American troops should be gone.

Who's the enemy? What's the mission? What day is it?

In Operation Desert Storm against Iraq, it was easier to tell the good guys from the bad guys, said Clemons, whose hometown is Kensington, N.H.

"In Somalia, the only real way to determine the enemy was if they were in possession of a weapon," he said. "Lots of times they would shoot at you or engage the aircraft for a few moments and then drop the gun and join the crowd."

"You really can't react to it," said Pfc. Richard Bray, a 21-year-old helicopter door gunner from Indianapolis. "There's nothing you can do."

Clemons and Bray said their unit received no special training for the Somali mission.

But Lt. Col. David H. Petraeus, who helps coordinate training in the 101st, said soldiers sent to Somalia were given special instructions at Fort Campbell and at their destinations.

"They were trained how to react if ambushed and trained on force protection skills and how to protect themselves when they are around an airfield," Petraeus said.

Regular training for soldiers at the 101st now includes urban warfare and dealing with civilians in battle conditions.

The 101st was created in 1942 as a parachute division. The "Screaming Eagles," whose badges bear the profile of an eagle, led the night drop of soldiers before the D-Day invasion of Normandy on June 6, 1944.

The 101st fired the first shots in the Gulf War, flying deep into Iraq

Snyder's contract terms released

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANHATTAN (AP) — Bonuses and perks in K-State coach Bill Snyder's new contract could nearly double his base pay of $126,504, according to records released by the University under pressure from the state's attorney general.

Snyder signed a 10-year contract earlier this year.

SNYDER'S 10-YEAR CONTRACT

K-State football coach Bill Snyder will receive $126,504 base salary for 1992-93. This amount will be increased by at least 7 percent annually. Other perks of the contract are listed below.

- A minimum annual bonus of $10,000 to be paid on Dec. 1 this year and by Dec. 1 every successive year. This is for contractual duties, such as personal and speaking engagements.
- An annual minimum of $70,000 for Snyder's radio and television programs. This will be increased by at least 5 percent annually.
- Family membership and use of golf cart at the Manhattan Country Club. This is valued at $3,500.
- Two vehicles, annual use valued at $4,000 each, to be used by the Snyder family.
- Performance-based bonuses will not be available until the end of the football season or the end of the academic year.

DEREK THOMAN/Collegian

The Manhattan Mercury and the Kansas State Collegian had requested a copy of the contract, but University officials would release only the base salary,

Attorney General Robert Stephan then issued an opinion saying all terms of the contract must be released under the Kansas Open Records Act.

Snyder's contract calls for a 7-percent increase in each year of the deal, a fact that irritates some professors and others at K-State.

"I think particularly that 7 percent was a difficult one (for the faculty)," said Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement.

Athletic Director Max Urick acknowledged there are those upset with the contract.

"I think those that know are aware that this is Division I-A, and football and basketball coaches make more than college presidents," Urick said.

"Those that don't know will be shocked, but they probably don't like athletics anyway and think it's a drain."

Krause said Snyder's contract probably ranks sixth or seventh among Big Eight coaches.

He pointed out that no public funds are used to pay Snyder — the money comes from television revenue, gate receipts, advertising and private donations.

In addition to base salary, records released Friday show Snyder gets a minimum $10,000 bonus each Dec. 1; $70,000 annually for radio and television shows with an increase of 5 percent each year; a membership and golf cart at the Manhattan Country Club valued at $3,500; two vehicles with an annual value of $4,000; and performance-based bonuses.

The University said it was not obligated to release the performance bonuses until they are actually paid.

EARTHQUAKE RATTLES MEXICO

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A strong quake measuring about 6.8 on the Richter scale struck Mexico City early Sunday morning at 1:55 a.m., rattling buildings and alarming residents, but there were no reports of damage or injuries.

The quake caused power outages in several parts of this city of 18 million, and radio reports said some power lines were down.

The Tacubaya Seismological Institute in Mexico City said the quake registered 6.8 on the Richter scale and was centered 228 miles south of the capital.

Silvius: Fraternity pullout was fair to all

An amendment to the athletic sales bill states if a person is caught with alcohol during the basketball ticket campout, that person — as well as his or her group — will be removed from the campout area.

The Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity was moved to the end of the ticket line on Tuesday night after a fraternity member was found to be in possession of alcohol.

Dale Silvius, senior in management and marketing and chair of the athletic sales committee, said he found out about the alcohol possession Tuesday night.

The member did not yet sign the waiver to the rules at the time he was caught, Silvius said. In the meeting prior to the campout, Silvius said if any group member was caught with alcohol, the whole group would be moved to the back of the line.

He said he did not tell the fraternity to leave the campout.

"The following morning, the leader informed me they were withdrawing," Silvius said.

Silvius said the president of the fraternity said he understood that if something bad happened at the campout this year, it may never return to Ahearn Field House.

The original athletic sales bill stated that people caught with alcohol would be moved to the end of the line for the first offense and removed from the campout for a second offense.

The amendment makes a first offense grounds for removal.

Silvius said he was there when the amendment was passed, but he forgot when he typed up the rules for the campout orientation.

He said he and other committee members had meetings with Pat Bosco, dean of student life, Charles Beckom, K-State Police Department chief, and Max Urick, athletic director, since April concerning the campout.

Silvius said he felt he made the right decision. He said he talked to members of the fraternity, and they said they agreed with his decision.

"I'm confident my decision was a good one," he said.

Alcohol was said to be the cause of an alleged rape at the campout last year. That incident caused the mandating of the University's rule on alcohol to be obeyed this year.

Maps, posters missing from geology display

A K-State professor is upset by the robbery of educational tools from the geology department this week, and he is offering a $100 reward to the first person who provides information that leads to the identification of the culprit and recovery of the stolen materials.

The materials have been missing since Tuesday. Among the items believed to have been stolen are five posters and two maps of Venus.

The materials were posted on the second floor of Thompson Hall in conjunction with the course, The Geology of Planets, taught by James Underwood Jr., professor of geology.

"I am justifiably outraged. Some of the materials are irreplaceable." he said. "This makes me hesitant to put anything up for students to use, unless it will be located in a locked display case."

Anyone with information can call Underwood in the Geology Department at 532-6724.

"I hope we may develop some lead on where the materials are at." Underwood said.

Basketball tournament to aid shooting victim

The KSU Rotaract club is sponsoring a charity basketball tournament at 2 p.m. Nov. 14 at Junction City High School.

The tournament will help out the family of Shannon Ingle, who was shot at the high school earlier this semester. The goal of the tournament is to raise $2,000 to be donated to the Ingle family.

"We're trying to help out the Ingles and the community. It's not just a charity event, but a community event," said Shante Moore, sophomore in political science and head of publicity for Rotaract. "No administration is involved. We're running this ourselves."

The tournament is three-on-three basketball and will consist of 12 to 20 teams. The players will be students from Junction City High School and St. Xavier High School, said Neal Bassi, senior in business administration and Rotaract president.

"There will probably be a $5 fee to play," said Sandy Rabeneck, senior in apparel design and Rotaract vice president. "We'll match teams up by age, so it won't be unfair."

Possible events include a free-throw contest during intermission for the children, a DJ and the sale of T-shirts. Local businesses will also be asked to help by donating prizes.

Students will be asked to show their student IDs to get into the event. Parents are also invited, and there will be a small admission charge.

EPA water ruling protested

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PRETTY PRAIRIE — Bottles of water line the walls at the D&J Grocery in this small central Kansas town.

Since Oct. 8, Pretty Prairie has been under orders from the Environmental Protection Agency to provide free bottled drinking water for its 601 residents. The town's own water is contaminated with nitrates, which the EPA says is linked to birth defects, stomach cancer and the death of infants.

The EPA has ordered the Reno County town to build a treatment plant to remove nitrates from drinking water, at a cost of nearly $600,000. Until it builds that plant, the town must buy bottled drinking water for everyone, at a cost of about $2,388 a month.

Townspeople responded with a petition saying they didn't believe there was a problem with the water. City leaders have threatened to pull the plug on the city water supply and drill private water wells in every backyard in town.

"This is not a town that doesn't care about its children," said Tim Stucky, editor of the local paper, the Ninnescah Valley News. "This is a town that has studied the facts."

The town is becoming a focal point for protests against environmental regulations that come with little reason and no funding.

From Topeka to Washington, D.C., politicians and lobbyists are using Pretty Prairie as an example of environmental regulations that have gone too far. U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., and U.S. Rep. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., plan to introduce legislation this week to require the EPA to pay more attention to costs.

"These guys aren't criminals. They drink their own water," said Shaun McGrath, an aide to Slattery. "What we are trying to do is give some flexibility that makes sense in meeting these standards."

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

Widespread Panic were the only words to use for Friday night's show at the Wareham Opera House. In addition to the feeling that enveloped more than 500 people in the crowd, Widespread Panic was the headlining band.

REVIEW

The band has established a loyal fan base, with many fans following the band from show to show. While the Grateful Dead has "Deadheads," Widespread has "Spreadheads."

The similarity between Widespread and the Dead goes beyond the fans. Both bands also have a reputation for long, melodic jams and southern rock riffs.

Manhattan's Squib Cakes opened the show with a fun set of rhythm-and-blues standards. The crowd remained restrained, in great anticipation of what lay ahead.

Widespread Panic proved true to all expectations. The band played for more than two hours to a receptive, rejoicing crowd who could not keep themselves from dancing an individualistic, groovy, "I don't care" kind of dance, in response to what was being offered on stage.

The Wareham's stage could barely hold all of Widespread's equipment and members, creating an intimate concert experience.

The small size and acoustic quality of the Wareham Opera House provided a rare opportunity for Manhattan music fans to hear one of the premiere bands in the blues/rock genre. We can only hope more shows are attracted to the Wareham.

Bootleggers took advantage of the acoustics, setting up microphones and digital audio tape recorders off the edge of the balcony to tape the show.

Musically, it would be hard to convince those in attendance that anyone living could rock harder. Vocalist and guitarist John Bell belted lyrics forcefully, as if his life depended on it, while Dave Schools, a six-foot-six-inch monolith of a man, gave the band a thick foundation with his bass guitar.

Auxiliary percussionist Domingo Ortiz was amazing to watch as he wailed all over his congas and bongos, widening Widespread's fat sound.

This is a band that is all about business, the simple business of making great music. They never paused once in their extended set to philosophize, preach or be witty. They just played.

The only non-lyrical words to escape Bell's mouth was a scruffy welcome at the set's beginning and a good-bye at the end.

EDITORIAL

Revealing contract reveals terrible fault

A slap in the face to all the faculty members who devote so much of their lives to the advancement of Kansas State University:

Perks will nearly double the $126,504 base salary football coach Bill Snyder receives annually in his 10-year contract.

An estimated $87,500 in perks, stated by the University Friday at the insistence of Kansas Attorney General Robert Stephan, includes performance-based bonuses, the amount of which won't be known until the end of the football season or academic year.

But where are the perks for our faculty and staff, who also complete contractual duties?

The Snyder family receives a membership at Manhattan Country Club, including use of a golf cart, at an annual cost of $3,500. The family also gets to make use of two vehicles at a cost of $4,000 per year.

Another perk gives Snyder a $10,000 bonus on or before Dec. 1 for personal and speaking engagements.

Does this mean the University would rather hear speeches about our standing in Big Eight play than the North American Free Trade Agreement or the possibility of war in the near future?

The University is quick to point out that all the perks in Snyder's contract come from TV revenue, gate receipts, advertisements and private donations.

We don't hold anything against Snyder. It's just too bad that so much money goes into the athletic world, while the academic world crawls along on shoestring budgets.

Maybe if we advertise our plight, private donations for academics will one day outweigh or equal those for athletics.

Let's have a TV commercial showing professors on their knees in the Farrell stacks, fighting among each other about which periodicals will be canceled in order to accommodate the $220,000 in cuts.

Let's have a weekly talk show in which faculty members and administrators discuss the fact that, according to a 1992 report, 60 percent of our faculty members said they would likely seeks jobs elsewhere.

Let's show our alumni the mold-infested graduate student offices, leaking roofs and cramped classrooms.

This is quite a contrast to the $3.3-million Dev Nelson Press Box or the grotesque perks denied to many who work at K-State.

Maybe this contrast will get private donations flowing in the right direction. Toward academics.

Phelps' hate misconstrues Bible's real message

I have always felt the best way to deal with Fred Phelps is to ignore him. Debate only seems to massage his ego, which appears to be the driving force behind his ministry.

Lately, however, I've realized that professed Christians such as myself sometimes offer tacit approval to Phelps' witness by remaining silent. It is frustrating, however, that Christians who debate Phelps' position are usually those who have fallen into the opposite pit of extremism, that on the left.

Ultra-liberal Christians who seek to justify homosexual behavior display a contempt for scripture, in a fashion similar to Phelps, by defining biblical positions in the context of their personal biases and agendas instead of the author's intent. They take Christ's command to "love your neighbor," part two of the greatest commandment, out of the context of the entire greatest commandment, which first, and more importantly, says to "love the Lord your God."

I John 1:3 says to love God is to obey God. They then ignore Romans 1:27, which very clearly describes homosexuality as a sin. Consequently, they spit on the greatest commandment they are trying to uphold by sanctioning disobedience to God.

With the problem of Phelps hopefully poised on moderate ground, I'll proceed with my critique.

In Matthew 7:15-23 Christ says, "Watch out for false prophets. They come to you in sheep's clothing but inwardly they are ferocious wolves. By their fruit you will recognize them. . . every good tree bears good fruit and every bad tree bears bad fruit."

The fruit of a Christian's life, therefore, is a divine barometer in determining the quality of their witness.

During last Monday's radio show on DB92, when asked how many homosexuals he has converted, Phelps responded, "zero." In his 46 years as a Bible preacher, Phelps has helped zero homosexuals become reconciled to God – thereby producing no fruit.

JOHN HART

Furthermore, it is painfully obvious that in his 46 years as a Bible preacher, he has produced an inordinate amount of bad fruit by driving people away from God, picketing funerals, spreading lies and promoting hate.

The words of Christ ring true: "Every bad tree produces bad fruit."

From a scriptural standpoint, Phelps' witness crumbles with his claim that "God hates fags." In John 3:16 Jesus says, "For God so loved the world that he gave his one and only Son, that whoever believes in him will not perish but have eternal life."

One caller appropriately brought this verse to Phelps' attention during the radio show.

He responded that there are seven meanings of the word 'world' in Greek, the language in which the New Testament was written, and nowhere in the Bible does it mean every individual of mankind. He is dead wrong. This is a classic example of Phelps misusing and distorting scripture.

The word 'world,' as translated from the original Greek word, kosmos, does have seven meanings. As used in John 3:16, kosmos clearly means human race or mankind. Sorry Fred, but God does love every individual of mankind, including "fags."

The Bible also says, in James 4:17, that anyone who knows the good he ought to do and doesn't do it, sins. Here is some good Phelps ought to do: "speaking the truth in love" (Ephesians 4:15); "Let your conversation be always full of grace" (Colossians 4:6); "clothe yourselves with compassion, kindness, humility, gentleness and patience" (Colossians 3:12). And I Peter 3:15 says, "Always be prepared to give an answer to everyone who asks you to give the reason for the hope you have. But do this with gentleness and respect."

There is one issue on which I agree with Phelps completely. Students at K-State are woefully ignorant about the Bible. This is relevant because if people were half as educated as Phelps is about the Bible, they would be able to do more than express their anger and outrage. They could reveal him for what he is – a moral, spiritual and intellectual fraud.

THE WORDS OF CHRIST RING TRUE: "EVERY BAD TREE PRODUCES BAD FRUIT."

▶ LOCAL MUSIC

Collegian basically just wails on Manhattan local band coverage

Editor,

As incredible as this may seem in a section usually devoted to complaints, arguments and extreme negativity, I am writing to commend the Collegian on a job well done.

I have been continually impressed by the Collegian's coverage of the live music scene in Manhattan this semester. Last week was a prime example of the Collegian's coverage. Monday's edition featured the Jesus Lizard show at The Warehouse as a front page story. Wednesday's edition contained an article about Skankin' Pickle and the Buckpets/Bosom show at Dowbow's (and, I like to add, a very accurate article about Bosom – they are a great band).

Manhattan has an incredible live music resource, and without support, these bands will undoubtedly fail. The Collegian's coverage is informing K-State about these bands and bringing more people out to the shows. Keep up the good work!

▶ MAINTENANCE CARTS

If bicyclists can't ride on the sidewalks, then why does maintenance?

Editor,

Why is it that I can't ride my bicycle on the campus sidewalks, yet I see people, including myself, getting run off the sidewalk so the maintenance people in their little carts can get by? Why can't they use the streets like I have so often been told to use when I ride my bike?

After all, those maintenance carts are at least three times the size of a mountain bike.

▶ DIVERSITY

You have to be savvy with the world in order to succeed in it

Editor,

For those of us who see the strengths of liberal education in the life cycles of individuals, it is sad, even embarrassing, to read of the narrow-world view of William Luton Jr. in the Oct. 18 Collegian.

Contrary to his wasting time/money with required classes outside his department, his "success" in architecture will depend largely upon his communication skills in writing and speaking; his understanding of the psychology and sociology of self, of building users, and of the others who are necessary in the design, construction and utilization of buildings; and his keeping himself healthy. Exposure to women's studies and to Spanish and to diversity are also vital and directly related to his professional development and future employment.

Then again, perhaps he is wasting his and our time: You can lead a student to a curriculum, but you can't make him, or her, think.

Just one clear word to stop all the violence

MELISSA DIVINE

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN: THE GROWING TRAGEDY
Every year 6 million women are battered and 6,000 are killed.
One woman is beaten every second.
95 percent of domestic violence is committed by men against women.
Alcohol plays a part in 70 percent of acquaintance rapes.

Although this month usually fills me with renewed energy, this year is different. I'm tired of fighting, tired of caring, and most of all, I'm tired of my own ignorance. I work for The Crisis Center Inc. — the battered women's shelter that serves a five-county area around Manhattan.

After months and months of fighting a system that revictimizes women who have been attacked by men who "love" them, I'm tired.

After a while, witnessing so much pain and injustice wears a callous on your soul; you go numb. The overwhelming statistics — 6 million women each year are battered; 6,000 are killed; one woman is beaten every 15 seconds — burn a hole through my brain, and I repeat them as an obscene litany.

The words become just words, nothing more — until. Until a woman with bruises for eyes and blood for a mouth looks at me and says, "What's wrong with me? Why can't I make him stop?" Until I watch a 4-year-old boy call his mother "bitch" because "that's what Daddy said to call her." Then the statistics take form, and they begin to breathe and they cry late at night, and they won't let me sleep.

I'm tired of doing speeches where people call me a "man-hater" because I tell them that it's never OK to hit their partner.

Speeches where men stand in the back of the room and bare their teeth and slam their fists into their palms and tell me I'm wrong to blame them — although the American Psychological Association says that 95 percent of the time, domestic violence is perpetrated by men, against women. I have never denied that men are victimized.

I have worked with these men. Their pain is no less than a woman's, but if 95 percent of the time women are the victims, is it not logical to focus my energy on the greater population in need? I didn't create that statistic. I just live the aftermath of it.

I'm tired of the occasional judge who says, "What happens in a man's home is his own business," or the chance police officer who informs me, "Ma'am, I know he beat her, but are you aware that she may be having an affair?"

Consider the uninformed jury who says that a man can't be guilty of raping his wife — even though he videotaped his bondage, sodomy and beating of her, the whole two hours worth. This particular incident occurred about a year and a half ago, at about the time of the Los Angeles riots.

Another videotape in a trial, another gross injustice, but this time no public outrage. It's probably best, though.

If there were burning and rioting every time a woman was victimized by a man or by the system, the whole world would be in flames.

Most importantly, I'm tired of my own ignorance. I admit it — I can't understand, and I need help. Someone please tell me why this has happened through the ages, and why it continues to happen. I know the psychosocial explanations, and the systems analyses and the power and control theories.

On a base level, however, I can't understand why women are so hated and so feared. Why, just by entering this world as a female child, was I cursed with a one-in-three chance of being raped, and a one-in-four chance of being beaten by my husband? Why doesn't the world care?

There are four animal shelters in this country to every one battered women's shelter. I should have been born a German shepherd — more people would have been concerned for my welfare. Why do they always ask me, "Why doesn't she just leave?" Why do they never ask me, "Why doesn't he stop hurting her?" or Why doesn't he go to jail for battery?" or "Why is nothing being done about this?"

Someone please tell me what to do to make it stop. I've counseled women and given speeches; I've written letters, and I've talked with men — it just keeps happening. I've bandaged bruises and gone to funerals — and still it happens.

There has to be something that I'm missing — some action, some phrase, some word that will make it all go away, make the pain end.

Again, I'll admit my ignorance; I'll admit that I don't know that action, that phrase, or that word. However, I'm more than willing to learn, to do what it takes to ensure that my child grows up in a world where its gender doesn't preordain it to a life of pain and fear — I may be tired, but I'm not defeated.

So, if you know that magic word, tell it to me — please.

Studies abroad available

Eight students may get to study abroad in Germany

CHAD HARRIS
Collegian

K-State students will have opportunities to study in Germany next year.

The Office of International Programs in Fairchild Hall has announced that exchange scholarships are available for study in Giessen, Munich and Zurich for the 1994-95 academic year.

Bill Richter, interim assistant provost for the Office of International Programs, said there are an anticipated six scholarships to Giessen, one to Munich and one to Zurich.

Richter has been with the international programs office for two years. He said K-State has had a strong exchange program for a long time.

"K-State's had a long involvement with international programs, especially with Germany. The program with Giessen is the oldest. It was started in 1960," Richter said.

APPLICATIONS

■ Applications are available in the Office of International Programs, Fairchild 304. The deadline for submission is Nov. 5. Interested students should contact Carol Miller at 532-6760 for more information.

The criteria for consideration of the scholarships require the student be enrolled at K-State, with at least junior standing, by the fall of 1994. A good academic record and an equivalent of four semesters of German are required, and preference will be given to students who will resume studies at K-State after their year abroad.

The scholarships are open to both undergraduate and graduate students in all disciplines.

The Office of International Programs participates in the International Student Exchange Program, which makes possible the opportunities for the scholarships. The exchange program allows K-State students to study in another country, while a student from that country comes to K-State.

Richter said the program has strong ties with Czechoslovakia, France and Mexico, as well as Germany.

The opportunity for such scholarships has been a positive aspect of the program, he said.

"This has been a very gratifying aspect of the program. Over 200 K-State students, who have graduated and participated in the program, have contacted us, saying how they felt it was a meaningful experience in their academic career, as well as in life. I feel we do provide a strong program," Richter said.

The scholarships will cover all fees and include a monthly stipend.

Dietetics to receive award

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

The College of Human Ecology's coordinated program in dietetics will receive national recognition at a meeting in California this week for its efforts to recruit and retain minority students.

"It makes sense. If a person is going to work with others concerning their food choices and dietary patterns, that process will be facilitated if the dietitian is from a similar ethnic background," said Deb Canter, a registered dietitian and director of the program.

"Right now the dietetic profession is predominantly female and Caucasian," she said.

The dietetics program received a $5,000 grant from the American Dietetics Association to help recruit and retain individuals from under-represented groups. This includes ethnic minorities and men, Canter said.

"We have worked diligently since that time, and our minority enrollment in dietetics is now approximately 15 percent of our total," she said.

The 76th annual meeting of the American Dietetics Association this week in Anaheim, Calif., provides an opportunity for people in the field to network and learn about advancements in the area of dietetics, Canter said.

During the conference, the ADA will present K-State's program with the Award for Institutional Excellence in Affirmative Action. This marks the first time the award has been presented in several years.

Canter said she has mixed emotions because she does not want minority students to feel she is catering to them or giving them slack.

At the same time, however, she said she wants to establish the same type of support system for minority students as the one already in place for the program's more traditional students.

David Scharpenburg, senior in dietetics, said as one of only a few males in the program, he considers himself in the minority.

"I feel the program is fair to minorities, and it's not biased against them," Scharpenburg said. "Often times they just don't realize there is a market for them in dietetics."

Israeli soldiers slain

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Islamic militants reportedly wearing yarmulkes shot and stabbed two Israeli soldiers to death Sunday in the occupied Gaza Strip during one of a series of violent events linked to the peace process.

A 23-year-old Palestinian woman died after she was caught in a shootout between supporters and opponents of the Israel-Palestine Liberation Organization peace plan. And PLO chairman Yasser Arafat's Fatah faction called an alert to try to prevent assassinations, after a third prominent activist was killed last week.

The escalating violence may make it harder to overcome the distrust between Israelis and Palestinians, a crucial element needed to successfully implement last month's Israel-PLO accord.

The Islamic Resistance Movement, or Hamas, distributed a leaflet saying its military branch Izzidin al-Qassam was responsible for killing the soldiers.

"This is Hamas' gift to the peace process. Hamas will make peace with Israel at the cemetery," the army quoted the leaflet as saying.

A military source at the scene said the two men were shot dead after accepting a ride in a car with Israeli license plates that turned out to have been stolen a month ago from a Gaza settlement.

The soldiers were shot in the car, abandoned a half-mile south of the nearby Khan Yunis refugee camp, and their bodies were found a half-mile further south, it said.

Israeli reports said the abductors wore yarmulkes — the skull caps worn by observant Jews.

The army said a Hamas leaflet was found in the car, and the soldiers' two M-16 automatic rifles were missing.

The army censored the story for more than 12 hours.

Coaches find little solace in 16-16 deadlock

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

K-State coach Bill Snyder and Colorado coach Bill McCartney both made similar statements after the 16-16 tie between the Cats and Buffaloes Saturday at KSU Stadium.

McCartney said it felt like a loss, and Snyder said it was disappointing not to get the win.

The tie, K-State's first since a 17-17 deadlock against Kansas in 1987, moved the Cats to 5-1-1 overall and 1-1-1 in the Big Eight Conference. K-State also cracked the Associated Press poll at No. 25 for the first time since 1970 after the tie and ended a nine-year losing streak to Colorado.

Colorado went to 4-2-1, 2-0-1 in the conference and dropped to No. 20 in the AP poll. The Buffaloes fell to second in the league with the even score.

Snyder said to tie the game was best for K-State.

"It seemed the right thing to do at the time," Snyder said. "I felt like the kids played really hard, and I didn't want them to go to the locker room with a loss. I don't normally play for the tie, but it seemed the right thing to do under the circumstance."

Snyder said the draw might help the Cats in the long run.

"It may pay off later. We'll have to see how the conference pans out," he said. "I want the youngsters to feel well about themselves. They played very hard and very well.

"You're looking at the bowl picture and how well you will finish in the conference. The tie doesn't benefit you in the win-loss record, but it does benefit you in the standings."

The tie moved the Cats to fourth in the league, but if K-State beats No. 14 Oklahoma, and No. 6 Nebraska beats Colorado this Saturday, K-State will be in second place in the conference. K-State still needs two more wins in the next four games to be qualified for a bowl game.

Quarterback Chad May said Snyder made the correct call in going for the tie.

"I think Coach did the right thing," May said. "I don't know how our team feels about it right now, but I think if you look at the big picture, he did the right thing."

With the score 16-13, Snyder sent in place kicker Tate Wright on fourth down and three yards to go for a 35-yard field goal with 21 seconds left in the game.

Wright said he knew how meaningful the kick was in the game.

"It was real important," Wright said. "This probably was the biggest kick in my career. I'm glad I made it."

Wright said he was aiming the kick toward the right half of the goal post.

"I had the idea of hitting the right side of the upright after I watched what happened to (Colorado kicker Mitch) Berger's kick," Wright said.

Berger missed a 40-yard field goal attempt at the end of the third quarter that went left of the uprights.

K-State trailed Colorado 9-0 at the half. Snyder said he felt the team would come back.

"That is something I addressed in the locker room," Snyder said. "That score in itself made a statement. Our offense couldn't get going, but our defense played awfully well except for a few big plays, but they kept them out of the end zone."

The Cats got their first score in the third quarter when May threw a 6-yard pass to Andre Coleman. Buffalo cornerback Chris Hudson tipped the ball, but Coleman was able to grab it for the score.

The extra-point attempt by Wright was blocked as a Colorado lineman broke through the line, making the score 9-6.

K-State went ahead of Colorado when May passed to tight end Brad Seib for a two-yard toss in the back of the end zone. The point-after attempt by Wright made the score 13-9 with 9:57 left in the game.

Colorado regained the lead after defensive lineman Shannon Collier intercepted a May pass and returned it to the K-State 25-yard line.

From there, the Buffaloes scored nine plays later on a one-yard run from tailback James Hill. Berger's extra-point kick gave Colorado a 16-13 lead with 3:57 left.

K-State came back with a 13-play, 64-yard drive to set up Wright's game-tying field goal.

McCartney said the Cats did the right things to come back against his team.

"Let's give K-State a lot of credit," McCartney said. "They played well and made the plays that they had to make at the end."

Snyder said he knows the Cats can line up with anybody.

"I believe in this football team, and I'm not just saying that just for the talk," said Snyder, whose defense held Colorado to a season-low 335 yards of total offense.

"All coaches are supposed to say they believe in their team, but I really have that deep-down belief that says this team can line up and play with any team in the country if they play the way they are capable," Snyder said.

Lockett instrumental in Cats' 2nd-half offensive resurgence

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Kevin Lockett's airborne, one-handed catch in the third quarter of K-State's game against Colorado did more than dazzle spectators.

The 50-yard grab was nearly half of the total yardage the Cats had amassed to that point (104) and was 15 yards more than their total offense in the first half (35).

Lockett, a redshirt freshman from Tulsa, Okla., snapped the Big Eight Conference record for freshmen receiving yards in a single season Saturday with 496 yards. The previous record was 441 yards by KU's Willie Vaughn in 1985.

"It was a fantastic catch," Coach Bill Snyder said. "He jumped up and caught it with one hand all the way."

The play was on second down and eight at K-State's own 34-yard line. Quarterback Chad May was flushed out of the pocket to his right, and passed downfield where Lockett was double-teamed.

Colorado cornerback Dalton Simmons was on the coverage and said Lockett came from behind him to make the catch.

"He was behind me, and I went up for the ball, and he just came up from behind me and made a great grab," Simmons said.

Kevin Lockett

Lockett finished the game with 136 yards on six receptions — all in the second half — to lead K-State's receiving unit.

"I looked back, and Chad was running for his life," Lockett said of the 50-yard reception. "He saw me at the last minute and threw it up. I was coming back to the ball, and I thought it was going to go over my head. I just put one hand up, and it stuck to my glove."

On K-State's first possession of the second half, Lockett was instrumental in a 54-yard drive that resulted in the Cats' first touchdown. Lockett caught passes of 6, 10 and 19 yards during the drive.

May had completed only three passes in the first half for 35 yards but completed four passes on the scoring drive in the third quarter for 32 yards, including a 7-yard strike to Andre Coleman for the touchdown.

Coleman, who finished the game with six catches for 86 yards, said the receivers were open in the first half, but May didn't have an opportunity to find them.

"We have an excellent receiving corps and feel we can get open on anybody," Coleman said. "We were open the whole game. Chad just didn't have time to pass the ball."

"In the first half we weren't clicking and just weren't focused," Lockett said. "But in the second half we started putting things together and put some points on the board."

Wildcats drop 5th-consecutive match against CU

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State volleyball team remains winless in the Big Eight Conference after losing to the Colorado Buffaloes 3-0 Saturday in Ahearn Field House.

The loss gives the Wildcats a 7-14 record on the season and a 0-6 record in the Big Eight. It was also the Cats' fifth straight loss. The last win for the Cats was against Northeastern Illinois on Oct. 9.

Colorado improved its league log to 6-0 and its overall record to 17-4. This match also marked the 11th-straight loss to Colorado for K-State.

"Colorado came ready to play," Coach Patti Hagemeyer said. "They are as good as anybody we have played this season. We got a measure of how tough we are tonight."

Colorado never trailed in the match, but the Cats did get close in the first game when they cut the Buffaloes' lead to 12-7 before falling 15-7.

"We were only able to sustain a level of toughness for two or three balls," Hagemeyer said. "The rest of the time we were trying to get back to that level. To win, we will have to play tougher."

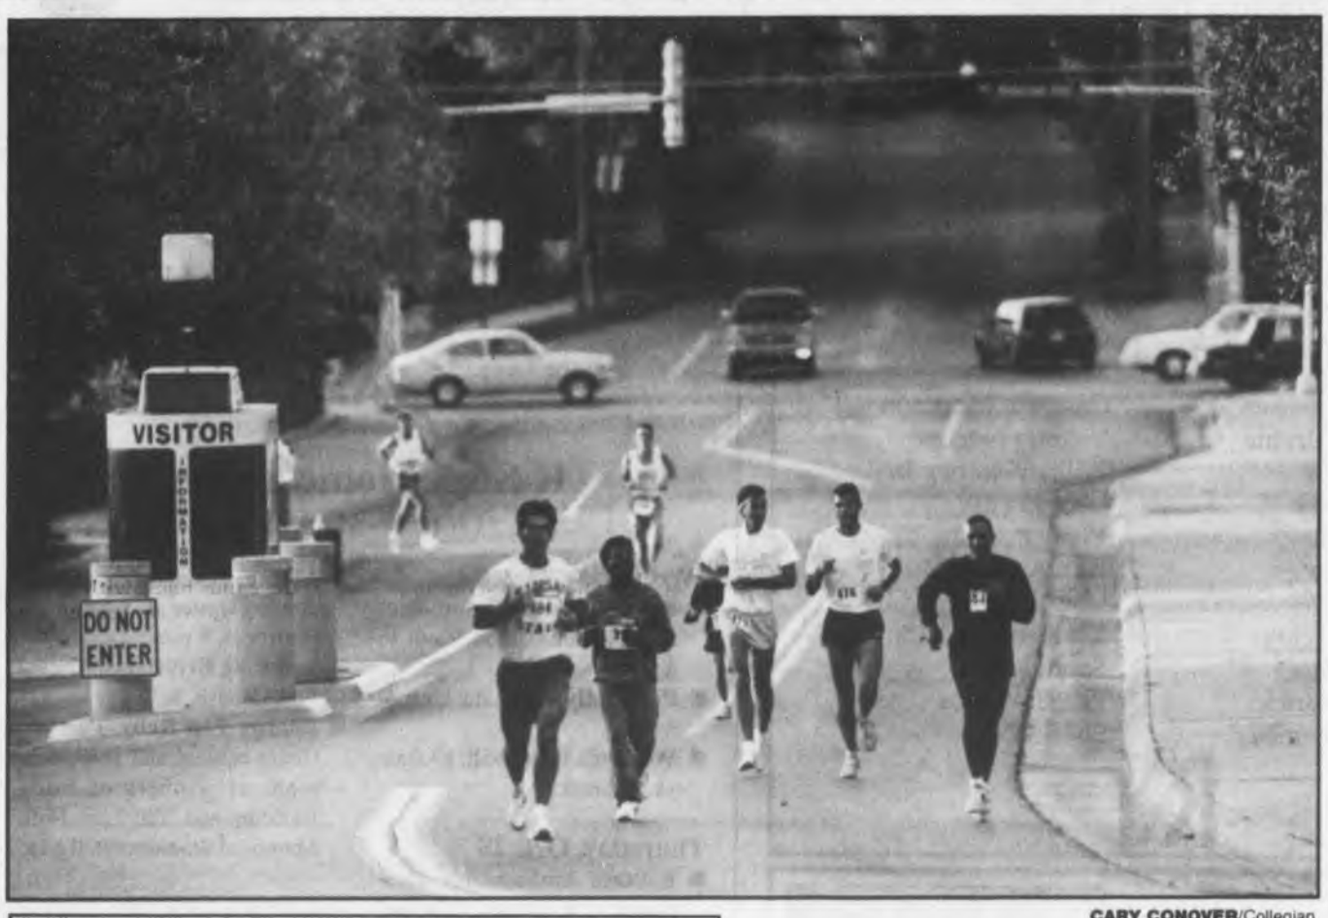
Freshman outside hitter Yolanda Young led the Cats with eight kills against Colorado. In Young's last eight matches, she has averaged 14.4 kills per match.

Middle blocker Jill Dugan and outside hitter Suzanne Hagge added four kills each to the Cats' attack. Setter Wendy Garrett also had 16 assists for K-State.

In the second game Colorado didn't waste much time as they jumped out to a 6-1 lead. The Buffaloes used a 4-0 run and two 3-0 runs to put away the Cats 15-2.

"In the second game we didn't capitalize when they would make a mistake," Hagemeyer said. "The level of play just dropped."

The third game had some line-up changes for the Cats. Hagemeyer said the result from the first two games prompted her to make the changes.



It took a while for the new line-up to click, as Colorado had a 4-0 spurt to take the lead. The Cats battled back to cut the margin to 4-3, but Colorado went on runs of 5-0, 4-0 and 3-0 to win the game 15-7.

Hagemeyer said there are several ways to improve the toughness the Cats need against a team like Colorado.

"To get tough, it will take practice," Hagemeyer said. "Winning will also help, but we don't need to make silly mistakes. We will be working at being tough and trying to conquer that. We need to be tough to compete against teams like Colorado."

The Buffaloes were led by Karrie Downey, who had nine kills, and Janine Zumerchik, who had eight kills. Setter Nicole Vranesh had 35 assists to lead Colorado.

K-State will continue its three-match home stand against No. 13 Nebraska on Wednesday night. Earlier this season in Lincoln, Neb., the Cats lost 3-0 to the Cornhuskers. The Cats have never beaten Nebraska, and the Huskers lead the overall series 48-0.

Kuregian falls short in quarterfinal bout

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Sophomore Karina Kuregian fell short in her quest for the title at the Riviera All-American Championships in Pacific Palisades, Calif.

On Friday, Kuregian won her ninth match of the tournament as she defeated Virginia's Jen Callen. Callen is ranked 10th in the nation and was the eighth seed at the tournament.

Coach Steve Bietau said Kuregian never struggled with Callen as she moved on to the quarterfinals.

"The win over Callen was a terrific win for Karina," Bietau said.

The quarterfinals brought UCLA's Jane Chi, who took control of the match early and went on to defeat Kuregian 6-1, 6-3.

Kuregian's 9-1 record is believed to be the best in tournament history as she advanced through four rounds of pre-qualifying and three rounds of qualifying before landing a spot among the final 32 players.

Thursday in the first round, Kuregian lost the first set and was down 1-4 in the second set before coming back to defeat Petra Schmitt of Southern California 6-7 (4-7), 6-4, 6-3.

Schmitt was ranked 23rd nationally in the Rolex intercollegiate preseason tennis rankings.

Kuregian advanced to the second round of the tournament, marking the best K-State performance at this tournament in the history of the women's tennis program. She also advanced farther in the tournament than any other player who went through the prequalifying rounds.

"People pay attention to rankings probably more than they should, but any time you bring national recognition to the program and the school, it is a plus," Bietau said.

Kuregian was the only player to make it to the main draw of the tournament through prequalifying and qualifying rounds and was the only Big Eight Conference representative to advance past the second round.

Game Notes K-STATE VS. COLORADO

✔ Saturday's tie ended an eight-year losing streak to the Buffaloes.

✔ K-State has outscored opponents 46-3 in the third quarter in seven games this season.

✔ The last time K-State scored more than 16 points against Colorado was in 1984 when the Wildcats won 38-6.

✔ Since the 1984 Wildcat victory, the Buffs have averaged 45.4 points per game in the eight game win streak they had established.

✔ The tie Saturday has tied the K-State school record for an unbeaten streak of 11 games. The 1909-10 team also tied in the 11th game in that unbeaten string.

✔ Andre Coleman caught six passes for 86 yards, moving him into seventh place on the K-State career charts for receiving yards with 1,325.

✔ Freshman Kevin Lockett broke the Big Eight Record for freshman receiving yards in a single season with 496.

✔ May has tallied a TD pass in six consecutive games, only two away from the Big Eight record of eight set by Colorado's Darian Hagan.

✔ Jaime Mendez, with nine tackles for the game, moved into 12th place on the career tackle list with 274.

✔ Chad May made 17 completions bringing his season tally of completed passes to 125. This surpasses last year's total of 120 completions.

✔ Freshman DeShawn Fogle led the Wildcats defensively with 11 tackles. This is a career high. Before Saturday's game, his total count was 20.

Receivers come through against Colorado defense

The Cats outscored the Buffaloes 16-7 in the second half. K-State's second touchdown capped a 77-yard, 13-play drive that ended with a touchdown catch by tight end Brad Seib from May to give the Cats a 13-9 lead with 9:57 remaining.

Colorado managed to score on its next possession, taking a 16-13 advantage with 3:57 to go.

K-State faced fourth down and 15 yards to go on its final possession of the game, and Lockett came through again.

May was forced to scramble and passed to Lockett, who was left wide open around midfield. Lockett picked up 44 yards on the play and set up Tate Wright's 35-yard field goal that tied the game at 16-16.

"I didn't realize how wide open I was until I caught the ball and looked upfield," Locket said. "My first intention was to get the first down and keep the drive alive."

Snyder said the receiving group has made vast improvements from the first couple of games.

"At the beginning of the season we put some ball on the ground," Snyder said. "Since that time I think our receivers have played particularly well. They've made some great catches, they've come up with some big plays, and they've played consistently."

BASKETBALL

Midnight Madness returns to kickoff men's basketball season

MICHELE SCHROEDER
Collegian

The K-State tradition of "Midnight Madness" is back once again to kick off the 1993-94 basketball season.

This will be the seventh year that a "Midnight Madness" scrimmage will take place for students.

Last year's season-opening event drew about 1,400 fans.

The event was originally planned to take place midnight on Halloween to launch the season off, but because of schedule conflicts and last minute changes in NCAA regulations, complications arose in scheduling the event.

"With the original date, we did not think it would be a good idea to have it on a Sunday night with classes the next morning," Max Urick, K-State athletic director, said.

A new proposed date was discussed for the event, but because of further schedule conflicts, a decision was not made.

On Oct. 13, NCAA modified a rule allowing practices to begin on Oct. 30.

"We thought about having 'Midnight Madness' that Friday night. When we checked, Bramlage was originally supposed to be set up for a step show that was scheduled to take place the next morning," Urick said.

Since that time, many students have wondered whether or not there was going to be a "Midnight Madness."

"We're trying to accommodate the students," Coach Dana Altman said.

"What we're trying to figure out is if we can have practice at midnight, get everybody out of there and get the floor taken out in time for the step show," he said.

Confirmation was made by Bramlage Coliseum last Friday to schedule "Midnight Madness," and the K-State men's basketball team will officially start practice at 12:01 a.m. Oct. 30.

Urick said he was pleased that everything was cleared with Bramlage so the students could have the season-opening party once again.

"We're doing this for the students. There were a lot of student groups that contacted us to do this," Altman said.

"So I hope the students will get into it, and we'll have a good turn-out this year."

Militants blamed in kidnapping of 3 diplomats

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALGIERS, Algeria — Gunmen killed a policeman and abducted three French diplomatic employees Sunday.

Suspicions fell on Muslim fundamentalist militants who have begun targeting foreigners.

The two men and a woman were seized by an armed band as they left their residence in central Algiers, witnesses said. A policeman guarding their building was killed in a shootout.

A fourth French worker escaped from the abductors.

Fundamentalists are suspected of killing seven foreigners since September — including five in the past week — as part of a nearly 2-year-old insurgency.

The three who were kidnapped work in the French consulate's visa section, the French Foreign Ministry said.

Interior Minister Selim Saadi said on national television the government was determined to put into action every means of finding the kidnappers and rescuing the victims.

Gunners also tried to kidnap two Japanese citizens Saturday in Blida, 30 miles south of Algiers, but fled when a passing police patrol intervened, officials said.

Algeria's large foreign community includes technical experts working with Algeria's oil and gas industry, the main source of foreign exchange for a nation in economic disarray.

On Thursday, three foreign oil technicians — a Peruvian, a Colombian and a Filipino — were found dead after they were abducted.

Two Russian air force officers were shot Tuesday outside their home in southern Algeria.

Two kidnapped French surveyors were found dead Sept. 21.

The insurgency began in January 1992 when the government canceled parliamentary elections the fundamentalists looked set to win.

Since then, the government has declared strict curfews and conducted frequent sweeps against the fundamentalists.

More than 2,000 people have died in the conflicts between police and fundamentalists.

U.S. policy in Haiti needs adjusted, doctor says

BOB MACHA
Collegian

A retired Topeka physician who just returned from Haiti said he thinks the United States needs to adjust its policy in dealing with Haiti.

"They continue to destroy the country," William Martin said. "They could be in a role of help, with education and road building."

Martin served in Haiti as part of a temporary medical relief team to the troubled island nation.

While providing medical aid in Limbe, a city with a population of 20,000, Martin said he was surprised by the poverty he saw.

"You can't imagine a place like this with no running water, no electricity, no newspaper and no journalists," Martin said.

He said he didn't understand how Haiti could function as a democratic nation.

"How can a country with a 13, 14 or 15 percent literacy rate vote? I mean how can they read the ballot?" Martin said. "How can you expect to run a democracy like that?"

The vast majority of the medical supplies used on the relief trip were transported by the relief team members themselves, but some of the drugs were available in the Haitian commercial market, he said.

Martin said he found the agricultural situation interesting.

"With farming, it is not the problem with land but the hand tools," he said. "They have no tractors. It was really interesting driving across the island from the airport and driving for miles across farmland and not seeing any tractors. It was really strange to see cars and no tractors. It makes you wonder."

The country is in a tropical climate, unlike Somalia, so there is a large quantity of fruit. People can go to the markets and barter for other food.

Most people are not too involved in politics because there is not an abundant food supply, he said.

"The masses are involved in their next meal and trying to buy a few rice and beans to survive."

There is also the problem of trying to remain politically neutral.

"Most missionaries try to be apolitical, without political slant. You don't want to join a side because it is a no-win situation."

However, he said, the military government brings order to the region.

"Who will keep order?" Martin said. "Aristide doesn't have the power to do it. Freedom in some of these countries means to take what you can. Just help yourself, especially if someone has something better than you."

Dear Cassandra,

I am writing in correction to your misinformed Oct. 19 response to 410's bewilderment of why "squids" are thrown on the ice during Detroit playoff games. It's not a squid at all, but an octopus that's thrown.

You also stated it has no basis in tradition or symbolism, but any avid hockey fan knows this in incorrect.

It's not because the fans think its funny to throw objects on the ice. Rather, it's a tradition that began early in this century when there were only six National Hockey League teams, including Detroit of course, and it took only eight straight victories during the playoffs to win the coveted Stanley Cup.

Each of the octopus' eight tentacles represents one victory, therefore symbolizing the ultimate goal, winning the Stanley Cup. How can it not be a tradition after more than 50 years?

Signed,
A Hockey Player

Dear Player,

Thanks for the interesting correction.

Dear Cassandra,

I believe I've uncovered one of the great secrets of this century. I believe one of my instructors is leading a double life. All evidence suggests this professor's alter ego is Ronald McDonald.

1. His physique closely resembles Ronald McDonald. 2. He has curly hair that, if dyed red, would be a perfect match for Ronald's hair. 3. He has large feet. 4. He smells like a Happy Meal. 5. He came to class one day with what appeared to be remnants of white face paint along his jaw line — he insisted it was shaving cream he had missed. 6. I saw him in Aggieville with a man three feet tall wearing a black hat and cape, a black-and-white striped uniform and a black Lone Ranger mask. 7. He often makes the "golden arches" gesture with his index finger during lecture.

Do you think I may be right? If so, should I conceal my secret or enlighten the world about this mystery?

Signed,
I Can't Hold It Much Longer

Dear Holding It,

So what've you been smoking? If you can't hold it, tell the world. I'd be curious at its response.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES By Gypsy Rose

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Love is in the air, and so is mold. Take some Kleenex with you on your next date.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your money situation is getting tight, tight, tight. Buy some Ramen, turn off the lights, curl up in a blanket and pray for the first.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Shame, shame. It is time to go to class. You are perilously close to flunking out.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): When the moon is in the seventh house, and Jupiter aligns with Mars, beer cans will no longer be thrown haphazardly out of cars.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Live life, grow up and die.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your enthusiasm for K-State football is admirable, but wash the purple paint off your face. People are beginning to give you odd looks.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The answer to 28 across is "after that extra half-hour of 'Beavis and Butt-Head.'"

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take a vacation today. Not the mental one you usually do, but instead, go to a haunted house in Topeka.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your parents are gone already. Go ahead and take that lampshade off the bong.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Even though sports are your life, take a break from Sportscenter and buy something for your sweetie.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't check the mailbox today. You don't want to know.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Pull your clothes out of the closet, the liquor out from under the bed, and pop a cold one. Breathe a sigh of relief that your parents still don't know how you really live.

Pearl Jam stays true to roots

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

If you have been on this planet, you have heard of Pearl Jam. The band's first album "Ten" sold more copies than any other debut album in history, and everyone wants to know if its new record can match up.

REVIEW

Simply titled "Pearl Jam," the new release catches the eye with its disturbing cover photograph of a barnyard sheep trying to break through a wire fence. Opening the CD reveals a montage of photos and artwork. In addition, the lyrics are printed in the same handwritten-journal style that were found in "Ten."

The recording opens with "Go," a fast song that sounds like it could be in Soundgarden's set list with its low rhythm and repetitive bass line. Vocalist Eddie Vedder's voice returns with the same lingering, haunting quality that distinguished him long before he was played on every radio station in the country.

When the third track, "Daughter," hits the speakers, an acoustic feel takes over the album. It's a good break after the first two songs, which have an almost hardcore feel to them.

Then comes "Glorified," a faster song that is supposed to have an anti-gun message. It opens with a guitar riff that could find its way into an R.E.M. song, but Vedder's grunting before the lyrics kick in reminds us who it is we're listening to.

Lyrically, the song is classic Vedder irony: "Got a gun/fact I got two/That's okay man, cause I love God/Glorified version of a pellet gun."

Musically, it is hard to find any fault with the album, with its blend of influences and originality showing through to make it a very listener-friendly record. The album branches away from the Seattle sound into untouched territory, while still remaining true to its roots.

Pearl Jam has refined its intense energy into something just a little more stable. This has the danger of being mistaken for selling out. After all, what first attracted us to the band was the very fact that they were completely out of control.

The band certainly still has the potential for being out of control, and it even appears that way at several times on the record.

Lyrically, this is not the same Eddie Vedder that was seen defying death, climbing and swinging on stage equipment a year and a half ago. Vedder defines what he wants to combat and now attacks it boldly. Guns, cops, drugs, racism and even his own success fall victim to his pen and voice.

On "Rearviewmirror" Vedder's deep, jaded and mystic style is offered for interpretation: "I took a drive today/time to emancipate/I guess it was the beatings/made me wise/But I'm not about to give thanks or apologize."

With all the hype thrown aside, Pearl Jam's second effort is an impressive album and deserves a listen.

Group collects canned goods

LISA STAAB
Collegian

Join the spirit of the Wildcats.

The second annual Cats for Cans is challenging K-State for support in ending hunger in the Manhattan area by helping with the donation of non-perishable goods.

From Oct. 15 to Nov. 15, the student group Cats for Cans is uniting to collect several thousand canned goods as part of the 30 Days of Thanksgiving.

Ruth Ann Wefald is serving as the administration's representative to the group.

It is important that students develop an unselfish attitude to help in this project to benefit others, she said.

Greek organizations, residence halls, honorary societies and other student groups are joining forces with the Cats for Cans committee in this effort.

"The project is important because there is critical need for additional food for people living on the margin in Manhattan," Wefald said. "It is wonderful for students to show the spirit of giving by helping others."

Shirley Bramhall, executive director of Flint Hills Breadbasket, said the non-perishable canned goods will be included in holiday baskets distributed by Flint Hills Breadbasket or given to 48 recipient agencies.

"This project helps to feed the hungry and helps those who cannot feed themselves," Bramhall said. "The effort of the students shows their visible support and shows our students are very valuable to us in more ways than one."

K-State's effort has a positive effect on the community, especially since the 1992 census shows Riley County with a national poverty level of 21.2 percent, Bramhall said.

Last year the K-State community collected 49,000 pounds of goods with the help of Cats for Cans.

The effort ensures the success of the Mayor's Holiday Tree as well as success through the first six to eight months of next year, Bramhall said.

"From Jan. 1 through June 30 we donated to 2,933 unduplicated families this past year, compared to 2,343 families during 1992," she said.

The main collection of canned goods will be Oct. 30 at the Homecoming football game against the University of Oklahoma. Members of the Student Governing Association will collect cans at the KSU Stadium beginning at 11 a.m.

Michelle Eble, senior in architectural engineering and co-chairwoman of Cats for Cans, said the student involvement is imperative to the success of the project.

"I think the students have a bad reputation in the community because they still think we're kids," she said. "Since we're doing something that benefits the community, it puts the students in a better light."

In addition, donations will be accepted during the 30 Days of Thanksgiving at the K-State Union, Manhattan Town Center or Flint Hills Breadbasket.

Especially needed for the holiday baskets are canned fruit and vegetables, canned tuna and other meats, peanut butter, soups, pastas, and pork and beans, Bramhall said.

One attraction will be the construction of a large replica of KSU Stadium, Dev Nelson Press Box and Vanier Football Complex from canned goods.

The display, built by K-State students in architectural engineering, can be viewed Oct. 23-31 at Manhattan Town Center. By contributing one can or one dollar, a donor is entitled to guess the number of cans used in the entire construction. Prizes will be awarded for the closest estimate.

Mark Mazour, senior in architectural engineering, said several prizes include two pairs of tickets for two basketball games, sweatshirts and various other items.

Lori Davis, senior in human ecology and mass communications, said the K-State Union Bookstore will also support the cause. From Nov. 1 to Nov. 15, the bookstore will offer 20 percent off an item for each canned-good donation.

Wefald said she is impressed with the work of the student leaders.

"It's absolutely terrific with student-led effort," Wefald said. "It reaffirms my love and faith for K-State. We have something special on our campus, which is the wonderful spirit of caring."

Saving the environment locally lies in students' hands

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Campus activities have an enormous effect on the environment. Students, as well as the administration, are responsible for minimizing the side-effects of daily life.

"Any effort the University makes to improve the environment depends on a willing customer," said John Zimmerman, professor of biology and faculty adviser to the Flint Hills Audubon Society.

"The staff and students have to sacrifice for the common good."

Ed Skoog, student body president, said students have shown their concern for the environment sporadically in the past. However, he said students haven't followed through with that concern.

"Once the students who organized a project leave, it usually is just dropped," he said.

"Any effort the University makes to improve the environment depends on a willing customer."

JOHN ZIMMERMAN
PROFESSOR OF BIOLOGY, FACULTY ADVISER TO THE FLINT HILLS AUDUBON SOCIETY

Fashion trends may cause the spotty nature of student involvement.

Concern for the environment is not as trendy as it once was, said Sharon Moreland, junior in secondary education and president of Students Acting to Save a Vulnerable Environment.

"Some students have lost their awareness," Moreland said. "It is not the in thing anymore."

However, students could act more environmentally responsible in many ways. For example, students could reduce how much they drive.

"I'm so impressed with the way people sit and wait for parking," Zimmerman said.

"They could walk to the building by the time they find a parking space."

Moreland said she gets irritated at people who live within walking distance but drive anyway.

"When I was in grade school, people who lived within a mile of school couldn't ride the bus. They had to walk or ride a bike," Moreland said.

"Why is it different in college?"

In addition, students needlessly throw away easily recyclable material such as aluminum cans, Zimmerman said.

"Almost every soda machine in my building has a box next to it to put aluminum cans in for recycling, but 50 percent of the cans end up in the garbage anyway," Zimmerman said

Although students may irresponsibly throw things away, the University could make it more convenient for students to recycle, Moreland said.

"They make it a pain in the butt to recycle," she said.

Skoog said recycling bins are not emptied frequently enough.

He said when bins are full, people are less likely to put materials in them. People think no one will pick the materials up, he said.

Although Skoog said his administration has no plans to try to initiate a better campus-wide recycling program, it is open to anyone with a good plan.

"I won't commit any energy to a program that will just start and end up not working. It needs to be a long-term project," he said.

"I won't get into something just to say I got involved in a recycling program."

Any effective recycling program would have to be subsidized in some way to make it cost effective, Zimmerman said.

There are several ways to raise money to subsidize recycling, he said.

"We could increase student fees or increase the price of soda," he said.

"None of these alternatives will be popular."

Moreland said she agreed it would take money to run a recycling program.

"I'm not in favor of increasing student fees," she said.

"I don't think we should stick it to the students anymore."

The alternative is for the University to spend its money more wisely and divert funds for a recycling program from somewhere else, she said.

CATEGORIES
To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD
Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Agbal people.

The U.N. newspaper Maanta reported Sunday that Aidid militia have abducted three elders who attended the conference, including Habre-Gedir Chief Ahmed Rage.

Retired U.S. Admiral Jonathan Howe, the U.N. secretary-general's special envoy, said to reporters he was concerned about the kidnapping of a key figure with whom U.N. officials have pursued a new initiative to resolve Somalia's conflict.

Rage is important to the restoration of peace not only in Mogadishu but throughout the country, Howe said.

U.N. officials have abandoned their hunt for Aidid, who is blamed for the killings of dozens of peacekeepers, in line with President Clinton's decision to refocus on diplomacy and his criticism of the United Nations for personalizing the conflict.

Mogadishu has been relatively calm since Aidid declared a unilateral cease-fire Oct. 9 and released a captured U.S. helicopter pilot and a Nigerian peacekeeper.

The moves were designed to overshadow Aidid's fugitive warlord image and enhance his political stature — a transition that clearly worries Ali Mahdi.

Ali Mahdi expressed concern Saturday about the new U.S. policy, when he said Aidid is biding his time until American troops leave by March 31, taking the backbone out of the U.N. force.

Aidid has said Clinton's plans to send thousands more soldiers to protect troops here are provocative.

About 300 artillery and engineers from the 24th Infantry Division arrived here Sunday from Fort Stewart, Ga., increasing U.S. troop strength to 6,900 ashore and 13,000 on ships offshore.

The U.N. army has about 30,000 troops.

POLITICS

President's use of military argued

Past, present presidents have faced opposition

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — When it counts, the mandate President Clinton really needs to send U.S. forces to perilous missions abroad won't be found in the fine print Congress is writing but in everyday America.

That's where the administration will have to win broadened support.

Without it, a president's authority to make commitments overseas can be hollow, though legally clear.

It ended that way for Lyndon Johnson. The presidential power he used to wage the war in Vietnam was undermined by the dissent and divisions that led him to renounce a re-election campaign.

George Bush said his presidential authority was enough to send American forces against Iraq but sought and got a use-of-force resolution before the Gulf War.

Now the White House has said Clinton has succeeded in holding the line for presidential powers with the compromises that settled Senate challenges to his authority to keep U.S. troops in Somalia until March 31 and possibly to use them in Haiti or Bosnia.

But the latest war-powers debate sent a message of discord in Congress and dissatisfaction in the country with policies that haven't been clearly set, understood or widely accepted.

The public-opinion polls reflect it and so does the mood in Congress.

Proposed legal restrictions eventually ended up as advisory measures and requests for consultation before troops are committed. But as those were being shaped, Democrats and Republicans expressed dismay at Clinton's handling of foreign policy.

They complained of confusion, befuddlement and disarray. One Republican called it a mess, another said Clinton had been indecisive and vacillating. A Democrat found it lacked clarity.

Foreign policy debates are routine in the Senate, often longer and at times angrier than this round. But they usually involve challenges to a stated policy, not the complaint threaded through this one that the administration doesn't really have a clear policy.

In compromise settlements, the Senate said Clinton should seek approval in Congress before committing troops to Haiti or Bosnia but didn't try to pass a law that said he has to.

On Somalia, the Senate did set a deadline, the March 31 withdrawal date Clinton had declared himself. As a practical matter, Clinton couldn't let that operation drag on longer anyhow without risking a political backlash.

And Clinton already had said flatly that he wouldn't send Americans to guarantee a Bosnian peace accord, should there be one, without congressional backing.

"I would want a clear expression of support from the U.S. Congress," he said a month ago.

Better to seek the backing that can help make an administration policy a national policy. Otherwise, support can fray when it is most vital.

That's what happened on Vietnam, said Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., who served there and later opposed the war. And support broke down.

"You can look at lots of other examples, Grenada, Panama, Iraq, where we developed the consensus and people came to support the policy," Kerry said. "The United States is strong when that happens."

Those three succeeded, quickly, with minimal casualties. Consensus is more elusive, victory harder to define, in the international peacekeeping missions at issue now.

Peace operations are a controversial subject, said Secretary of Defense Les Aspin, acknowledging that the current mood of the nation runs against increased American participation.

and knocking out radar sites to open an air corridor for Air Force bombing runs.

Members of the 101st were among the Fort Campbell contingent that first reported to Somalia on Dec. 26, 1992. Since then, some 1,500 troops from the division have served in the African nation, and more than 900 are stationed there now.

First activated at Camp Clairborne, La., the 101st has been based since 1956 at Fort Campbell, which straddles the Kentucky-Tennessee border.

Also calling Fort Campbell home are the 5th Special Forces Group (Airborne) and the 160th Special Operations Aviation Regiment (Airborne).

The 160th is Durant's unit, who was injured when his Blackhawk assault helicopter was shot down by militia loyal to Somali warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid on Oct. 3. Recovering from surgery for injuries, Durant was wheeled out on the airfield tarmac Sunday to meet some friends at a homecoming ceremony.

Pretty Prairie told to buy bottled water

About 35 Kansas towns have had nitrates in drinking water, according to the Kansas rural Water Association. Most drilled new wells, an option not available to Pretty Prairie because the contamination appears too widespread.

"About 35 Kansas towns have been slapped around by the EPA," Mayor Roger McClure said.

"I don't think anyone has been slapped around as hard as we have."

The state fined Pretty Prairie $12,675 in 1990.

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment, which enforces EPA regulations, dropped the fine after learning that the town took in only $16,000 a year in property taxes.

The town also agreed to build a water-treatment plant by October 1992 — but that plan was scrapped because of costs.

When the state realized it was getting nowhere with the town, the EPA took over.

The town now has hired an attorney, who asked the EPA to waive the drinking water standards and let residents continue drinking the water.

The request is under consideration. If it is rejected, the agency is prepared to give the town an ultimatum: fix the problem in six months or face fines of $10,000 a day.

Few in Pretty Prairie are shaken by the impending threat.

"At $10,000 a day it wouldn't take very long until we would be bankrupt," said Bob Seefeldt, a city council member.

"Then it would be the government's problem."

KSU's Student Diversity Campaign
The Human Rights Education Committee is continuing our campaign to promote diversity throughout the campus community. Our next step is to present a one-two hour program to interested student organizations and living groups during the academic year. The presenting team will consist of one faculty/staff member and two students. We are seeking volunteers who are willing to attend a half day training session and make 3-5 presentations during the academic year. Specific experience is not required, just a positive commitment to promoting diversity, a willingness to learn, and a desire to share that learning.
If you are interested please attend our informational meeting, Thursday, Oct. 28, 3:30 p.m. Union 212
If you have any questions please contact:

Regents seek funding increase

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Kansas Board of Regents Monday unveiled a proposed new funding program for Kansas' six public universities, primarily to improve salaries and stave off a loss of quality faculty members.

Called the Partnership for Excellence, the program is a successor to the Margin of Excellence program of enhanced funding for higher education. The Margin of Excellence was never fully implemented by the state because of budget constraints.

Regents Chairman John G. Montgomery, regents Fiscal Chairman Don Slawson and K-State President Jon Wefald outlined the three-year plan at a budget appeal hearing before Gov. Joan Finney and budget Director Gloria Timmer.

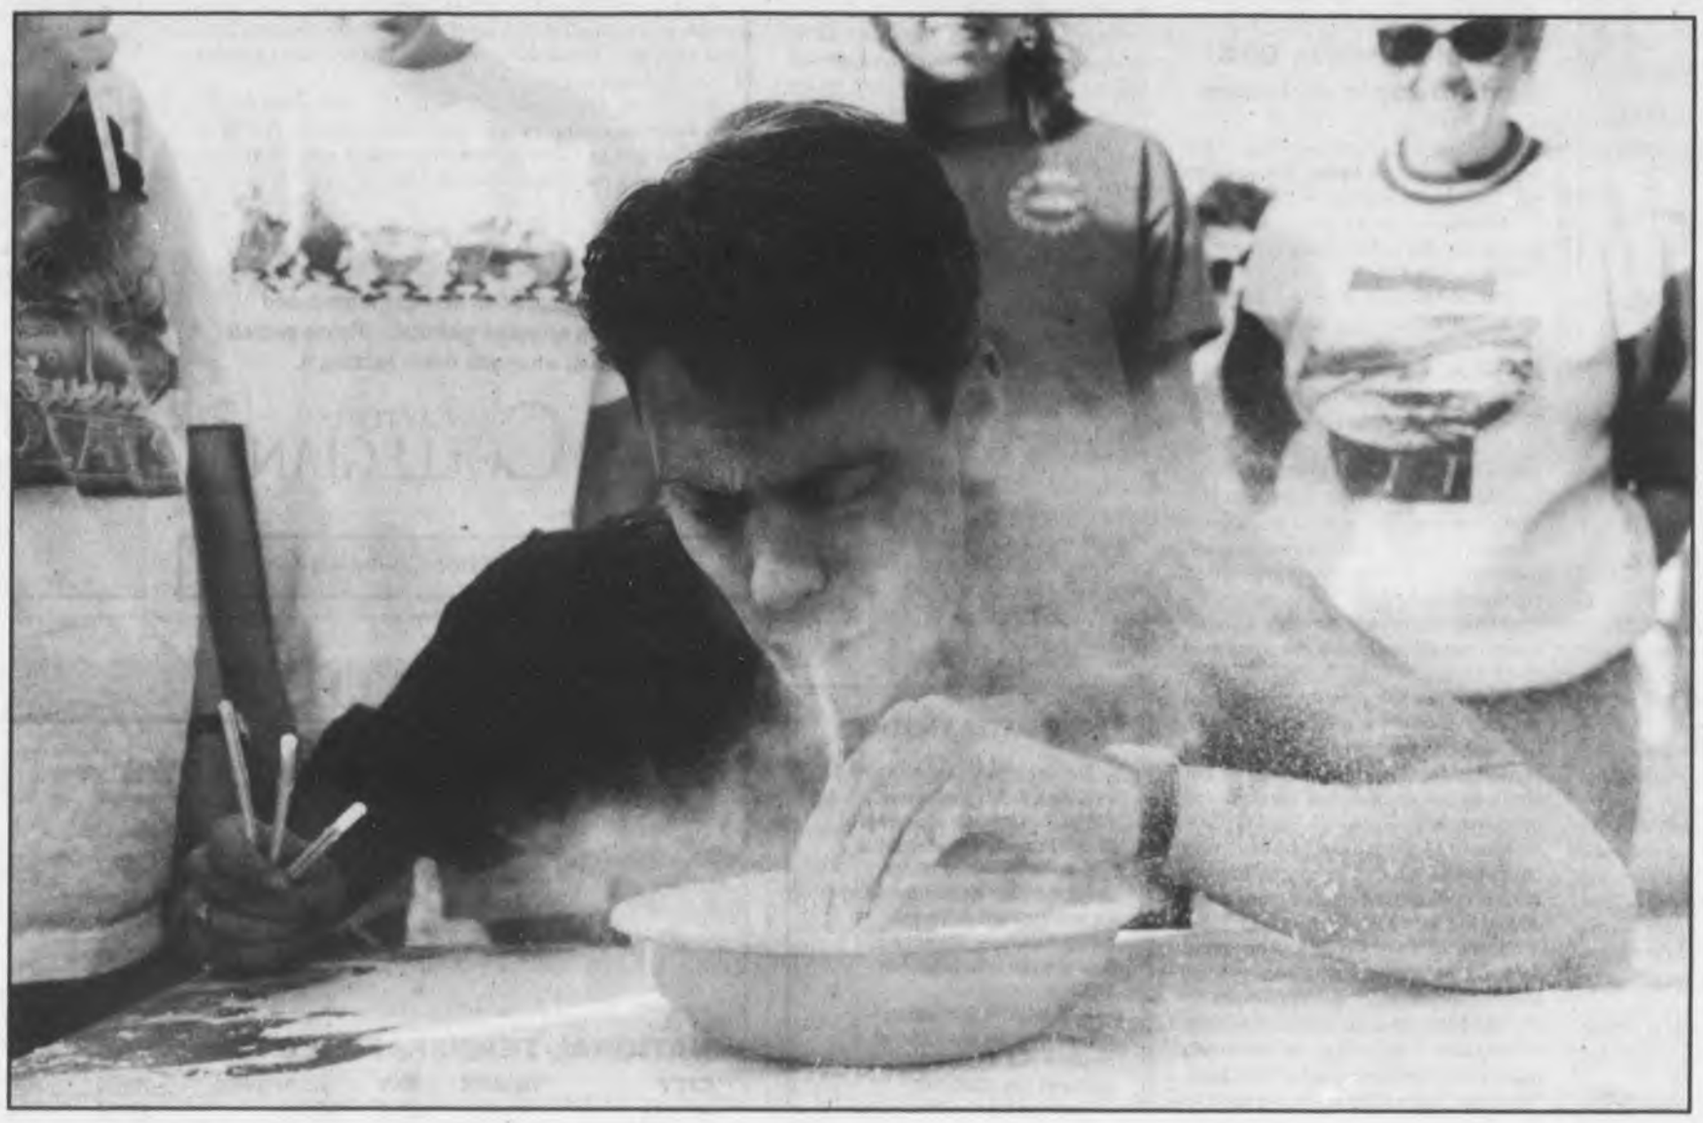
The regents appealed a $12.9-million reduction proposed by the Budget Division for the fiscal year 1995 funding for the six universities — the University of Kansas, K-State, Wichita, Emporia, Fort Hays and Pittsburg state universities.

The regents are seeking a $54.2-million funding increase for the budget year that begins July 1, $48.4 million of which would come from the state general fund.

Finney will decide the level of funding she wants to recommend for the regents' institutions and included that amount in the proposed state budget she submits to the Kansas Legislature in January. She gave no indication Monday what she might recommend.

The proposed Partnership for Excellence envisions a three-year program with an annual increase of 3 percent in state spending on the universities' base budgets and a 9-percent increase in resident student tuition at the three larger universities, 5 percent for residents at the three regional universities and 13 percent for non-residents at all schools.

However, the tuition increases are contingent on the governor and Legislature approving the 3-percent base budget increases. If that does not occur, the regents propose 5-percent tuition increases at KU, K-State and Wichita State and 3-percent increases at the other three schools.



Three percent of the tuition increase would be used to help fund the base budget increases for the universities, with the portion of the tuition increase above 3 percent — an estimated $8.3 million — going entirely for faculty salary increases.

"We're trying to revive the Margin of Excellence, but we're calling it the Partnership for Excellence," Montgomery said during the budget appeal hearing.

"The Partnership for Excellence will direct tuition increases to specific university improvements, seeking reversal of a trend in which tuition increases have been utilized to reduce the share of university funding from the state general fund," he said.

Regents figures show state general fund support for the system has increased an average of just 1.4 percent over the past three years, while tuition revenue has increased an average of 10.7 percent.

Montgomery, Slawson and Wefald all expressed concern that unless faculty salaries are bolstered, the Kansas universities are going to suffer a decline in faculty quality, especially at the University of Kansas and K-State.

Teams cheered their players on with enthusiasm as they gained points for homecoming during the Crazy Cat Kickoff.

This is the second year the residence halls have sponsored the event to accumulate points for homecoming. There were 13 teams, with 130 total people participating from the residence halls in the five events.

Marcia Hellwig, president of Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls, said she thought the event turned out to be a success.

"I'm very impressed. It turned out twice as good as last year. The events went a little slower than planned. We wound up cutting out a couple events in the interest of time, but everyone had fun."

"Last year this event was not such a big success because it was put together at the last minute, so there weren't many teams involved. But what we got out of it was that everybody that did participate had such a great time that they really encouraged us to make it bigger and better this year. That's what we've done with it," she said.

The Crazy Cat Kickoff consisted of three events — the Dog Biscuit Relay, the Carpet Square Relay and the White Cloud.

The Dog Biscuit Relay involved moving a bowlful of dog biscuits to another bowl several feet away. The contestants picked up biscuits in their mouths with clothespins.

In the Carpet Square Relay, participants were required to go from one sideline to another on a square piece of carpet. They were not allowed to touch the ground.

Participants in the White Cloud event used straws to retrieve a penny from the bottom of a bowl full of flour.

Scott Higbee, a junior in education participating on the Hay Ford I team, said it was a good way to start off homecoming.

"The event wasn't really for competition. It was more of a get-to-know-each-other kind of thing. It's good to get out and meet people and see the people you know," he said.

The first place winner for the residence hall competition was Purple Tide, representing Boyd Hall and Ford Hall. Hay Ford I, representing Haymaker Hall, Boyd Hall and Ford Hall, received second place. Coming in third place was Goodnow 6, representing Goodnow Hall, Putnam Hall and Van Zile Hall.

▶Burglary leaves shoe store short on shoes; help take a bite out of crime

If you want to help Manhattan Crimestoppers solve a recent crime of the week, watch for 146 pairs of stray shoes.

A burglary on Sept. 14 at Burke Shoes, 680 Manhattan Town Center, has resulted in about $5,300 in lost sales, manager Todd Hartshorn said.

"We've lost a lot of sales by not having the shoes to sell to people," he said.

The stolen shoes were mostly men's shoes, and 70 percent were Nikes, Hartshorn said.

"There were a lot of nines, tens and elevens stolen," he said. "They even stole some baby shoes."

The burglars gained entry by ripping the back door off with a crow bar or similar object, Hartshorn said.

The burglary was discovered at 8 a.m. Sept. 14, when Hartshorn opened the door and found boxes scattered everywhere. He then discovered that huge boxes used for trash had been dumped by the burglars and used to carry smaller shoe boxes, he said. Hartshorn said he has not heard of any similar burglaries. So far, none of the shoes has been located, he said.

Anyone who has information about this or any other crime can call Crimestoppers in Manhattan at 539-7777. Crimestoppers accepts collect calls, and callers have the option of remaining anonymous. Cash rewards of up to $1,000 are given for information.

▶Car burglaries prevalent off campus

Last week Manhattan experienced several car break-ins, with seven occurring within two days.

Three car break-ins were reported Saturday, and on Wednesday, Oct. 20, four break-ins were reported.

Steve French, captain of the Riley County Police Department Patrol Division, said officers were not able to establish a pattern for the break-ins.

"The break-ins are very similar," French said. "They are what we call opportunity crimes. Whoever it is sees an opportunity to take something, and they break into the car."

The four break-ins on Oct. 20 were reported between 8:37 and 11:41 a.m. The break-ins last Saturday were reported at the same time because the break-ins occurred at the same address.

"The best advice I can give is to park in a lit area," French said. "Then you need to take your valuable items with you, or if you can't take it with you, put it in your trunk."

Dave Springer, K-State police officer, said the break-ins are isolated to off-campus areas.

Faculty dissatisfied in rewards for student advising, teaching

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

K-State faculty expressed their dissatisfaction with the rewards given for teaching, advising and the balance of funds that go toward administrative functions in the 1992 Faculty Satisfaction and Morale Report.

In the report, given in the fall of 1991, K-State's faculty were asked their views on several issues, including faculty workload and instruction, rewards and values placed on advising and University service, and the amount of resources allocated to administrative functions.

On the average, most faculty members judged their workload to be about right or too much. Fewer than 2 percent thought their workload was too little.

In answer to questions regarding the rewards for such things as undergraduate and graduate student advising, public service and teaching, the mean response was too little.

Professors and instructors of all ranks on average found the rewards of teaching to be too little. Associate and assistant professors and instructors ranked the rewards of undergraduate advising between too little and way too little.

Aruna Michie, associate professor of political science and president of Faculty Senate, said rewards for advising have been slow in coming.

"The major issue is not just the load. Most are happy to do it," Michie said. "You just don't get rewarded for it.

"It's easy to set someone up with a program. The hard part is working with students on both ends of the scale, undergraduate and graduate," she said. "It gets more difficult when you tell a student who's been having trouble that they might have to sit out for a while."

"The major issue is not just the load. Most are happy to do it. You just don't get rewarded for it."

ARUNA MICHIE
ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF POLITICAL SCIENCE

Paul Burden, assistant dean of education, said when a faculty member's performance is reviewed, advising is not emphasized. He said the problem involves funding from the University.

"If a person's doing the best they can do, they might get a 3-percent raise, but at another institution, they might end up with an 8- or 9-percent raise," Burden said.

"The faculty may feel they're doing a fine job of advising, but may not feel rewarded for it," he said.

According to the average faculty response, the amount of resources allocated to administrative functions was thought to be between about right and too much, with a few responses of way too much, and less than 2 percent answering too little.

Michie said she thought most faculty members didn't see the bloat as being at the top level of administration, but at the middle and lower levels, such as centers that branch off of deans' offices.

She said it was also difficult to distinguish between faculty and administrators in those cases.

"The problem is who is an administrator and who is not," Michie said. "A number of these centers may well have paid directors and part-time directors and faculty.

"A lot of faculty tend to lump administration into one category. That's clearly not what's going on. We've suggested that the administration do their own survey to see what they find," she said.

Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said a cost study conducted by the Kansas Board of Regents showed that for

Food policy OK with state, but not Union

The fate of a policy to allow multicultural groups to bring homemade food into the K-State Union is still uncertain, Jack Sills, director of the Union, said Monday.

A policy was created last semester to allow home-cooked food to be brought into the Union for multicultural events.

During a recent inspection, the Kansas Department of Health and Environment informed the Union the policy violated state regulations. The regulation prohibits food from unlicensed sources from being served in a facility with a licensed kitchen, such as the Union.

The University requested a written clarification, and the KDHE responded earlier this month with a letter.

"The KDHE determined that the Union is more of a facility than just a kitchen. So, that regulation does not apply," Sills said.

However, Sills said the Union policy is still in violation of a campus sanitation policy that prohibits food from being brought on campus that is not made in a licensed kitchen.

Ron Bridges, campus sanitarian, said the University did not want to endanger the public or be liable in a lawsuit if anyone got sick.

"We are caught in the middle of a lot of regulations that are made to protect the public," Bridges said.

The Union Governing Board will probably review the policy at its Nov. 4 meeting, Sills said.

The Union is still trying to come up with a workable policy, he said.

After the UGB decides what it wants to do with the policy, the campus sanitation committee will have to review and approve it.

New plus/minus GPA system topic of forum

K-State students will have the opportunity to voice their opinions on the plus/minus grading policy today.

An open forum will be presented by faculty and student senators at 4 p.m. in Throckmorton 313.

Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Chairman William Schapaugh said the forum will be an outlet for discussion of the policy, which is scheduled to be implemented in the fall semester of 1994.

"Student and faculty representatives will be there, as well as Provost (James) Coffman to answer any questions," he said. "We also will look to students to raise any issues that may have been overlooked in the implementation process."

Schapaugh said he has already heard from students who are concerned about the policy.

"The main objection I've heard from students is that the plus/minus system has the potential to hurt an exceptional student's GPA and lessen his or her chances for competitive awards and scholarships."

Faculty members have also complained about the policy, fearing students will dispute grades more often, adding to their workload, he said.

Schapaugh said the Academic Affairs Committee has three options after the forum.

"We could take no action. We could reconsider the policy, or we could modify the existing policy," he said. "Whatever we decide to do, we want to get the students involved in the process."

Faculty Senate President Aruna Michie said students were the first to recommend a plus/minus grading policy.

"The students originally brought this idea to us four or five years ago," Michie said.

U.N. convoy attacked; 1 killed, 7 wounded

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — A U.N. convoy came under fire today at the front line between Bosnian government and Croat forces.

A Danish peacekeeper was presumed killed, and seven Dutch drivers were wounded.

It was among the highest U.N. casualties in a single day since civil war began in Bosnia-Herzegovina more than 18 months ago.

Also in central Bosnia, U.N. peacekeepers were trying to reach the village of Stupni Do, the site of an alleged massacre of Muslims.

Bosnian radio said more than 80 villagers were killed, and 120 were taken away by Croat forces Saturday.

"The corpses were dumped into houses, which burned down afterwards," the broadcast said.

Lt. Col. Bill Aikman, a U.N. representative in Sarajevo, said peacekeepers got close enough to Stupni Do only to confirm that it had been burned.

They were not able to determine what happened to villagers.

The Croat attack on Stupni Do was an apparent reprisal for the Bosnian government's capture last week of Kopljari, a nearby village.

Aikman said 20 to 30 civilians were seen being forced out of Kopljari.

Riley County might re-establish the curbside recycling program next year within the city of Manhattan.

The program was discussed at the Riley County Solid Waste Management Committee meeting Monday night.

"It's in the plan to develop one, but there's nothing concrete," said Monty Wedel, recycling coordinator and planning director of Riley County. "We'll continue to look at it as things develop."

Howard Wilson, owner of Howie's Recycling, said he would be willing to work with the county in developing a curbside recycling program.

Wal-Mart discontinued the use of their recycling bins Friday and told people to take recyclable items to Howie's instead, Wilson said.

"Wal-Mart told me that now that Manhattan had a recycling program, they didn't need to provide the bins anymore because they could use my facility," Wilson said.

Wal-Mart has been paying Howie's Recycling to haul and sort out recyclable material but hasn't found a need to continue, Wilson said.

The possibility of recycling Christmas trees within the city was also discussed.

Such a proposal won't be enacted until tree-dumping sites are secured at Tuttle Creek Reservoir, Wedel said.

As part of the recycling discussion, Wilson said Howie's will take magazines only in January beginning this year.

Old phone books may also be dropped off after new ones are distributed for recycling, Wilson said.

Manhattan residents who would like to drop off recyclable material may do so from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays through Fridays and from 8 a.m. to 12 p.m. on Saturdays, Wilson said.

UNICORN delivers electronic menus

Area restaurants' offerings compiled for easy access

DERYL CUNNINGHAM
Collegian

Students who are working on computers late at night now have a food delivery menu at their fingertips.

Dudley Hunkins, senior in computer science, has compiled a computerized list of restaurants that deliver in the Manhattan area.

The list of restaurants and their menus can be found in the University's Unicorn system.

Unicorn provides easy access to a variety of campus information.

"It's very easy to use. The only command you need to know is 'unicorn,'" Betsy Edwards, co-coordinator of the Unicorn information system, said.

After logging onto the University's mainframe, the command "unicorn" will put students into the program where the food menu is located.

Unicorn providers can decide if their information is worthwhile, she said. If it is, they may add the information into the system.

"Anyone could potentially become a provider of Unicorn. There are no credentials," Edwards said.

Hunkins got his idea to put information in the computer system by ordering food late at night.

One night he wanted to order food from Hardee's, and the menu had changed drastically. Hunkins asked Hardee's to send him a menu. The idea for a computer menu just hit him, he said.

"Immediately I wanted to put it in the computer," Hunkins said.

"I would look into the phone book to see who delivered food, and I also had to know what kinds of food they delivered. I got all the menus that deliver and put them in the computer.

"The reason I put the information on the computer is so K-State students may use it," he said.

It provides a commercial service, he said.

Edwards said Hunkins' list is beneficial.

"I can see where having that information in Unicorn will help save time," Edwards said.

"Making information available to others is an important way of sharing. It's a type of sharing that helps benefit the University."

"No matter where I'm at I can get on a computer, and the information is available immediately," Hunkins said. "Otherwise I would have to carry every bit of information around with me."

fiscal year 1992 at K-State, instruction was funded at 85 percent compared to its peer institutions. Academic administration and institutional support were funded at 62.3 percent and 61.4 percent, respectively.

K-State has the lowest percentage of administrative expenditures in the Big Eight. On the whole, K-State was funded at 79 percent of its peer institutions.

"This is the result of an effort to redirect as much money as we possibly can to instructional research and services," Rawson said. "Overall, we're funded at 79 percent, but in administration and support, it's generally in the low 60s."

May history reflect the Denny case's role in a violent America

Before the history books record the outcome of the Reginald Denny beating case as a moment when justice was served, the verdict that excused hatred, violence and lawlessness must be shown for what it is — an abomination.

An unidentified alternate juror said during a press conference Monday the acquittals of Damian Williams and Henry Watson condoned violence as a way to vent anger and frustration.

"The message the jury sent out basically is that if you don't believe or agree with a verdict, it is OK to go out into the streets, to choose certain fellow human beings, throw rocks at their cars, beat them up and take their property," the juror said.

"All that just to vent your own anger and frustration," the juror said.

To excuse violence done in anger or frustration would be to turn the world over to mass chaos.

We in America have always been taught that we are all responsible for our actions, until the Denny verdict came along, that is.

It's now OK for human beings to smash fellow human beings' skulls with bricks because you are troubled by the world as it is.

What kind of message are we sending the children?

Will Timmy think it's OK to smash his sister's face with a brick because he is angry with her?

Certainly those in Congress who are now debating the issue of TV violence should consider this.

A frightening precedent of violence has been made.

And what a warped sense of reality Denny, Williams and Watson must now live in — a world without punishment or guilt, conscience or justice.

Perhaps for them it is too late.

But for the children, we must correct what is a demoralizing wrong.

As the alternate juror said in her closing statement:

"Unless we as a people really punish those that do wrong, we will be punished as a nation. God have mercy on America."

If we really taxed sin, then Uncle Sam would be paying

Another shining example of legislating morality is coming from the friendly pillars of saintly behavior in Washington, D.C.

President Clinton's proposed health-care plan's most popular feature at this point is the addition of 75 cents to the federal cigarette tax, which is now 24 cents. That's an increase of more than 300 percent. When health-care legislation and plummeting popularity are on the line, cigarettes are three times as sinful as they were before.

So who ultimately pays? Consumers, for one: They can choose to buy less, smoke a cheaper brand, or take the loss. Or, in theory, they'll stop smoking to save money, and everyone will be just that much healthier. Isn't science wonderful?

But who really has to pay is the tobacco industry, including farmers. Have you ever noticed when you toss around the words "sin" and "tax" in the same sentence, there is much bureaucratic applause, an industry is harmed, and nobody thinks twice?

Actually, if you follow the logic behind a sin tax, fewer people will smoke, which means that there will be less revenue from that sin tax, and so there will have to be more sin taxes.

Smoking is the obvious sin, but perhaps after that we can go after a few more.

The Horseradish Tax. I don't know whether or not horseradish is bad for you, but it should be, and it's just generally disgusting. Let's tax it.

The Nose-Blowing Tax. If you blow your nose loudly and consecutively in an annoying fashion in public, you should be taxed. The same goes for throat-clearing and any other loud upper-respiratory function.

The Fred Phelps Tax. Since Phelps' church is basically just a tax shelter so that he can say "fag," "hate," "queer" and "hell" as many times as possible, he should have to pay 75 cents every time he says one of those words. It's only fair.

I'd much rather see someone light up a cigarette than hear some of the things that idiot says.

But of course, these taxes will never be enacted. If we really taxed sin, politicians would be poor. After all, we do allow them to make the laws.

SARA SMITH

The federal government never ceases to amaze me. They actually think they have the right to make a call about what is morally and ethically wrong.

If anyone is going to determine whether what I do is right or wrong, I don't want it to be the influence peddlers in Washington who sell their souls for re-election.

You can accuse the feds of almost anything but a good strong sense of morality. They sit around in their three-piece suits, creating more wasteful government agencies to throw our money at, and they actually think that the one decadent sin in society that we should put a tax on is smoking? Get a real sin.

I can think of a whole myriad of really juicy sins that are in fact committed by none other than the same government.

Can we please tax Bill Clinton every time he dances around answering a question? Can we slap a tax on Congress every time it gives itself another pay raise or approves an asinine government subsidy for gourmet-salad research?

Let's tax the IRS just for existing. I'd like to tax the Pentagon for every one of those hammers it buys for the bargain price of $500. (I've always wanted to cut out the middle man, send a few screwdrivers to Washington instead of my taxes, and call it even.)

How about taxing bad verdicts from juries? Think of the revenue from the Los Angeles area alone.

If we could actually collect these taxes, we could pay for more than health care. We could pay off the national debt.

A Fermi Solution to opinion woes

A little ditty about one of my personal heroes, Enrico Fermi:

In July 1945, America exploded the world's first atomic bomb in the desert sands of New Mexico. Shortly after the tremendous explosion, Fermi, an Italian-American physicist who had played a significant role in the bomb's birth, stood up and released a handful of shredded paper. By watching where the pieces fell as they were blown by the bomb's shock wave, he mentally calculated that the total energy of the explosion was equal to 10 thousand tons of TNT.

After weeks of examining test results from the mountain of sensing equipment present at the time, experts came to the same estimate that Fermi did. And it only took him about 10 seconds to figure it out.

It's called the Fermi Solution. It means that you take a seemingly insurmountable problem, break it down into its constituent parts, solve each problem one at a time, and before you know it the whole thing has been alleviated. And it can be applied to any situation in any time.

I've recently faced my own seemingly insurmountable problem. And I've begun looking for a Fermi Solution.

You see, before and after the arrival of Pat Robertson and Fred Phelps to the hallowed halls of this campus, I witnessed an almost fanatic zeal as the opinion-page editor. A zeal to silence both men, to suppress anything they might say, to slam the door shut on any utterance forthcoming from their lips.

It's nothing new. Every time John Hart or Brad Seabourn come out with something rubbing someone the wrong way, the letters come in a tumultuous wave of anger, dissension and basic hatred. You may not know them, but both of them are fine people, merely possessing a differing viewpoint. Or, so goes my opinion.

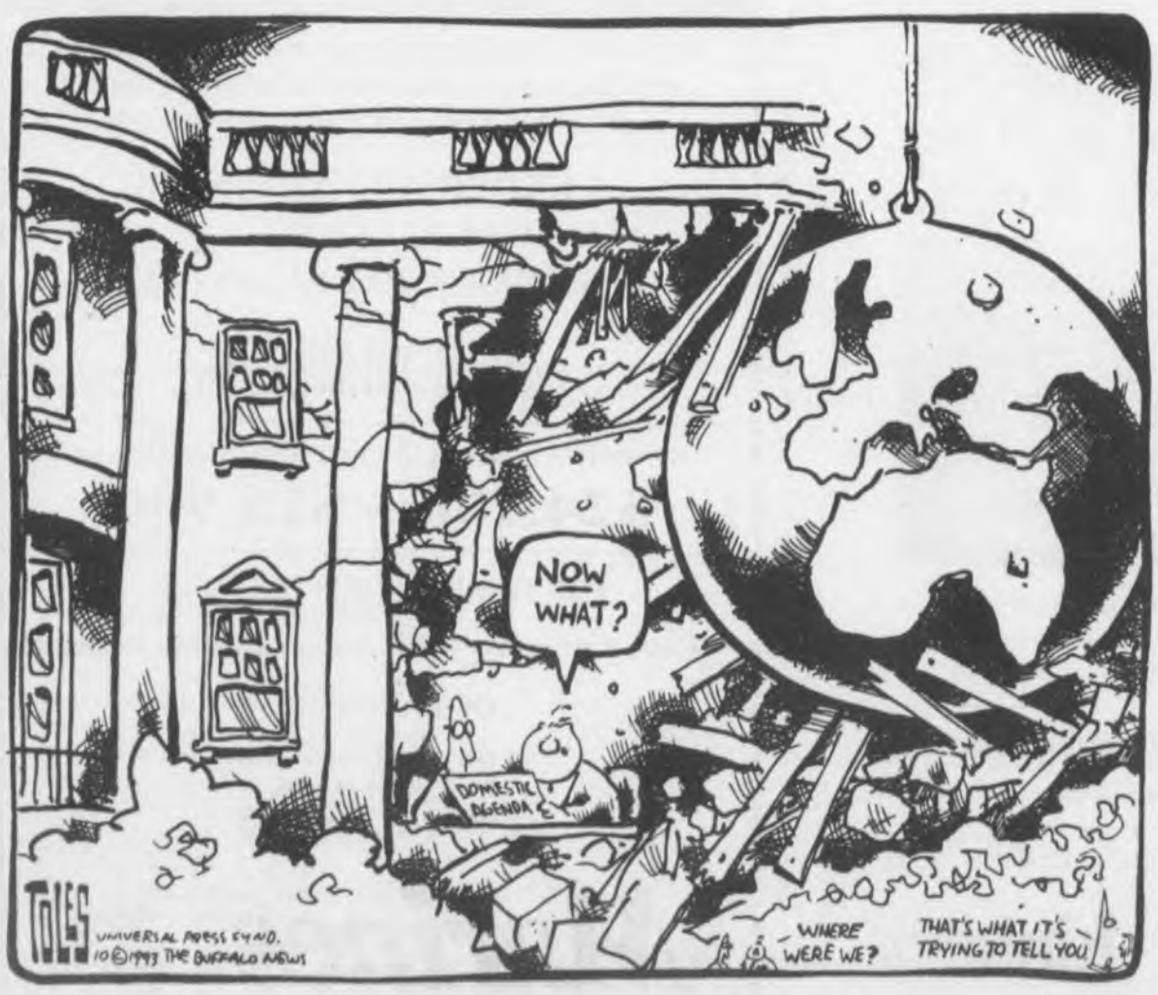
And that's all it is — An opinion. A statement of belief based on a personal viewpoint of how the world is or should be. And mine is no better, or no worse, than Robertson's or Phelps' or Limbaugh's or Hart's or Seabourn's.

Yet, I continue to receive letters from those who firmly believe that when these people speak, they are trying to force their viewpoints or lifestyles upon everyone else. They believe that subversives such as Robertson are evil and worthy of fear – Ol' Scratch sowing the seeds of dissent among the peasants.

This idea holds as much water as the idea that parents are incapable of controlling what their children watch on television. Never mind that there is an "off" switch, and never mind that people are just as capable of not reading something they know beforehand will only make them angry.

So, what to do. I'm not sure. The constituent problems seem to be one of insecurity, bigotry and narrow-mindedness:

Insecurity in one's own beliefs to the point that if people believe something to the contrary, they should be silenced. Hitler's spin doctors figured that one out 50 years ago.



Bigotry in the fact that what one says holds more importance than what another may say. An opinion is only as important as the individual reading or listening to it allows it to be. So, what is my Fermi Solution? I suppose that it's in the upper right-hand corner of this page that reads "opinion." An opinion is presented for consideration, and anyone has the right to agree with it or get angry at it. But saying that one forces an opinion on another is pure bunk.

But that's just my opinion. It's up to you to decide how much water it holds. And whatever your conclusion, I'll keep on saying it, and I seriously doubt it can ever hurt you.

Part of an education is being able to clean up after yourselves

Editor,

On Saturday morning our chemistry club was to present two demonstrations as part of Family Weekend. I went into Willard 114 about 8:50 a.m., and it was a trash pit. There is no excuse for this. There were Collegians all over, empty pop cans, candy bar and gum wrappers, pencils, plastic soda containers, notebook paper and small paper scraps.

I haven't taught in this room for several years, but I was told by some of my colleagues that this was normal. Well, it isn't going to stay normal. The janitors (environmental enhancers) are not to blame. They would have cleaned it in their normal routine Monday morning. The point is, it shouldn't have needed to be cleaned at all.

The students using this room should have some responsibility for keeping it clean. If they bring a Collegian in, they can take it out and the same with the other items. There are plenty of waste baskets around. If the students are too weak to lift a pop can to remove it, then they should report to Lafene and certainly not go to class.

A degree from K-State implies there is a measure of responsibility attached. If the students don't want to assume that responsibility, then I invite them to get a degree somewhere else.

Rec Check upgrade allows more users

Recreational Services has a new informational service phone line.

Poor student access to Recreational Services information has resulted in a new informational phone line that will allow faster information access for more students.

Russell Spicer, assistant director/facility manager of the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex, said the old phone line's recording was too long and inefficient.

"We timed the old phone recording, and it took more than two minutes," Spicer said.

"This was a real waste of time for someone who needed information that was at the very end of the recording.

The new phone line takes between 30 seconds to one minute, depending on the category you choose."

The old intramural hotline number was shut off Oct. 20, Spicer said.

The new system, which is known as Rec Check, will use the same number, 532-6000, Marian Brandenburg, office assistant for Recreational Services, said.

Rec Check, which went into effect Oct. 11, will allow more students to use the phone line at the same time, Raydon Robel, director of Recreational Services, said.

NEW PHONE LINE

■ Recreational Services' new phone line can be reached at 532-6000. The extensions are:

1. rec complex
2. pools
3. exercise sessions
4. intramurals
5. outdoor equipment rentals

"As many as 18 people can use the phone line at once," he said. "It used to be just one."

Robel said the need for a new system became apparent because of student complaints about how long it took to get the information they needed. He said the idea for the service came about through the telecommunications department.

"The local telecommunications department started voice mail, and we discovered an auto attendant area that would work very well for our information line," Robel said.

The new phone service will cost around $50 a month, in comparison to the old phone line, which was around $15 a month, Robel said.

"The old phone line was basically the cost of an old recorder and a basic phone line," Robel said.

"There is a service cost," Spicer said. "What we gain from the service will far surpass the cost involved."

Union Program Council has created a committee to emphasize diversity and similarities of students throughout the campus.

The Multicultural Committee program was designed primarily to help coordinate activities promoting understanding and interaction between cultures.

The programming for the committee includes events ranging from an international coffee and tea hour to a band playing tropical rhythms of the Caribbean. Even a film about "homophobia" has been presented to students to help better understand the fear and persecution of lesbians and gay men in today's culture.

NEW COMMITTEE

■ The Multicultural committee will conduct activities until Nov. 17.

■ From 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. every Wednesday, the committee schedules entertainment about different cultures.

"We want to enhance the students' knowledge of cultures other than their own. Being part of UPC will hopefully make a statement to the campus," said Ann Claussen, assistant director and program director for the Union.

The committee's adviser said she is excited about the committee.

"It has such great potential — the limits with what we can do with a group like this is endless," Jennifer Lee, adviser and former student, said.

The committee's activities will run Sept. 1 through Nov. 17.

Every Wednesday from 2 to 4 p.m., the group provides coffees and teas from around the world with an entertainment time for students to show or teach part of their own culture. Students can dance, speak in their native language, sing or just explain certain rituals of their culture.

Intriguing race shaping up for Big Eight award

Snyder and Gibbs appear as strong candidates thus far into 1993 season

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — As Big Eight Conference teams slice into the meat of the season, an interesting race is shaping up for coach of the year honors.

After this past weekend's performances, K-State's Bill Snyder and Oklahoma's Gary Gibbs could be considered strong candidates.

There's still plenty of time for other candidates to develop, including Nebraska's Tom Osborne, whose Huskers are unbeaten and ranked No. 6 and suddenly in the driver's seat for the conference title.

K-State's 16-16 tie with Colorado Saturday dropped the Buffs from No. 16 to No. 20 in the Associated Press poll.

But it also elevated the Wildcats to No. 25, their first poll appearance since November 1970, when they made a brief visit at No. 20 in the 20-team list.

No. 14 Oklahoma, in the meantime, continued to muffle the critics of Gibbs with a 38-23 victory over Kansas.

Nebraska, hosting Missouri on a week the Tigers apparently were fated to be inept, rolled to an easy 49-7 triumph, Missouri's 14th straight road loss.

The only Big Eight game not involving at least one ranked team was probably the most dramatic.

Ty Stewart broke out of his slump with a pair of third-quarter field goals, and coach Jim Walden gambled and won when Iowa State rallied for a 20-17 victory over Oklahoma State.

Coach Jim Walden ordered a screen pass on fourth down, and Bob Utter found James McMillion on a 6-yard touchdown play with 5:12 left.

The Cyclones (2-5 overall, 1-2 Big Eight) had lost five straight, including two consecutive Big Eight games.

Oklahoma State could still have tied, but Lawson Vaughn missed a 39-yard field goal attempt with 25 seconds left. The Cowboys (3-4, 0-3) had been on the Iowa State 10, but quarterback Gary Porter lost 12 yards when he fell down while being rushed.

With no timeouts left, Oklahoma State had to line up hurriedly for Vaughn, who missed from inside the 40 for the first time in two years.

"My condolences to Oklahoma State, my cheers to Iowa State," Walden said.

"It couldn't have been an easy to game to lose. I'd tell (Oklahoma State coach) Pat Jones if he's going to lose to somebody like that, it couldn't have been to a better person than me. We needed something to get us going."

Calvin Jones ran for two touchdowns and caught one of Tommie Frazier's two TD passes to lead the Cornhuskers.

"The thing they did was control the line of scrimmage on both sides of the ball," Missouri coach Bob Stull said.

"Offensively, we couldn't pass protect, so obviously we couldn't throw it. Defensively, they were moving the ball with the inside run. We were worried about the option, and they came and ran it right at us."

"We probably played our most complete game of the year," Osborne said.

One week after he was knocked unconscious in the game with Colorado, Oklahoma quarterback Cale Gundy threw for three touchdowns and ran for a fourth while helping Oklahoma take an insurmountable lead over Kansas.

Gundy, who didn't practice at full speed until Wednesday, completed his first six passes and wound up 19 of 26 for 324 yards.

Oklahoma (6-1, 2-1) blitzed Kansas with three second-quarter touchdowns on its way to a 31-7 halftime lead.

The Jayhawks (3-5, 1-2) ran the ball impressively in the second half and got within 31-21, but weren't able to overcome the big deficit, although freshman tailback June Henley ran for 178 yards.

ATOs down Africa team 3-2 for title

COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Alpha Tau Omegas and the Africa soccer team squared off for the final game of the Intramural Soccer Championship Sunday evening.

The ATO's, who won the championship last year, captured the title again this year, 3-2, after dominating the ball in the second half.

The game was scoreless until late in the first half when Victor Atughonu, soccer club president, scored with about five minutes left. It was the only goal of the first half.

Early in the second half, Tim Orindgreff scored with an open shot on Africa's goalie.

The Africa team, made up of students from Africa, tried to regain control of the ball but were once again pushed back to their goal by the ATO's.

Chris Hyer of the ATO's scored the second goal with a cross kick out of the crowd of both teams on the sideline.

"This was a tough and good game," Hyer said.

"This team is our toughest competition by far. We just took the season one game at a time."

The Africa team tried to work the ball to the ATO's goal but wasn't successful until the last 22 seconds.

The Africa team worked the ball between two players and scored after the ATO goalie failed to capture the ball.

"They work the ball a lot better as a team," Brian French of the Africa team said.

"We just didn't work as well as a team as they did."

Both teams had a good following of fans. The Africa team brought drums to help cheer the team on, the team members said.

The Africa team kept asking the fans to play the drums when they had the ball.

Many of the intramural soccer teams, like the Africa team, are made up of international students, so referees and soccer teams follow the rules of the Federation of International Football Association.

This helps the teams that aren't used to playing by the rules that students here followed in high-school competition.

Gundy nets weekly honor in split vote over Lockett

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Oklahoma quarterback Cale Gundy, who came back to pass for 324 yards Saturday after being knocked unconscious and spending a night in the hospital with a concussion, was named Big Eight player of the week Monday.

Gundy won the weekly award in a split vote over K-State wide receiver Kevin Lockett, who had six catches for 136 yards.

Gundy was injured in Oklahoma's Oct. 16 loss to Colorado, the Sooner's first loss of the season, and did not practice until Wednesday.

But he completed 19 of 26 passes for the third highest passing total in Oklahoma history in a 38-23 win over Kansas on Saturday.

Colorado linebacker Sam Rogers was named defensive player of the week after making 13 tackles in a 16-16 tie with K-State.

COLUMN

Gun control editorial based on false generalities

The absurd issue of gun control has snowballed since around the time of an attempted assassination of former president Ronald Reagan.

Now the government is wasting valuable time with debates and hearings on the issue and the well-known Brady Bill.

A recent Collegian opinion-page column, along with a couple of letters to the editor, sparked my concern for informing readers of a point of view based on facts and rights of Americans to keep and bear arms.

The column was an example of someone making judgments based on false generalities.

Statements in the column were carelessly written with no regard for finding facts to support the stance taken by the writer. The column closes with a statement that proves just the opposite of its apparent stance.

I quote, "If we don't stop fooling ourselves about the intentions of the writers of the Constitution, we may fool ourselves right into something we can't get out of."

Supporters of the Second Amendment could not agree more with this statement.

You see, the Second Amendment grants each citizen the right to keep and bear arms. If we don't stop fooling ourselves about the intentions of this right, we may fool ourselves into banning firearms all together.

TAD MUSSELWHITE

The banning of guns would simply, without argument, be a violation of citizens' constitutional rights.

The column also proposed the policy of making a gun next to impossible to obtain.

Waiting periods for guns is one option being kicked around. The tradeoffs a waiting period offers appear to be a quick, easy solution — small costs in exchange for gains in public safety.

A study of this idea has been conducted by David Kopel, attorney and gun-control expert. This study concluded that when all the evidence is weighed, there is a very real possibility that waiting periods on guns threaten public safety.

Under such circumstances, law-enforcement resources would be diverted, and law-abiding citizens would be disarmed. Kopel does concede that federally imposed waiting periods would save at least one life somewhere. But he said the United States, as a whole, would be marginally less secure against crime, violence and fear as a result of the restriction.

The columnist, who advocated restrictions on guns as a solution to violence and crime, contradicted her stance for a solution.

She mentioned the fact that the class for which she student teaches watched an "award-winning documentary" called "Scared Straight."

The column said the show was about "throwing juvenile delinquents in prison for three intensive hours of interaction with violent criminals in the hopes they'll be scared enough to avoid ever going back."

The solution to the problem of violence committed by gun-toting youth — and adults for that matter — suddenly is evident.

Yes, the solution is enforcement of existing laws. Anyone who believes laws are being enforced and prosecuted should request information on arrests, prosecutions and sentencing for firearms-related crimes from the federal and state courts.

Juveniles committing crimes are merely being slapped on the wrist. Scaring juveniles is not enough. Legislation should not waste time punishing law-abiding gun owners and users in an attempt to punish those who do break the law.

I am an avid hunter, as many other gun owners are. The columnist advocating gun control falsely assumes that, "Most people who use handguns and automatic weapons use them to shoot people."

Fact is, most gun owners (no matter what type of gun they own), use these guns for safe recreational purposes and for self-defense.

The "lost generation" referred to in the column is pointing the finger of blame at opponents of gun control.

Regardless of how ominous this is, the reason for the label is not because our generation can buy a gun.

Wake up.

Isn't the disregard of human morals the reason for such a tag?

Guns are not to blame. What about the media? Youth are growing up in environments that glamorize violence. If you don't agree, watch television any time during the day.

Find out what happens to criminals after committing a crime. Find out how much of their sentence, if any at all, they actually serve.

Solutions do exist that do not infringe on law-abiding citizens' rights and that would make society safer.

In today's society, the ability to conduct instant background checks at the time of purchase does exist.

On-line information accessed by law enforcement can also be accessed by dealers of weapons.

There is no need for restrictions on certain guns, nor is there a need for a waiting period.

There is a need to reduce violence and crime, but don't target guns or gun owners.

As the saying goes, "Guns don't kill people, people kill people."

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES By Gypsy Rose

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your musical talents have been stifled too long. Form a band and call it Rockin' with Wefald.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Going to class + doing your homework = a very boring life.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): That person you have been drooling over in class is interested. Buy a directory and give that person a call.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Give Student Body President Ed Skoog a call, and ask him to go fishing. Then ask about his wheellock.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Money is tight, so start searching for change in the couch, chair and car.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Make some prank phone calls. Who knows? That person might be bored and actually talk to you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Don't eat at Derby today. Ramen in your room would be an infinitely better choice.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Go dig through the trash chute in front of Anderson and see if you can find neat things.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Adopt the cat you found in the street today.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Stay at home today. The "Show" will be giving you a phone call.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Halloween is fast approaching. Go to your party as President Wefald in the nude. Two bags of cotton on leashes will pass for Toughy and Popcorn.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Student Body Vice President Eric Henry needs something to do. Flood his office with calls about the plight of freshmen who don't wear their beanies.

REVIEW

Verlaines rehash '80s sound

HAROLD RING
Collegian

When the Verlaines make music, they recycle. Unfortunately, you can still tell what compost heap it comes from.

The Verlaines' sound is influenced by the music that came out of Great Britain in the 1980s. Bands like Echo and the Bunnymen and the Fixx come to mind when listening to the Verlaines.

They're even on an 80s pop label, Slash. That was Madonna's label when she first assaulted the public with her sexuality.

The Verlaines play the kind of music that made movies like "Pretty in Pink" and "The Breakfast Club" so cool. This genre of music isn't bad, but it has been done before. Today the music just sounds tired.

However, the good thing about this album is there isn't a hint of the grunge sound anywhere. At least the band copied a legitimate musical style.

The Verlaines' album, "Way Out Where," has upbeat music and melancholy lyrics. Love gone bad is the common thread that ties the album together.

The only song on the album not about love is the title track. "Way Out Where" has sociopolitical lyrics. Here the band attacks political correctness, lawyers and the Pope. Too bad it couldn't have done more songs like this on the album.

The album makes good background music. It would be very easy to study or talk to friends while listening to it. However, listening intently to the fluff that makes up the bulk of this release quickly becomes tedious and boring.

The Verlaines disappoint. A quick glance at the lyrics and the cover art convey a feeling not found by listening to the music.

"Way Out Where" is disposable. It may even be the most disposable album this year.

People who are buying the 80s retrospective releases from TV advertisements will love this band. Everyone else should stay away.

Financial aid misplaced; student left in the dark

Dear Cassandra,

Like many students here at K-State, I have been jerked around by Financial Aid for months now, and I believe I have finally snapped.

I understand they work very hard over there, but since July, they have lost my records, have not sent out information to my financial institutions (even after being asked repeatedly), misplaced my monetary refunds, and well ... basically have no idea where my money is.

I have been living off my credit cards since September, have been subsisting solely on peanut butter crackers while pleading with my landlord not to evict me. My power and phone were shut off last week.

Yes, I could get an emergency loan, but the point is, I shouldn't have to. They have had my applications and money in hand since July, and give me a different story every week as to where my funds are.

Well, finally my question is, which should I use to blow away everyone in Financial Assistance? A semi-automatic rifle or just a good ol' over-under shotgun?

Signed,
P.O.'d and Poor

Dear P.O.'d and Poor,

I understand because I've had to deal with that dandy Financial Aid bureaucracy myself on several occasions.

As an aside, if your power was turned off, you have rights. I know firsthand your power can't be turned off after Oct. 1. It's too cold now, and it's against the law.

But back to your main point. I completely agree: Financial Aid, on the whole, and even in small part, sucks.

They are not user-friendly, they are exceptional at being completely inefficient, and honestly, I think they are mesmerized by the idea that it is best to starve college students one by one, rather than to just open fire on them with a sawed-off shotgun.

My advice — buy some Ramen noodles, and if you're evicted, camp out in front of Fairchild Hall.

Protest until you get that damn money.

Japanese dance expresses WW II emotions

MIKE HIND
Collegian

A rare avant-garde form of Japanese dance will be featured at 8 p.m. tonight in McCain Auditorium.

The dance, butoh, evolved in the late 1960s as a response to the devastation brought on by World War II. Cindy Denmark, director of performing arts at the Mid-America Arts Alliance in Kansas City, said it addresses the basic human emotions of life, death, beauty, sadness and fear.

Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said the butoh style of dance purposely avoids the formal structures of Western dance.

"Western dance styles involve people trying to get off the ground by jumping. Take ballet, for example," he said. "Butoh came about by people from a peasant background."

Butoh reflects this background through its movements, Martin said. Butoh dancers usually dance near the ground and use squatting, hunched shoulders, inward-turning feet and bowleggedness.

The dance will be performed by one of its co-founders, Kazuo Ohno, and his son Yoshito.

While growing up in rural northern Japan, Ohno was influenced by European culture and art.

In 1956 Ohno began to perform with Tatsumi Hijikata, a former student and pioneer in post-war theater in Japan. The two combined their experiences and founded butoh.

The 87-year-old Ohno is performing on a 10-city U.S. tour.

He will perform the dance "Ka Cho Fu Getsu," which literally translated means "flowers-birds-wind-moon," for K-State and New York audiences only. Because of Ohno's philosophy of keeping the dance unique to each audience, he varies dances with each performance, Martin said.

"His psychology is that it is better to dance with different programs," he said.

Denmark said although Ohno does different interpretations and dances, each performance is not like an improvisation.

Tickets are on sale at the McCain box office for $12 for the general public, $10 for senior citizens and $6 for students and children.

A local merchant forms the Kansas Association of Wargamers and fills a niche in the Manhattan and Junction City gaming community. New members are encouraged.

Several people were intent on building a railroad in the Master Gamer's back room on a Thursday night.

Noise filled the room as money and stocks changed hands, and a rail empire spread across the open United States. However, the United States was on a table, and the business was 1830, one of the games sponsored by the Kansas Association of Wargamers, a group interested in several aspects of games.

"For the past three years I have wanted to start a club to promote gaming of all sorts," said Royal Dowdy, owner of the Master Gamer and president of K.A.W. "Finally we started K.A.W. about two months ago here in Manhattan and a couple of weeks ago in Junction City."

Dowdy said the Master Gamer, 1205 Moro St., supports and plays host to many of the K.A.W. events and games, but he said they are two separate entities.

"When I first moved here, there wasn't even a store that sold gaming supplies," he said. "I started the store in 1985 to meet the needs of gamers."

Thad Williams, junior in art and K.A.W. vice president, said he found it strange that even with all the college and military people around, nothing was organized.

Darren Guyton, K.A.W. secretary and Master Gamer manager, agreed with Williams and said the time was right to get something going.

"We were waiting to gauge the interest and see if anyone would start a club, but no one wanted to," he said. "Royal, Thad and I got together and came up with a name and a plan. Then we started recruiting members."

Being involved in wargaming and historical miniature battles for more than 20 years and having been a member of 14 different gaming clubs was a big plus in starting the club, Dowdy said.

"I used what I liked of those groups to set up the K.A.W.," he said. "We are taking the group along slowly and using the ideas so we don't burn out members quickly and lose the club."

The members vote on which games they want to play when they get to a game night.

Some of the choices include role-playing games like Advanced Dungeons and Dragons and strategy games like Civilization. Historical miniatures, like Harpoon, and various board games are other choices.

The club only has two requirements: An interest in any form of gaming and the desire to play.

"We will take anyone if they want to learn how to play different games," Brian Beal, K.A.W. member said. "Some groups might pick and choose members, but that isn't something we do."

Potential members don't have to have anything special, like their own supplies, Dowdy said. He said people don't even need to be a member.

"There will be a few member-only activities once the group gets going, but most of the activities are open to everyone," he said. "Club-only events would include cookouts and trips to places like the Renaissance Festival in Kansas City or gaming conventions in the area."

Guyton said one goal of the club is to establish a gaming directory because every gamer is looking for someone new to play.

"The membership directory provides people with competitors and widens the playing base so you aren't stuck in the same group all the time," he said.

Dowdy and the other members have big plans in mind for the future of the group.

"After we get a bit more settled and organized, we plan to have gaming conventions and sponsor big games," he said. "At the conventions, you can test your skill against a lot of other people."

As one of the upcoming events, the club plans to sponsor a civil-war historical miniature battle in November, using "Johnny Reb" rules, a set of national rules for civil war gaming.

Another plan of K.A.W. is to regularly feature a bimonthly club newsletter, "To Arms!"

Guyton, editor of the magazine, said that anyone, not just members, can submit material to be reviewed for publishing.

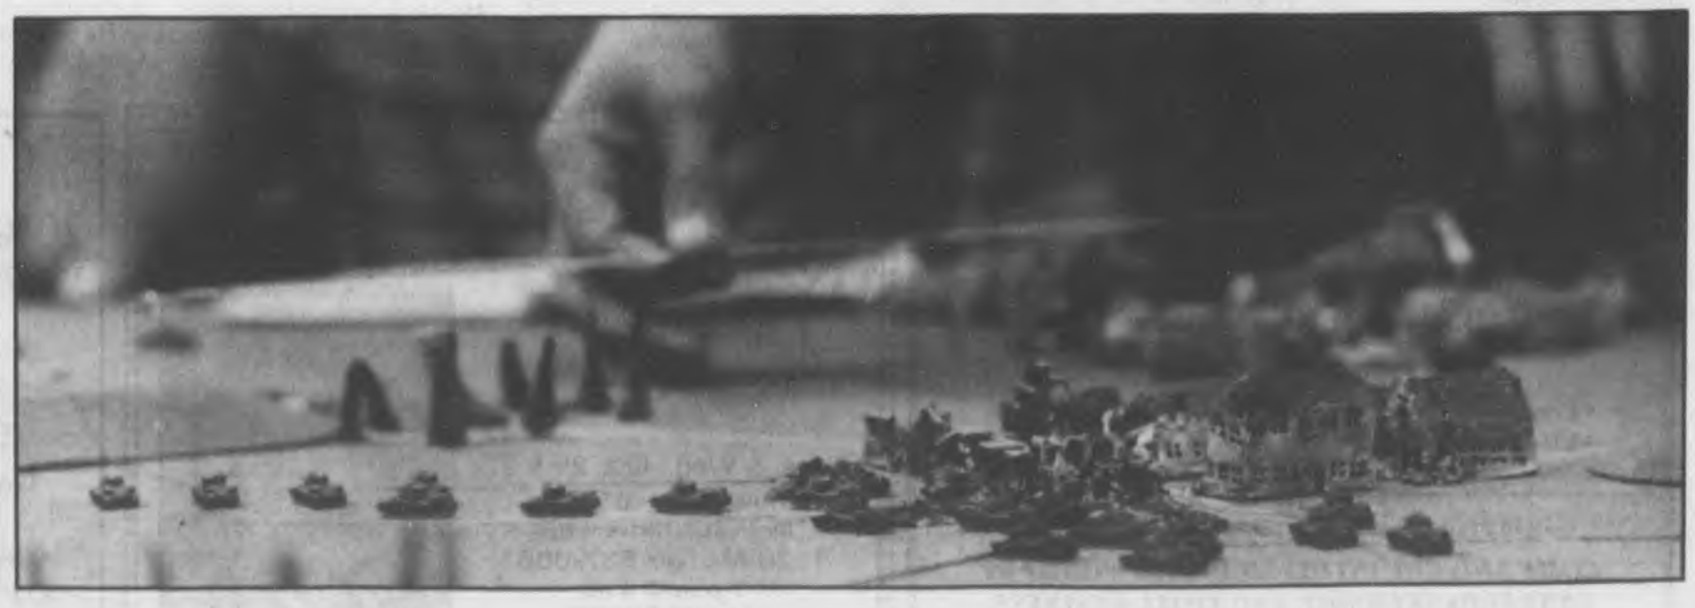
"We publish anything that has to do with games— stories, art, poetry, cartoons and bad puns or jokes," Williams said. "It just has to deal with gaming and be of interest."

Dowdy said as soon as formats are set up, K.A.W. plans to expand to Wichita and Topeka, through stores in those areas.

As K.A.W. expands and gains support, Guyton said it could become an advocate group and set up set standards for conventions or establish a ratings system for players to gauge their level and ability against others.

Williams said when the group gains some recognition, they could get to play-test various games for companies to help establish the rules.

"Play-testing would allow members to influence and improve games for the public," Williams said. "I think it would help the industry gain input on what is wanted by real gamers."



Guyton said the best way to describe the group and its goals is not to describe it.

"I'd point to the back room if a game was on and have them watch," he said.

In the Master Gamer's back room, the United States was covered with railroads, and piles of money lay on the table.

K.A.W. members put the pieces away to use on another game night.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

SEASON

Winter car preparation necessary for road safety

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

Cold weather is starting to settle in. As everyone brings out their coats, hats and gloves in preparation for winter, they should also consider getting their cars ready before it snows.

Winter is a time when car care is a must. Icy roads are dangerous enough without the extra time spent to prepare vehicles for the conditions.

Joe Burnett, service manager at Burnett Automotive, said one of the most important things to check is the antifreeze.

"The single-most important thing in winterizing a car is the antifreeze. Without it the radiator could freeze up and cause the engine block to crack," Burnett said.

Antifreeze in the vehicle should test to 30-35 degrees below zero, he said.

Antifreeze should be replaced every year to eliminate the possibility of corrosion, Terry Szel, technician at Westside Amoco, said.

"You should change antifreeze yearly, because old antifreeze corrodes the engine pretty badly. There's a chemical in antifreeze that eats aluminum. Ginger root is added to keep it from eating the metal, but the ginger root wears out after a while and loses the ability to keep the antifreeze from eating the aluminum," Szel said.

Antifreeze is not the only consideration when winterizing a vehicle.

EMERGENCY KIT

■ These are some of the items vehicle owners should keep in their emergency kit: flares, blankets, spare tire, jack, first-aid kit, portable CB radio, extra oil and antifreeze, jumper cable, flashlight, road markers and sand bags.

Tires and the battery should be inspected as well, Jerry Riniker, center manager at Sears Automotive, said.

"You need to check tires' tread, inflation and the amount of wear on them. The electrical system, with the battery and the alternator, should be checked to make sure they're up to snuff for winter. If it's been a while since you've had a tune-up, it would be a good idea to have a tune-up done," Riniker said.

Belts and hoses are another concern, Szel said.

"Check all the belts and hoses. The cold weather is going to crack rubber easier than any other season," Szel said.

Inspections of the nuts and bolts of the car are also a part of what should be done in preparation for winter. It is also a good idea to take along a few items in case of a breakdown.

"If you're traveling, you might take flares, a jack, a spare tire and blankets, as well as a first-aid kit," Burnett said.

COLLEGIAN

OCTOBER 27, 1993 | KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY, MANHATTAN, KANSAS 66506 | VOLUME 99A, NUMBER 48

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Brandon Hoffman, sophomore in elementary education, settles a dispute between two grade-school children after a shoving match broke out during lunchtime recess at Lee Elementary School. Hoffman, along with several other K-State students, has taken a part-time job supervising the playground and lunchroom at Lee school.

Elementaries hire students

"It is an easy job, especially if you want to be a teacher. It is good firsthand experience."

RAFAEL VITOLAS
JUNIOR IN SECONDARY EDUCATION

Supervisors gain teaching experience at local grade schools

WILLIAM MCKEEN III
Collegian

It's easy to pick out the playground supervisors at Lee School. Even among the flood of screaming children, one can see the occasional college student bobbing around.

Believe it or not, some K-State students have decided to return to the playground.

It's not the attraction of the swings or playing tag. Students are going to the schools for part-time work, and some see it as a way to get good experience.

"It is an easy job, especially if you want to be a teacher. It is good firsthand experience," Rafael Vitolas, junior in secondary education, said. Vitolas has been working since the beginning of the semester as a playground supervisor.

Lee School is one of many elementary schools throughout Manhattan that provides part-time employment to K-State students as lunchroom, playground or bus supervisors.

Larry Liotta, principal at Lee, said the positions aren't too difficult but the workers need to have patience.

Amy Autry, junior in elementary education, has worked as a playground supervisor at Lee for three semesters. She said she agrees with Liotta that patience is the most important qualification for the job.

Above the screams of the children, Doug Powell, senior in elementary education, said being around the kids and playing is the best. Getting them to listen, though, can be hard.

"Earning the children's respect is one of the hardest things to do," Powell said. "When you are a new supervisor, they will really try to test you."

Steve Henderson, a fourth grader at Lee who took time away from a game of tag, said the supervisors are friends, but they are grown-ups. Henderson said when he grows up, he wouldn't mind being a supervisor, but he said he would probably be a lot nicer to kids.

Liotta said most of the children obey the supervisors. To be cautious, Liotta said, certified people usually stay around the supervisors in case of any emergency because the supervisors aren't fully qualified to handle extreme situations such as fights or kids leaving the playground.

Vitolas said learning how to handle the children can be trying. If they get too out of hand, they are sent to the principal's office.

He said one thing to be careful about is touching the children. Possible litigation could come from a parent if a supervisor hurts a child.

Rainy days can offer even more of a challenge, Vitolas said. During those times, K-Staters have to stay with the children in the classrooms. The students can get pretty worked up because they're so full of energy.

Unlike most part-time jobs, K-State students are allowed to take time off during University holidays such as spring break.

Every school in Manhattan hires about 10 supervisors a semester, and they can work up to 14 hours a week on their own schedules, with three different positions.

Lunchroom supervisors have the duties of setting up the tables, supervising the children after they eat and cleaning up afterward.

Playground supervisors lead the children out to the playground, supervise them and lead them back to their classrooms.

Bus supervisors work during the morning and afternoon and watch out for the children as they are getting on and off the buses.

"I can learn a lot more from the actual experience of being out on the playground than I can in the classroom," Powell said. "I like it more for what I learn than the money I make."

Petitions allow students to give input on system

Faculty Senate seeks approval on plus/minus plan

BOB MACHA
Collegian

There is still an avenue to voice concern on the implementation of the plus/minus grading system.

Petitions are available in the SGA offices on the lower floor of the Union. The petition's purpose is to voice concerns regarding the new system to the members of Faculty Senate.

The plus/minus subcommittee expressed a willingness to hear student grievances with the system.

"We want to show a good-faith effort," said Ken Brooks, professor of landscape architecture and chairman of the plus/minus subcommittee.

Brooks was responding to a question from Allison Mahoney, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine and student senator for the College of Agriculture, regarding the possibility of a student petition against the plus/minus system.

Brooks said the input students gave at Tuesday's forum and the petitions in circulation would be reviewed at the next Academic Affairs Committee meeting. He said the forum that took place during the first week of December to hear students' concerns brought mixed responses from those present.

"I think one of the reasons that you didn't get much student response was that many students didn't think it was a threat," Mahoney said.

Despite the fact Student Senate passed a resolution condemning the proposal, it is not within the authority of Senate to decide what is to be done regarding the issue.

"If the students want to be heard, here is their chance," said Steffany Carrel, junior in journalism and mass communications and Student Senate member of the Academic Affairs Committee.

The system is to be implemented in fall 1994 after consideration by Faculty Senate on May 11. It was considered in fall 1991 at the suggestion of the inquiry letter of a student.

Brooks said a study about the system was conducted. The system is considered to be the best in light of the study's findings.

Brooks said he favors the system because it will allow student coursework to be gauged more accurately than with the grading system now in place.

One student asked if tests and homework are an exact science. He went on to talk about how one teacher had second-guessed himself in regard to the wording of a particular question in a class that student was enrolled in.

The point the faculty stressed was the concept of a difference in the range of a letter grade. Brooks said it is still up to individual faculty to make up the range for the letter grades.

"If it's supposed to be mandatory, let's make it mandatory," said Carrel.

Brooks said another important reason for the new system is to give students the incentive to work harder and for the professors to reward that hard work.

Horror star dies of lung cancer

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Vincent Price, whose gaunt face and creepy voice put chills in such thrillers as "The Raven" and "House of Wax," was a modern-day Renaissance man who dedicated his life to the arts, friends and relatives say.

Price died Monday night at his Hollywood Hills home after a five-year struggle with lung cancer. He was 82.

"I think it's going to be a big loss because he gave so much through all the characters he played," said comedian Milton Berle, who knew Price from the actor's appearances on Berle's Texaco Star Theater in the 1950s.

"He was one of the finest actors, besides being one of the most charming gentlemen I ever met," Berle said.

Price was amused by his reputation as the perfect villain.

"I'm not the least bit disappointed that I'm remembered primarily for my horror roles," he said in 1985.

He said a fan in Houston once offered her neck to be bitten.

"Now I have never played Dracula," he remarked. "Anyway, I bit her. My, was she surprised!"

From the beginning of his film career in 1938, Price appeared in a variety of films, from the sublime ("Laura," "The Ten Commandments") to the ridiculous ("Dr. Goldfoot and the Bikini Machine").

Price exploited his reputation as a villain by contributing a ghostly voice to Michael Jackson's hit record, "Thriller," playing the creator of "Edward Scissorhands" in the 1990 film and hosting the PBS series "Mystery" during the 1980s.

But family members and friends remembered Price as a warm man

Beijing neighbors reunite 5 years after Tiananmen Square uprising

DERYL CUNNINGHAM
Collegian

"Someone once said that there is no boundary or limit to love."

This is the first line of the winning essay for Family Weekend.

Cindy Liu, junior in computer science and international studies, wrote her essay about two special people in her life, Sherry Wright, director of communications for public schools, and Dennis Blair, Wright's husband and psychologist for the Fort Riley counseling center.

They met in 1988 in Beijing, China, where Wright was working as an English expert for the China Daily newspaper with Liu's father, who was an editor.

They were neighbors there, and Liu and Wright became good friends. They taught each other their respective languages.

In June 1989, Wright and Blair had to leave Beijing because of the Tiananmen Square uprising.

After they left China, they lost touch with Liu and were not able to exchange addresses with her.

Three years later, Liu came to the United States to attend a community college in Iowa. Still, no contact was made between Liu and Wright.

A couple of weeks before Christmas in 1991, Liu's father sent a note to Wright and Blair with Liu's telephone number on it.

"It was obviously a number in the States. I couldn't get to the phone fast enough," Wright said. "I immediately went to the phone and called Cindy. We sat up and talked all night."

Wright and Blair said it was funny because they went out the night before they received the note and read a fortune cookie.

"'Friends long absent are coming back to you,'" said Wright, who still has the fortune.

That is when their long-distance relationship started.

Blair said from December 1991 until August 1993 they would communicate with and support Liu over the phone.

Wright said they drove to see her at least several times while she was living in Iowa.

Liu eventually made a decision to come to K-State after turning down an $8,000 scholarship to another school.

Liu said being close to her friends was worth more than any amount of money.

Wright and Blair were also influential in her decision to attend K-State — they sent University catalogs and brochures to her.

Liu moved in with the couple in August. Their relationship grew in a hurry, and they all started spending time with each other.

Liu decided to enter the honorary family essay-writing contest sponsored by the Chimes junior honor society. The theme for K-State's Family Weekend was "From Roots to Wings."

"These people deserve the recognition," she said.

She wrote the winning entry for the contest, and as part of winning the honorary family, Liu, Wright and Blair were guests during K-State's family weekend.

They attended a reception, luncheon and banquet.

"It was classy. It was good food. Everything was done on time. I was impressed," Wright said.

They sat in the president's box during the football game before being moved for Gov. Joan Finney.

Wright said they would have rather sat outside anyway.

The family was presented with a plaque at the half-time of Saturday's football game. The three of them enjoy spending time together and watching one another's aspects of life.

"It is a lot of fun to be around her and watch her mature into a scholar. There's a lot of fun I get out of spending time with her," Blair said.

"We do a lot of things together. We attend church, go to the zoo and go out to eat often."

Liu summed up her feelings about Wright and Blair in her winning essay.

"If I am the wings, Sherry and Dennis may not be the roots that physically created them, but they are the ones who taught me how to fly."

Finny slashes budget, opposes all new taxes

TOPEKA (AP) — Gov. Joan Finney promised today that her next proposed budget will be the leanest one of her administration — leaving strong doubts about proposals to increase spending on education.

The State Budget Division already has begun the annual process of hearing appeals from state agency officials who are dissatisfied with preliminary spending recommendations. Finney will consider those recommendations and the appeals before making recommendations to the 1994 Legislature.

Finney's next proposed budget will be for the fiscal year that begins July 1. She has said repeatedly she is opposed to any new taxes to raise revenue for government spending.

"The amount of money that will be available for these appeals is very, very small," the governor said to reporters during a news conference. "This has been the situation I've faced since taking office, but this year the shortages that we have are very intense."

Wichita couple wins Powerball, quit jobs

TOPEKA (AP) — The winner of a $12-million lottery payoff said today he doesn't want to do anything stupid with his newly gained wealth.

Randall Frye, 38, who was manager of a Wichita restaurant, became the 11th Kansan to achieve millionaire status through the Kansas Lottery.

Frye and his wife, Denise, who both have quit their jobs, said they plan to leave Wichita for a while after they learned on Sunday that he had won the $12,251,580 jackpot in Saturday night's drawing in the multistate Powerball lottery.

Man killed in garage at Kansas City airport

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A man was shot and killed in a parking garage at Kansas City International Airport, police said.

The man, believed to be in his mid-30s, was shot shortly before 8 p.m. Monday on level one of the garage at Terminal A, said Officer Jim Dickerson, a Kansas City police representative.

"The information we have is that he was arriving at the airport from a flight into town," Dickerson said. "He was returning to a car in the garage, and he was approached by a suspect who fired at him."

Police sealed entrances and exits of the garage within minutes of the shooting. The move left more than a dozen people cut off from their cars.

Cab driver Richard Sobek was parked in front of Terminal A when he heard three rapid shots.

"I knew that they were coming from the lower level of the parking garage, so I tried to find security," he said.

Sobek said he saw four cars drive out of the parking garage after the shooting, and two people left on foot.

Media mogul Roy Park dies after 83 years

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — Roy H. Park, who helped create Duncan Hines foods and then built a media empire by buying newspapers and broadcast stations in smaller cities, has died. He was 83.

Park died in New York City on Monday, said Jack Claiborne, a representative for Ithaca-based Park Communications Inc. Claiborne would not give the cause of death.

Park Communications owns 144 publications, including 41 dailies, 22 radio stations and eight television stations. The holdings are in 23 states, chiefly in the East and South.

Christopher wants Russians out of Latvia

RIGA, Latvia (AP) — Secretary of State Warren Christopher arrived Tuesday in Latvia and immediately called on Russia to withdraw its remaining 16,000 troops from this Baltic state.

Christopher, hoping to make it easier for Moscow to yield, boosted the idea of full citizenship rights for the Russian-speaking minority that makes up 34 percent of the population and, in many families, goes back several generations.

Latvia was Christopher's last stop on a trip that has focused on U.S. efforts to accelerate the denuclearization of three other former Soviet republics, Ukraine, Kazakhstan and Belarus.

Letterman meets Kansas 5 year-old

HUGOTON (AP) — The limelight is losing its luster for a 5-year-old girl whose soft spot for snakes won her an appearance on national television.

Chloe Diseker is getting tired of reporters and others who want to talk about her appearance last Thursday on "Late Show With David Letterman" with her two pet pythons, Tie-Dye and Jasmine.

But she didn't mind being a star Monday at kindergarten at Hugoton Elementary School, said Sonja Gayer, Chloe's teacher.

"We gave her the whole hour to tell us about it even though it was kind of hard for a 5-year-old to understand it was a big deal," Gayer said. "Being on the David Letterman show is just like show-and-tell in a kindergarten."

Chloe came to the attention of the Letterman show's producers after she won a grand champion ribbon for Tie-Dye at the Five State Fair in Liberal. Her mother, Shari Webber, called and told the show about Chloe and her python prowess.

Panel features 3 professors

Three lectures address issues of Hispanic culture

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

Three K-State professors participated in a panel discussion as the last big event for Hispanic Awareness Month.

Marcial Riquelme, professor of social anthropology and social work; Salvador Oropesa, professor of modern languages; and Douglas Benson, professor of modern languages, spoke in turn about Hispanic culture and politics Tuesday in the K-State Union Little Theatre.

The socioeconomic status of Hispanics in the United States was the focus of Requelme's lecture.

"In this country, 63 percent of Hispanics are Mexican, with Puerto Ricans and Cubans being second and third, and Central and Southern Americans recently coming in," he said. "You have all these diverse groups in one imprecise category."

Riquelme said by all socioeconomic indicators, Hispanics are an in-between group in most categories, with whites above and blacks below.

The economic layering is apparent in the Hispanic culture, too, Riquelme said, with Cubans at the top, Mexicans and Latin Americans in the middle, and Puerto Ricans toward the bottom.

"A lot of the problems come from discrimination and prejudice," Riquelme said. "Hispanics are not discriminated against in the same manner as blacks, which makes it tough to increase awareness about the problem and get something done."

Oropesa spoke about the term "Hispanic," named for an old Roman Province, and the image it creates.

After the fall of the Roman Empire, Spain began to grow and become an influential power, Oropesa said. As Europe grew out of the middle ages, Spain lead the way.

"Once Spain became unified, states were established and rules set up that many countries would follow," he said. "For nearly two centuries, Spain was the most important country in the world."

Oropesa said after the height of Spain's power, the "Black Legend" began and still persists today.

The legend is a blanket disqualification of a country that was the most advanced of its time. Oropesa said the image created by the legend is of an ignorant, inquisitorial society.

"In order to improve the situation, you have to overcome the negativity created around an entire country," Oropesa said. "The image that Hispanics can't perform well or hold a job is still around."

Benson focused on diversity and what it means to be Hispanic.

"There are many different origins of people in this label," Benson said. "Everywhere you go, the racial and ethnic differences are going to be there because you're drawing from 20 different countries."

Benson said the Hispanic culture draws from many different civilizations and areas.

"An example is that the Mexican and Indian cultures are mixed, making it difficult to differentiate between the two," Benson said. "A lot of what is considered Mexican food is actually Native American."

Benson said there are good points and bad points about using the label "Hispanic."

"Lumping does create some problems, but this is the only country in the world where that word could gain political structure."

CITY

Drainage issue prompts meeting

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The city commission heard recommendations to solve drainage problems in the neighborhoods south of CiCo Park at a work session Tuesday.

Burns & McDonnell, a Kansas City engineering and architecture firm, presented several options to cut down erosion in the area.

The options ranged from reinforcing the stream with loose rock at a cost of $539,000, to an enclosed concrete culvert at cost of $2.8 million.

"Some people think this is a babbling brook, and some think it is a raging torrent, but no one wants to pay for it," Mayor Roger Maughmer said.

Pat Cox of B & G Consulting in Manhattan met with residents in the area. He said residents wanted more specifics about who was going to pay for the project before reaching a decision about what will likely be done to the creek.

He said many residents were concerned that developments upstream had increased flow in the creek. However, the residents differed on what action, if any, should be taken to slow erosion.

"There are about 62 homes along the creek, and some areas have been more affected than others," Cox said.

Ronald Miller, civil manager for Burns & McDonnell, said drainage problems had not resulted in damage to homes or property, but it was more a case of water getting into basements and eroding yards.

"This water is not a flood problem," Miller said. "There were only a few instances where water got near homes, even in June when the water was high."

He said it would take more land, but the city could let the creek take its course.

"You will never really be able to control something like this," he said. "Just because the stream is flowing one way now that doesn't mean it will always naturally flow like that."

Commissioner Helen Cooper said the city should seek legal advice on who is responsible for the drainage area.

"Is this part of the drainage for the city of Manhattan, and this land should be part of an easement, or is this the responsibility of the land owners?" she said.

The review of the CiCo drainage area is part of a larger project the city has undertaken to look at water drainage in the city started before the summer flood.

Odd materials show up as bombs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

VITEZ, Bosnia-Herzegovina — First it was exploding hot water heaters, then booby-trapped refrigerators. Now, government troops fighting Bosnian Croats are ducking beer bombs.

British troops at the U.N. base here have been ordered to destroy all used beer and cola cans to prevent their use as hand grenades in the region's Muslim-Croat conflict.

Can bombs are the latest in a bizarre array of weaponry deployed by the local Croat militia against the mostly Muslim Bosnian army surrounding the town.

An arms factory on the outskirts of Vitez, 30 miles northwest of Sarajevo, provides unlimited explosives, but the Croats lack casings.

Fire extinguishers, crammed with high explosives and fired at the enemy from butane-fueled mortars, have been used when artillery shells run short.

British Maj. James Myles, stationed at Vitez, said the extinguishers fly up to 300 yards and have been used both against besieging troops and against civilians in a small Muslim enclave within the town, causing death and injuries.

"When they started inevitably running out of fire extinguishers, they changed to the next best thing — hot-water heaters," he said.

But they posed a new problem. They were too flimsy to survive a mortar launch; so, the Croats constructed giant medieval-style, spring-loaded catapults to hurl them at the Bosnian troops.

"This is the exploding rock of the cave man," Myles said. "This is the level we have got to here."

Among the expanding Croat armory is the exploding fridge, crammed with explosive and hidden at roadside junctions to act as booby-trap mines.

Much-publicized campout policy still needs examination

The annual campout for basketball tickets is over.

One would think that looking at the campout afterward would seem to be a waste of time.

But because of an Associated Press story, it still needs to be examined.

The campout rules stated that if a group was found with alcohol, it would be removed from the line and the campout area.

The policies that were written up for this campout stated if a group was found with alcohol, it would be moved to the end of the ticket line.

A second offense would remove the group from the campout completely.

The AP story stating the first-and-second-offense policies was placed on the AP wire and appeared across the state.

K-State received coverage and praise from Topeka, Wichita, Manhattan and Chanute newspapers on our progressive attitude.

But our attempts went further than anyone realized. Student Senate amended the campout rules to remove alcohol from the campout, and this rule was overlooked.

No one wants what happened in 1992's campout to happen ever again.

So attention to anyone who has read K-State campout stories: K-State has made more advances and precautions for the benefit of its students than given credit for.

The silent message that got lost

Underneath the controversy, gays are just people

I know that you are sick to death of being preached to. To tell you the truth, my soapbox has been tilting a little to the left because of all the weight I have been putting on it lately. So, I'm just going to speak normally with you, OK? Conversation-like.

I went shopping this summer with a friend of mine. We were preparing for a dinner and needed some things. Well, we were in the canned-food section when this really cute guy walked past us. In jogging shorts. One of those little bitty red things that barely covered his ... uh ... yum yums. I am not a gaper and yet, I looked more than once, believe me. So did my friend.

"He's mine," I whispered.

"I'll flip you for him," Paul said.

I have been thinking about that a lot lately. Paul has gone through a great deal since he admitted his sexual orientation. Even with caring friends such as myself, it has not been easy for him to be accepted.

With the inundation of Freaky Fred Phelps and his Fascist Followers and Pat Robertson, everyone is so sick of hearing about the plight of the homosexual community.

I know.

Everyone just wants the subject to be dropped. We all have our opinions anyway, right? Nobody's going to change their minds once they've made them.

But I'd like to ask this of you: understanding.

I don't like to ask for anything. I never have. Yet,

I realized I have been encouraging understanding for acceptance of the way I think, the way the I feel and the way I live my life. I am asking again.

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

Acceptance may be too much to demand from everyone. But I don't think equality is too much to ask for. Not just for me and the way I think and feel and live my life, but for Paul and the entire gay and lesbian community.

If you could just see the gay community as individuals for a few minutes, you could never say that they were "unnatural" or "weird." If you could only see them as people who love and need just as much as anyone else, it would be such a step from where we are now.

If you knew Paul, as I do, you would like him too. He's gentle and funny — the kind of guy I can't imagine not having in my life. And he is going to be really ticked when he finds out I asked anything for him. He's more proud than even I, but I am afraid for him.

I am afraid the fury of the debates may have made this campus thick-skinned to the plight of the homosexual community. I am scared that when the next "fag" gets the crap beat of him in some back alley or bar, people will turn a blind eye and ear because they "did their part" these past few weeks.

I am afraid everyone has heard so much noise they are forgetting the whispered message underneath all the bellowing and Bible thumping. The message is that my friend has the right to walk down the street without being harassed. He has the right to marry someone he loves. He has the right to keep his children. He has the right to be human and be treated humanely. Please don't forget that.

He is not asking for extra rights. He is not asking for special rights. He is asking for human rights. He is asking for courtesy.

I am asking it for everyone.

Even in this 'modern' world, misconceptions about Islam prevail

Editor,

With the international atmosphere K-State has, there are many opportunities present for one to be educated and enriched. This week provides an opportunity to learn more about Islam and Muslims through Islam Awareness Week, which will take place from Oct. 25-29 by the Muslim Students Association.

Historical and current distortions about Islam and Muslims still exist. But as a cartoon depicts, "The only good Muslims are most Muslims." In any place, especially a university, a citadel of learning, one should try to go beyond the stereotypes and misconceptions to learn the truth.

And the truth is always fascinating.

For instance, did you know the Western world is the inheritor of the great scientific and cultural legacy of the Muslim world? Western history ignores the monumental contributions of Muslims to civilization. It was the brilliant Muslim scholars of the Golden Age of Islam, between the eighth and 13th centuries A.D., who were pioneers in establishing colleges, research institutions, observatories, libraries and hospitals.

Muslims had a superior civilization that was sophisticated, urban and cosmopolitan compared to rural, feudal Medieval Europe. Being in the Dark Ages, scientific study barely existed in Europe, while science flourished in the Muslim world. Western scholars later discovered and appropriated the rich storehouse of scientific knowledge from the mature Muslim civilization.

This was the turning point for the western world, for it received an unparalleled intellectual stimulation. Yet, the West does not acknowledge its debt to the Muslim civilization.

Universities sprang up in Europe as a result of the inflow of Muslim works in every branch of knowledge. These European universities assimilated Muslim learning in mathematics, optics, architecture, grammar and so on. Thus, the Western world has been generously enriched by 500 years of brilliant scholarship by Muslims.

Much ignorance prevails even today because credit was not given where credit was due. Trying to set the record straight in one short letter is impossible. This is only a modest attempt to honor the memory of those great Muslim scholars and their immeasurable contributions to the world.

Iowa State has its own sports traditions too, even some fun ones

Editor,

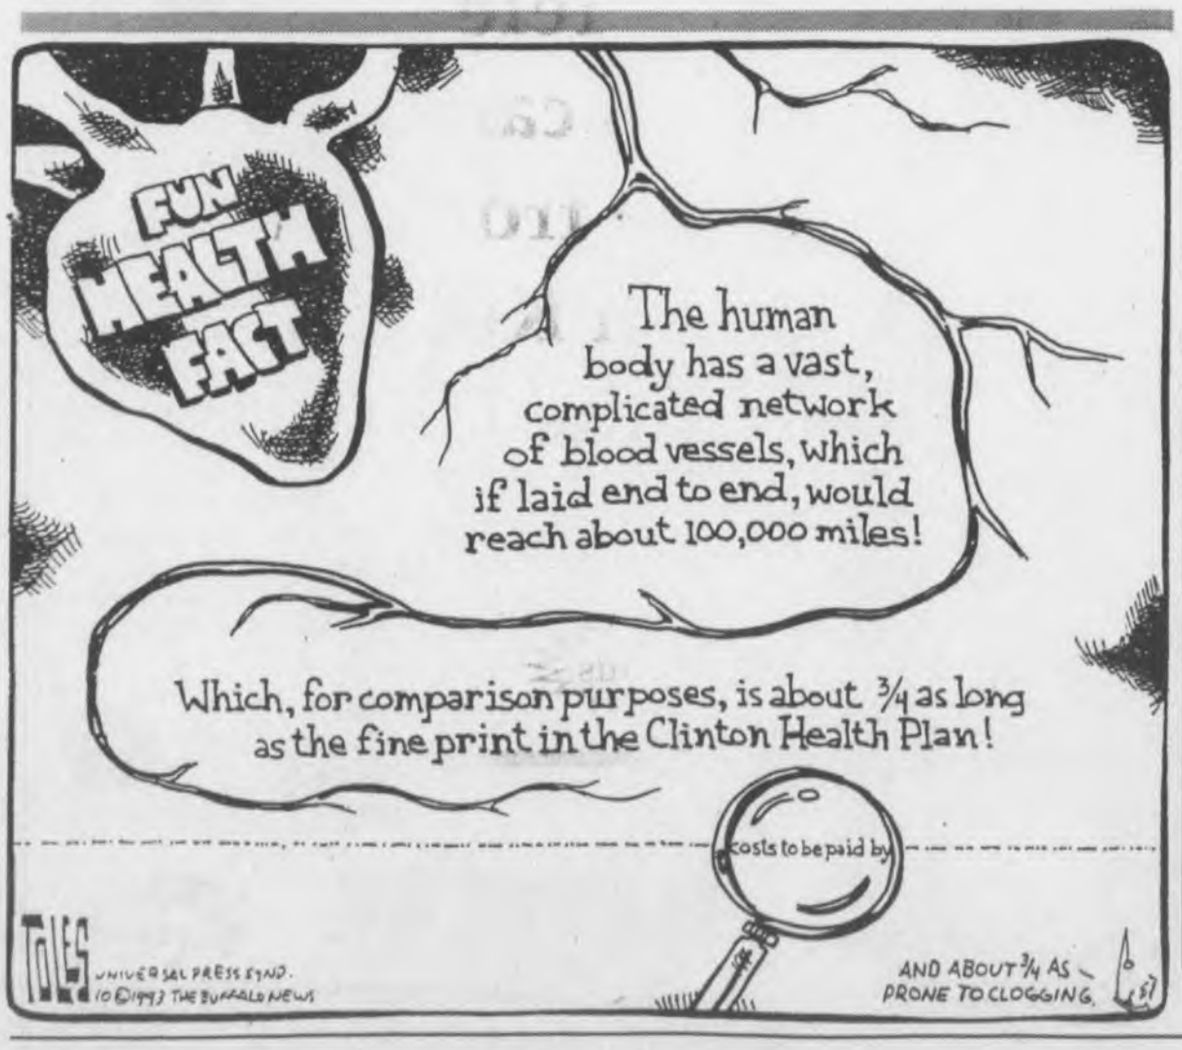
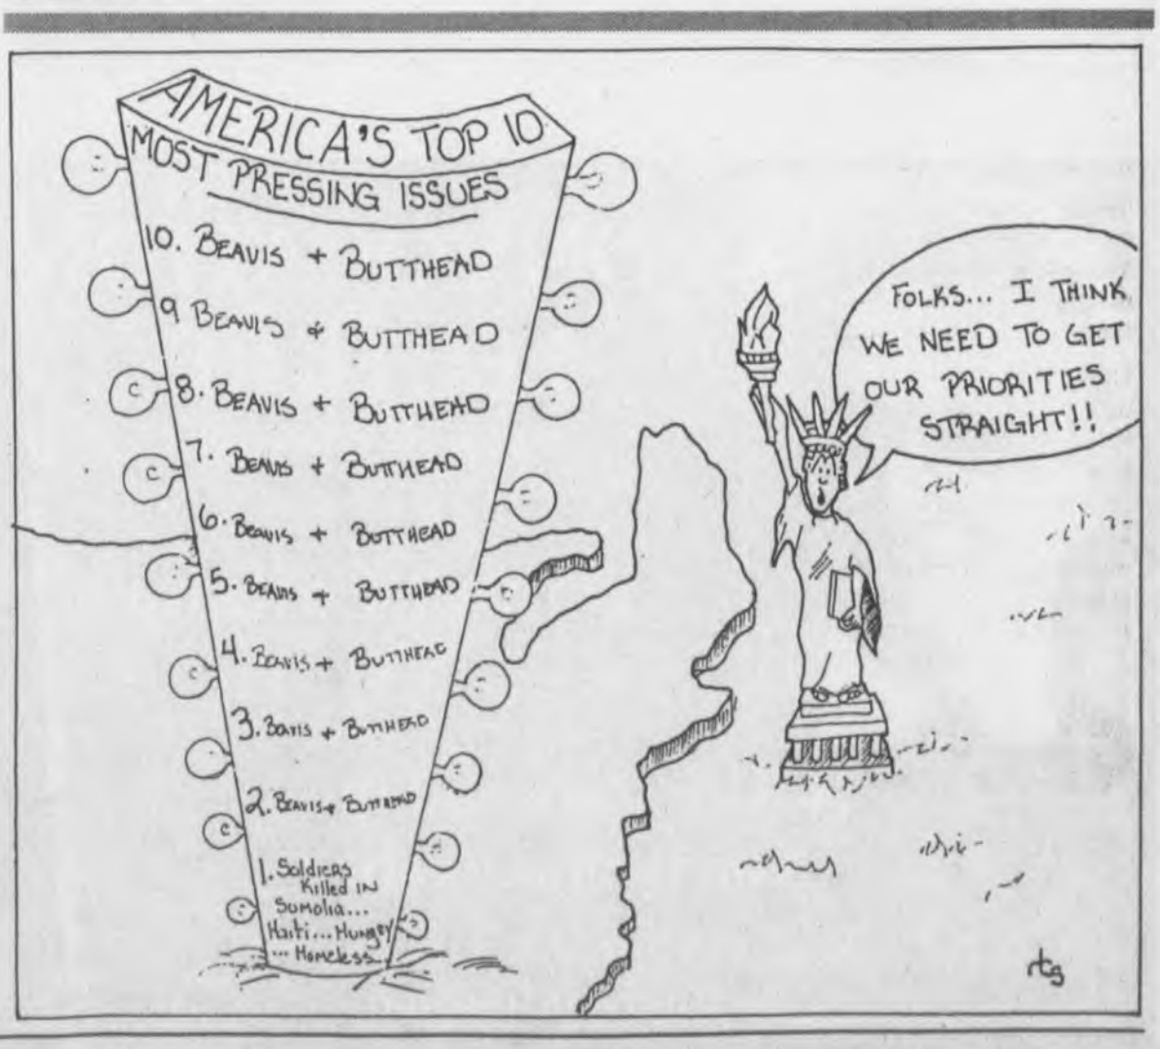
As a recent graduate of Iowa State University, I wish to comment on Mr. E.B. Williamson's column in the Oct. 21 Collegian.



In his column, Williamson takes issue with the decision of the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics to discontinue Midnight Madness. I agree Midnight Madness should continue, but I disagree with Mr. Williamson's attack of Athletic Director Max Urick and Iowa State. His column was based purely on emotion and contained many misrepresentations of Mr. Urick and Iowa State.

Williamson attacks Iowa State as a school with no tradition and no Midnight Madness. For several years, Iowa State has had a tradition very similar to Midnight Madness hosted by the Ames/Story Country Cyclone Club. It is a very exciting event and draws more than 5,000 fans annually.



I had season tickets last year to the Wildcat men's basketball games, and it wasn't until the fifth or sixth game of the season that the attendance figure was above 5,000. In Williamson's equation for success for a good sports team, he states fans are vital for a winning program. This is the area in which K-State seems to be lacking.

Last year, the men's basketball team won 20 games, and the average attendance was not above 10,000. One year that I had season tickets in Iowa, the basketball team won only 11 games and still had an average attendance of more than 11,000 fans.

The atmosphere in Hilton Coliseum is like no other in the Big Eight Conference, except maybe Kansas. This is for a team that regularly finishes in the bottom half of the conference. The Cyclones rarely lose home basketball games, mostly due to great fan support.

I also take issue with Williamson's characterization of Urick. Urick was an excellent athletic director while at Iowa State. This is apparent by the readiness of the administration at K-State to hire him.

Urick was a students' and players' athletic director. He was relieved of his duties at Iowa State mostly because he stood up for a football player he thought was treated unfairly by the administration. It disturbs me that Williamson would end his column with the word "peace" after spending so many words preaching hate against someone he knows very little about.

The Wildcats will have another excellent and exciting basketball team again this year. I encourage everyone to join me in filling Bramlage Coliseum to the rafters for every game and cheering loudly for the Wildcats. Go Cats!

Denny verdict a simple case of redemption

Editor,

This is in response to the unsigned editorials on the Reginald Denny trial verdict. There is no justice in America for an African American. Remember that before you cry out about the "injustice" of Williams and Watson being found not guilty. "We in America have always been taught that we are all responsible for our actions, until the Denny verdict came along that is." (Collegian, "May history reflect the Denny case's role in a violent America" Oct. 26)

If Williams and Watson had been found guilty, they wouldn't have been sent to an ex-military base turned "jail" without any bars, walls or fences.

I can guarantee you that. Whites in AmeriKKKa have a police force, military and government behind them. Blacks, on the other hand, have virtually nothing. Many cops are nothing more than an American Gestapo to keep blacks down.

If you want justice to be done about the Denny verdict, think about the millions of blacks killed in the middle passage and their subsequent enslavement, or how about the more than 33,000 lynchings of blacks since American's inception.

Until there is justice for all in America, then consider the Denny verdict a redemption, albeit a small one, for the 400 years of oppression of the black man at the hands of the white man.

Hypocrisy of 'family values' rears its head

Editor,

I'm writing this letter in hope of raising awareness of the detrimental effects the North American Free Trade Agreement will have on family farming operations. These effects already have begun to manifest themselves here in the United States.

When mass production became the accepted norm, the door was opened for big business to take over. The small farmer could no longer compete with the heavily subsidized agricultural businesses. The small farmer ends up heavily in debt to lending institutions, which eventually results in the redistribution of property.

No longer is it owned by the stewards who want production for themselves and future generations; it is owned by the landlord who only wants it to produce right now. The long-term picture is not as important as the short term. More production equals more profit.

Ivan Wyatt, president of the Kansas Farmers Union and recent visitor of Mexico, said the majority of Mexican farmers are subsistence farmers. They are independent and self-sufficient. These are qualities Americans admire; yet, the economists call them inefficient. The farmers are ambitious and have their own community schools and cooperative governments. How is this inefficiency?

The farmers acquired their land through a redistribution after the Mexican Revolution. The administration is now requiring them to title their land. This is the first step in making it easier for big business to move in and buy up the land. This results in many displaced, ambitious workers who end up in the cities working for the same big business that moved them off their land. Ironic, isn't it?

Most of us have witnessed the loss of family farms. Should we allow this to happen to our neighbors? The current NAFTA would pave the way for the loss of more family farms. I think it is rather humorous that the administration under which this agreement was negotiated (behind closed doors I might add) was so pro-family. Breaking up an institution — the family — that every one agrees is essential to our well-being is not the only one.

Of course, the Bush administration is not the only one to blame — the Clinton administration supports NAFTA also.

In a time when our country needs more of a family base, it is not wise to support this NAFTA. There are also other reasons this NAFTA should be renegotiated. Wages, workers' rights, environment laws and other social justice concerns should be thoroughly considered. We are thinking creatures — so let's think about NAFTA and how it can really benefit all people involved.

NFL EXPANSION TEAM ANNOUNCED

The NFL expanded into new territory Tuesday night, adding a team in Charlotte, N.C., that will begin play in 1995 as the Carolina Panthers.

Action on the second expansion team was deferred until Nov. 30 with St. Louis, Baltimore, Memphis, Tenn., and Jacksonville, Fla. still in the running.

K-State defense rebounds, shuts down top offense

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Two weeks ago, the K-State defense gave up a season-high 45 points against the Nebraska Cornhuskers, and Husker quarterback Tommie Frazier ran for 151 yards against the Wildcat defense.

The defense had something to prove coming into the game against the Colorado Buffaloes, freshman linebacker DeShawn Fogle said.

And with Colorado's Lamont Warren leading the Big Eight Conference in rushing, Saturday's game was a perfect opportunity.

"After last week's performance, we knew we had to step it up," Fogle said. "We had heard good things about their running back, Lamont Warren, and we knew that he was a great player."

Defensive lineman Dirk Ochs said there was motivation to stop Warren and the Colorado offense because of the performance at Nebraska.

"Against Nebraska, we didn't play that well," Ochs said. " We wanted to play good against a tough team. There was some motivation to stop Lamont Warren because he was leading the conference in rushing."

Before the game against the Cats, Warren was averaging 108.5 yards a game. Against the Cats, Warren rushed for only 29 yards on 19 carries.

Colorado was averaging 34.0 points per game, but managed just 16 points against the Cats.

The Buffaloes were also averaging 510.2 yards in total offense per game, but K-State held the Buffs to 155 yards below their average offensive output per game.

The total offense for Colorado was a season low. The Buffaloes' previous low was against the Miami Hurricanes — 420 yards.

K-State coach Bill Snyder said the way the defense played against Colorado will help the players' confidence.

"They played tough against the run," Snyder said. "It's only going to add to their level of confidence."

Fogle said the defensive line played a key part in the success against Colorado. He also said he wouldn't have had any of his team-high 11 tackles without their efforts.

"The defensive line was great," Fogle said.

"I really believe that I couldn't do a thing without the rest of the team. Every time I made a tackle, I wasn't blocked, and that is the defensive line's job."

Ochs also said the defensive line's play was important.

"We were taking up the majority of the blockers, and that was a major part to our success," Ochs said.

Another key to the K-State success on defense was the play of cornerback Thomas Randolph. Randolph had to defend against all-American candidate Charles Johnson in man-to-man coverage for much of the game.

Snyder said numbers told the story in the matchup — the Buffalo standout was held to just two receptions for 46 yards.

Johnson had come into the game as the Big Eight's leading receiver, averaging 5.8 receptions with 109.5 yards per game.

"I guess you could say I won the confrontation," Randolph said. "He almost got me on the first play, but I didn't let him get the big play."

New coach applies lessons to career

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Cross country coach Terry Drake has overcome obstacles during his running career and now applies those experiences to his coaching career.

Drake's running career began in Lyons, a small town in the center of Kansas, and ended at the 1984 Olympic Trials in Los Angeles.

"I really wasn't any good in high school," Drake said. "I was the last person you'd see in the Olympic trials."

Drake attended Hutchinson Community College for a semester, transferred to Bethany College in Lindsborg and finally landed at Azusa Pacific University in Azusa, Calif.

His career began to take off at Azusa Pacific, where he became an NAIA all-American and set a school record in the steeplechase with a time of 9:05.

He coached cross country at Azusa Pacific before becoming a graduate assistant coach at K-State, where he continued to train for the steeplechase.

Competing unattached at a track meet in Seattle, he ran the steeplechase in 8:38, good enough for a spot at the Olympic trials.

"I think the knowledge I gained from competing and because I climbed up the ladder of success, I can relate to my athletes more closely," Drake said.

When he earned his master's degree in Education Administration, Drake was hired as the cross country coach at Johnson County Community College.

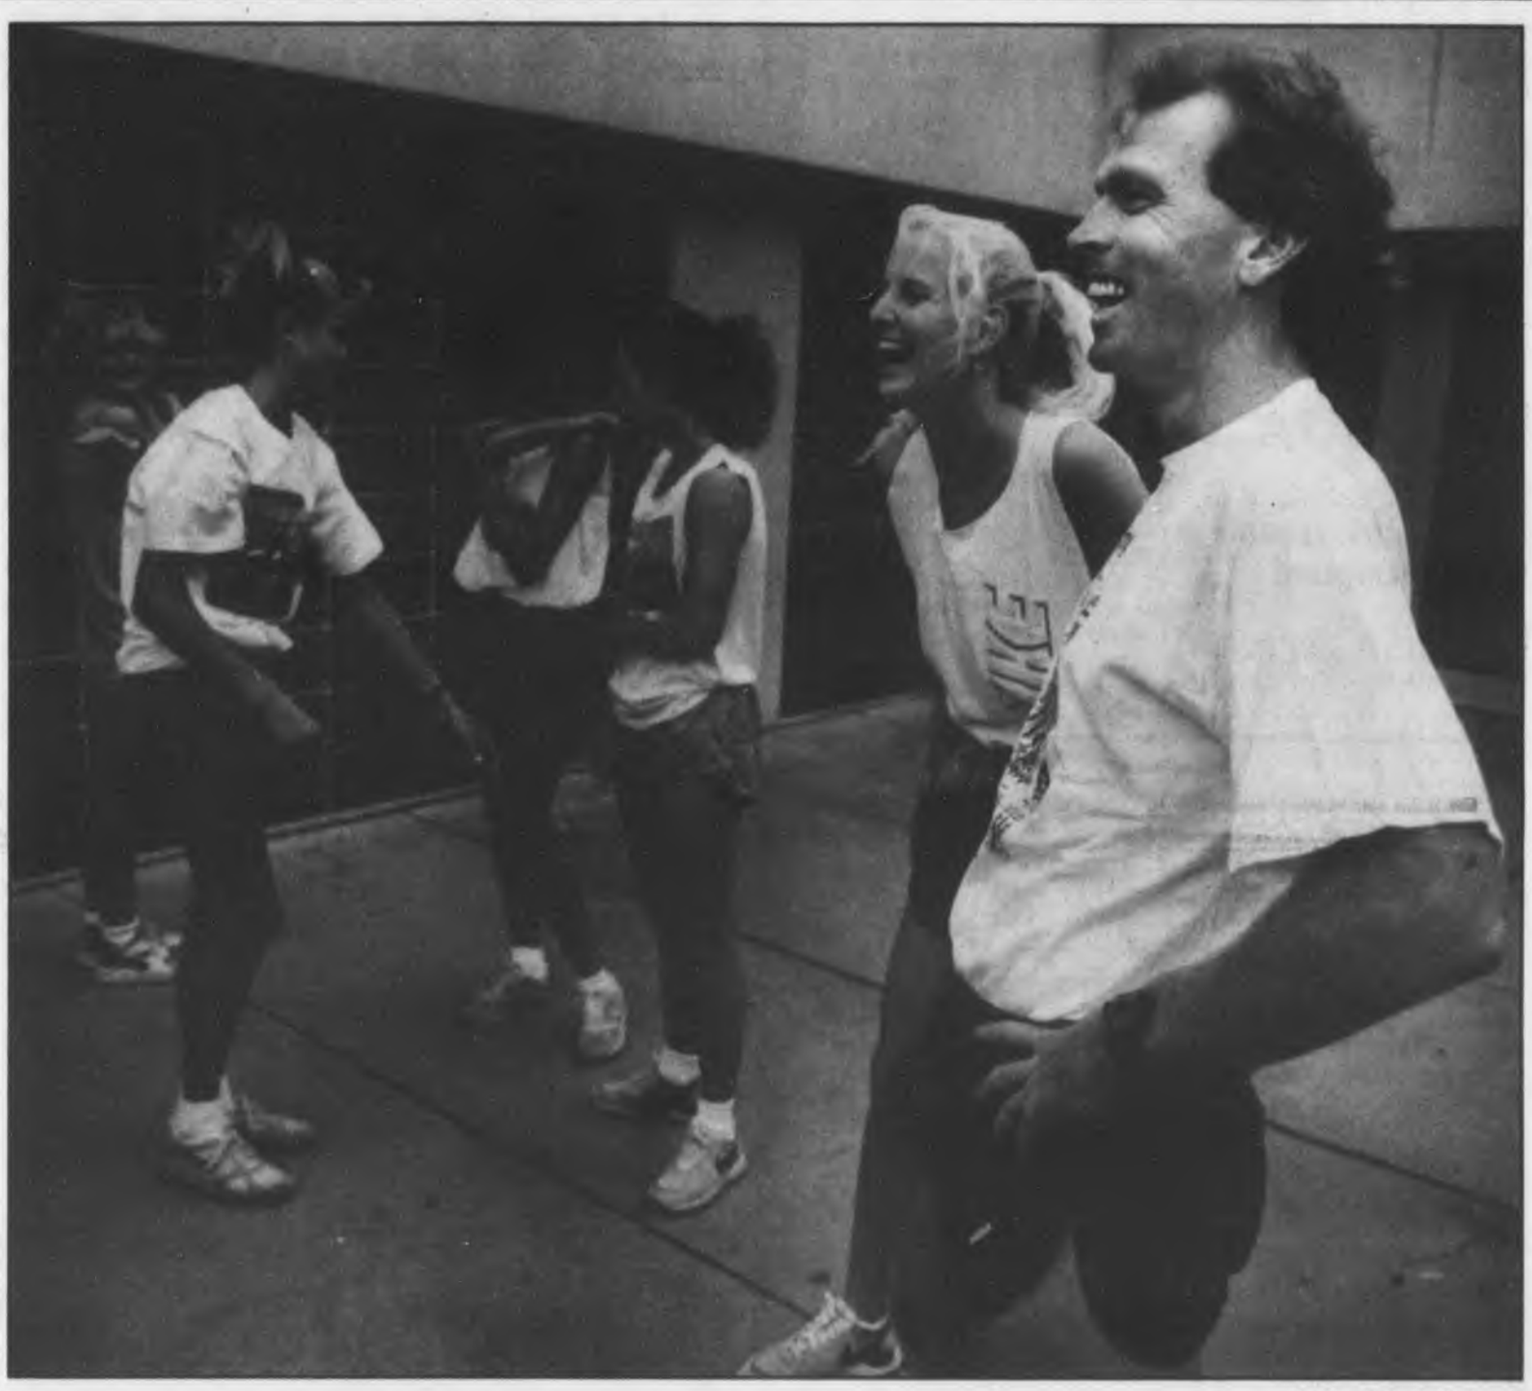
He then left coaching for five years and took a job as Midwest representative for Reebok. Drake said the experience made him realize he wanted to get back into coaching again.

Last summer, Drake got his wish when he was hired as the cross country coach at K-State.

"I had coaching experience at the NAIA and community college levels, and I was holding out for a Division-I job," Drake said.

Drake said he knew what to expect from his new position at K-State because he kept close to the program, and he felt he knew most of the runners and their abilities.

Even though he no longer competes, Drake said he still has a lot of the anxieties he had when he was competing.



"I get absent-minded sometimes and catch myself doing many of the same things I did when I was running," Drake said. "When that happens, I step back and turn my focus back on the team."

However, Drake said one of the benefits of being a track coach is that there isn't the pressure to fill stadiums and win.

"The University is good about giving us what we need to compete, but I never have felt any pressure to win," Drake said.

Drake has aspirations of Big Eight conference and national titles and eventually becoming the head track coach.

"The dynamics are here for a national title," Drake said. "It is just a matter of putting the pieces together."

Old friend won't cheer for Shula this week

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — As an old friend, Marty Schottenheimer will cheer as loud as anybody for Don Shula's record-tying 324th coaching victory.

Unless Shula gets it this week.

"Absolutely correct," said Schottenheimer, whose Kansas City Chiefs meet Shula's Miami Dolphins on Sunday. "It won't hurt Don to wait a few more days to get the record, which will certainly come with time."

Shula prepares to host the Chiefs with 323 career wins, one fewer than George Halas' NFL record. There's irony in the fact his first shot at tying the mark comes against a coach who's not only an old friend but who a generation ago almost became one of his players.

Nearing the end of his career as a linebacker, Schottenheimer was put on waivers by Pittsburgh in 1971. Baltimore and Miami both put in claims for him.

"Pittsburgh recalled the waivers and made a conditional trade with the Colts," Schottenheimer said. "Don went off then and made a trade to get Bob Matheson from Cleveland."

Matheson then became the namesake of Shula's "53 defense" as the Dolphins of the early 1970s Super Bowl championships.

"He got Matheson over me," Schottenheimer said. "He's always been a shrewd evaluator of talent.

"We probably wouldn't have gotten along over the years if I'd played for him because he's a hardhead and so am I."

Through the years, Schottenheimer and Shula have become close friends.

"Don Shula has had as great a capacity for getting the very best out of his players ... as any coach that I have ever been around or played for," Schottenheimer said. "If you're going to say he's the best of all time, am I going to argue? No."

After a bye week, the Chiefs have a rested and healthy Joe Montana to try to keep up the club's best start since 1971. At 5-1, Kansas City has the same record as Miami and sits atop the AFC West.

While relaxing on the golf course, Schottenheimer has quizzed Shula about his remarkable stamina in a profession where burnout is a common malady.

"In discussions with him, he's answered the question," Schottenheimer said. "But I don't know if I understand what he said. Basically, he's always told everybody, 'I enjoy it, and as long as I enjoy it, I'm going to keep

Snyder's contract not a gift, reflects level of football program he has built

After enduring year after year after year of poor-performing football teams representing K-State, President Jon Wefald in 1989 went looking for the "right person" to take over the worst program in Division-I football.

He lured Hayden Fry's top assistant from Iowa, a quiet, unassuming and private man by the name of Bill Snyder, to try to change the fortunes of Wildcat football.

TROY COVERDALE

Wefald told Snyder to build the program as he saw fit, not compromising academics for athletics, and also asked that Snyder work on building a winner.

Bill Snyder did it — or, more appropriately, is still doing it.

From a 1-10 record in 1989 to 5-6 in 1990 to 7-4 in 1991, Snyder worked on improving the product on the field as well as the product around the field.

In doing so, Snyder earned a new contract.

That's right — he earned it.

Now, before I go on with this, I want to make some things clear. I applaud this newspaper and the other local paper for finding out the details about Snyder's contract. You deserve to know that information.

However, the disclosure of Snyder's contract has become a center of controversy

Snyder did what was asked of him, and his bosses in the athletic administration felt he deserved a raise. That's how our economic system works.

It's just like if you or I were working, and our bosses felt more money for the effort would be worthwhile.

Unfortunately, there are people on this campus who think Snyder's contract was unjustified because of the University's dire financial straits.

Get out of the dark ages.

It's time everyone realize it is not the fault of the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics that K-State is having financial problems.

In fact, the athletic department has very little to do with that.

You see, the athletic department is its own corporate entity.

What they want to pay Bill Snyder has nothing to do with what professors are paid on this campus.

Or another way of putting it is that I, as a columnist for this paper, am an employee of Student Publications Inc. — a corporate entity.

My salary isn't paid by you as a taxpayer. It is paid by ad sales, subscriptions and other methods of funding. K-State just oversees that entity.

Salaries for professors come from money collected and dispersed by the State of Kansas. This is the area over which the University administration has direct control.

Is it Bill Snyder's fault $220,000 in cuts are being made at Farrell Library? No.

In fact, if there is a staunch supporter of criticized by professors.

"I've always felt that we've had a wonderful relationship with the faculty," Snyder said Tuesday. "And I'm pained by that as well."

The fault lies with the Kansas Board of Regents, Kansas Legislature and Gov. Joan Finney.

Tuition went up again this year. Yet, K-State finds funding being cut.

Farrell needed an addition, but it had to wait until Kansas University's Hoch Auditorium burned before action was taken on the governmental level.

K-State has trouble keeping professors because the University can't pay them what they're worth.

But these things are not the fault of one football coach doing his job.

Sure, it's not right academics take a back seat to athletics, here or anywhere.

I don't think it's right Larry Johnson signed for more than $80 million while school lunches are unhealthy for our kids.

But that's the way our society operates. It's not my fault, it's not yours.

And it sure is not the fault of a man who wanted a chance to build a football program his way.

If you want to complain that the football coach is earning more than a professor, then complain to the source of the problem.

Complain to Finney or your local legislator. Or, better yet, show them the "ads" this newspaper wanted to make to personify problems on this campus.

And let a very quiet, unassuming, family-

KIDS' CARNIVAL
■ The children's carnival will be from 5 to 7 p.m. on Oct. 28 in the K-State Union Ballroom.

The third annual children's carnival will take place from 5 to 7 p.m. on Oct. 28 in the K-State Union Ballroom.

The carnival is sponsored by the Union Program Council Special Events Committee.

The carnival will consist of 15-20 booths with different games and activities for grade-school children, said Debbie Perlman, coordinator for UPC's children's carnival.

"Some of the activities include decorating cookies and face painting," Perlman said.

Charla Bailey, UPC program adviser, said the carnival provides family entertainment.

"It's a nice activity for people on campus — whether they are students, faculty or staff — to bring their kids," she said. "Last year, everyone had a really good time."

Bailey said it is also popular for the kids involved in Big Brothers/Big Sisters to bring their little brothers or sisters.

Children also dress in their costumes for the carnival, Perlman said.

About 200 people attended the carnival last year, Bailey said.

"This includes parents and siblings at the carnival," she said. "We expect the same turnout this year, too."

Perlman said children can win prizes at the various booths.

"Last year, we ran out of prizes and had to get more," Perlman said.

Refreshments will be served at the carnival, Bailey said.

"We'll have punch, apple juice and the cookies that the kids decorated at one of the booths," Bailey said.

Some of the booths include a fishing game, ring toss and bean-bag toss.

"We also have a game where the kids blow a ping-pong ball through a maze," Bailey said. "For another game, we filled a baby pool up with cedar chips and buried prizes. The kids have to dig for the prizes."

The most popular activities are the face painting and decorating cookies, Bailey said.

"I think the reason the kids like to decorate cookies is that it lets them be more creative. The games and activities are fun for them, but they can decorate cookies any way they want to."

Bailey said the face painting helps the kids get into the Halloween spirit.

The carnival is free, but canned-food donations are accepted.

Bailey said donations will go to the K-State Thanksgiving drive for the Flint Hills Bread Basket.

Lafene begins peer program to discuss AIDS

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

Since the outbreak of AIDS in 1981, Americans have been bombarded with information about the deadly disease. Though the information available, the numbers of people contracting AIDS are increasing.

Lafene Health Center has implemented a plan to directly contact students and provide information on preventing the disease.

"Lafene began a volunteer program of peer educators who would teach students about AIDS and how they can contract the disease," said Kelley Fink, Lafene public health educator.

Students now can go through a selection process and take the class for credit, she said.

"The students fill out an application with references and attend an interview," Fink said. "We currently have 17 peer educators."

The class begins with basic facts about AIDS and statistics on who has the disease, she said.

"We also tell them the progress of AIDS, especially in Kansas," Fink said. "Many students do not know that three K-State faculty have died from AIDS-related diseases, and it is expected that one out of 80 students at K-State may contract AIDS."

Many students still think AIDS cannot affect them, she said.

"Many of the middle class females still do not believe that AIDS is their problem," said Kelly Christensen, junior in early childhood education and a second-year peer educator.

Rural areas are beginning to be affected by this disease more every day, Fink said.

"Heterosexual women from rural areas are getting AIDS more rapidly than most people think," she said. "The state of Kansas is considered to be rural, and many students do not receive AIDS education in high school.

"We stress to students that there isn't safe sex, only safer sex," she said. "We tell them abstinence is the only thing that is 100-percent safe."

The peer educators have speakers who give them firsthand information on dealing with family and friends who have AIDS, she said.

"We are having a mother of two children who has AIDS come and speak to us about how the disease has affected her and her family," Fink said. "We are also having a panel of students to speak about sexual preferences and homophobia."

Stereotypes still cause problems, Christensen said.

"In a presentation, we had the students write down questions, and on one sheet someone had written down 'fag,'" she said. "It is really hard to get students past the stereotypes."

Peer counselors also run into problems discussing condoms and the issue of abstinence, Fink said.

"Some people believe we are promoting sex by discussing condoms, but students who do decide to have sex need to learn to use them correctly," Fink said.

Many students do not know how to put on condoms correctly, Christensen said.

"We have a banana demonstration that we do, and many of our volunteers don't do it right," she said. "We can understand how pregnancies and STDs occur with the way many students put the condom on."

Along with educating students, peer educators learn a lot themselves, Fink said.

"The peer educators learn about their own sexuality and being able to discuss social problems," she said.

"It is a good feeling if I think I have helped at least one person understand the disease or change to a healthier behavior," Christensen said. "We have a lot of fun, but helping people is what we are here to do."

Peer educators often are well known on campus by people who have seen the presentation, Fink said.

"It isn't uncommon for an educator to be approached on campus and asked a question," she said. "The topic really attracts attention to them."

Peer educators give their presentations to many people, mostly who are in living groups and student organizations, Fink said.

Associated Collegiate Press

The Kansas State Collegian is an Associated Collegiate Press Pacemaker finalist—and among the Top 10 daily college papers in the country.
Other finalists are from Harvard University, the University of Texas at Austin, the University of North Carolina, Boston University, the University of Kansas, Indiana University, the University of Pennsylvania, University of Washington and the University of Wisconsin.
Finalists were chosen by entering specified issues throughout two semesters. The Collegian entered issues from both fall 1992, led by editor Samantha Branson, and spring 1993, led by editor Jodell Lamer.
Staffers from the Dallas Morning News will choose the national Pacemakers, and winners will be announced during the Fall National College Media Convention, sponsored by ACP and College Media Advisers, in Dallas Oct. 27-31.

Candidates for K-State Ambassador

It is my sincere belief K-State has an "electric air" generated by the excitement of activities and by the purple pride of students, faculty and alumni.

Throughout my career as a K-State student, I have aspired to serve you, the student body, as ambassador. I have served the University through Student Alumni Board, Arts and Sciences Ambassadors and as a campus tour guide.

My involvement in these organizations and other activities has stirred my desire to represent K-State. My experiences have provided me with the knowledge and skills to effectively work with alumni and prospective students.

I am a genuine, enthusiastic K-Stater who would be honored to demonstrate my purple pride for the University as your Ambassador.

Jennifer MONTGOMERY

Junior/public relations and political science

Purple pride and a plethora of pleasant people are two pertinent reasons why K-State is phenomenal and why I would be proud to serve as ambassador.

First, purple pride is on the prowl. Mike Ahearn said, "Play hard, but play fairly. And, most importantly, play for fun."

Wildcats still enjoy the fun of flaunting their purple pride. Participation in K-State's diverse campus activities, cheering on our dynamic athletic teams and studying to achieve nationally recognized excellence are three ways K-Staters display purple pride.

Second, positively pleasant people can be found at K-State. Wherever you go on campus, there is a K-Stater with a simple smile just for you.

I would be honored to promote K-State's progressive purple pride and pleasant people to prospective students, parents and alumni.

Jennifer PETERSON

Junior/pre-law and journalism and mass communications

"Pride. That's the underlying reason I would like to be K-State Ambassador. Not my personal pride in our University, but rather it's the pride that runs through the student body that makes the position desirable. I could honestly tell alumni and prospective students how today's students carry on the tradition of excellence that is K-State.

"With student-financed additions to Farrell Library and the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, a bowl-bound football team, an on-the-rise basketball program, a national champion debate team and an educational system described as the "Harvard of the plains," it's obvious "The Spirit of the Cats is Back."

"It is as Ambassador I could proudly relate these happening to alumni and prospective students."

Dale SILVIUS

Senior/management and marketing

I desire the opportunity to fulfill the position of KSU Student Ambassador as it would be both a challenging and rewarding experience. The opportunity to spark imagination and excitement in the mind of prospective students as well as kindle spirit and enthusiasm among our alumni are both challenges for which I am excited to undertake.

The Spirit of Kansas State is like the wind. We cannot always dictate the direction it moves; however, we can adjust our sails to benefit from its motion. I believe we should all adjust our personal sails and ride the Spirit of K-State to new and greater achievements.

Jeff SLEICHTER

Junior/animal science and industry

As a prospective student, the Student Ambassadors introduced me to the tradition and spirit of K-State. Had it not been for their efforts, I may not have attended this University.

From the start, I didn't let studying get in the way of college. That perspective made me open up to the friendship, diversity and mutual respect found at K-State.

Because I have met and come to know many people in many areas across campus, I feel I can represent K-State well to the people of Kansas and alumni across the nation.

Stan STADIG

Junior/pre-physical therapy

From boots to Birkenstocks, from tennies to TEVA's, from flip-flops to flats, K-State students come from all walks of life. As the K-State Ambassador, I would have the honor of representing KSU's best resource: its phenomenal student body. My primary goal would be to demonstrate to alumni as well as to prospective students that there truly is a place for everyone at K-State. The 1994 Kansas State University graduates will leave big shoes to fill across the campus, and I hope to play an instrumental role in recruiting the next group of enthusiastic students to begin the journey down their own collegiate path.

Jocelyn VITERNA

Junior/sociology, prelaw and Latin American studies

Shallow lover breaks off relationship

Dear Cassandra,

Last summer, I met a great girl during summer school. At first, we just studied together, but then we fell in love. It was the best time of my life.

She was the sweetest person I had met, and I thought she would be the one I would spend my life with.

In August, she pledged a sorority and was accepted. I live off-campus and was worried I would lose her to someone else because she would be around other men at greek functions and events. She said she loved me and nothing would come between us.

I was worried because she is attractive, and I'm more or less average in looks. She would be around better-looking men than myself. My worst fear came true.

Last week, she told me she met someone else and didn't want to see me again. I'm not a jealous person, I just want to know why.

I feel used. How can a person like her be so two-faced? I would never do to someone what she has done. My heart is broken.

Signed,
Unforgiven

Dear Unforgiven,

I'm sorry you've been hurt. I know how it feels when someone just leaves you — without a plausible explanation. Not only do you feel the loss, but you also feel the betrayal.

If you need to, ask her why she left you. It may provide a sense of closure to the relationship if you understand exactly why it ended.

If it turns out the only reason she left was to submit to some greek hunk of flesh, then you know you have to go on and leave her to her shallow little world.

You'll find someone else — you will. In the meantime, work on your own self-esteem. Your average looks may be just in your own head.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES By Gypsy Rose

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Consider something new for this year's Halloween costume. Wear your roommate's clothing. That should be really scary.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Go see "The Program," Then, go play in traffic.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your lucky excuse for the week: "Beavis and Butt-Head made me do it!"

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Get a haircut, and get your navel enlarged.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be nice to your neighborhood squirrel. Bury his nuts for him.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): It only takes a few minutes to phone home, and if you're lucky, the phone company will pay half.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Stock up on candy now. You will have lots of guests this year.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Avoid dunking for apples, someone may have spit in the barrel.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Save your pennies — copper is a lovely color.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Clear your schedule today, and make time for yourself.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Make a life-long commitment to defend truth, justice and the American way — but lose the blue tights.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Come out of the closet — lots of people like "Hee Haw."

Melvins are godfather of the Seattle sound

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

REVIEW

Imagine the sound of vile ooze being spewed forth from the belly of a grotesque, lumbering behemoth.

That's what Melvins sounds like.

Melvins has been churning out albums for nearly a decade, despite numerous membership changes. Its latest album, "Houdini," released by Atlantic Records, nonetheless marks the band's first major-label release.

Melvins is quite possibly the godfather of the grunge movement. The band had a great influence on a young Kurt Cobain and other grungers-to-be growing up in Seattle. Cobain even helped produce half the tracks on "Houdini."

This doesn't mean the band sounds like Nirvana. Where Nirvana's music seems pumped from the band's instruments under high pressure, Melvins' tunes have a sickening, dripping quality. They have the same dungeon-bred feel as a Black Sabbath song.

Drummer Dale Crover pounds out simple, heavy rhythms that support the overlying molasses-like guitar. The guitar itself, played by Buzz "King Buzzo" Osbourne, is about as distorted as possible. Buzzo's riffs sound quite a bit like Metallica played at one-fifth the original speed. Mark Deutrom's mean, wallowing thuds from the bass round out the mix.

The vocals, provided by Osbourne and Crover, consist of menacing growls and chants. The lyrics on "Houdini" are, for the most part, unintelligible. The words are provided for the first song, "Hooch," but they are not much help: "Los ticka toe rest. Might likea sender doe ree. Your make a doll a ray day sender bright like a penelty." Weird.

Melvins has some sort of bizarre charm, perhaps like the Mentors without Doctor Heathen Scum.

The actual "Houdini" compact disc features a picture of a cute, smiling, two-headed puppy. Similar two-headed pigs, penguins, cats, ducks and seals grace the liner notes.

If nothing else can be said for Melvins, the band has a sense of humor.

'Winter Show' features rural-folk pianist

JILL PARADISE
Collegian

The winter season is coming sooner than some might think.

As part of his six-city tour of Kansas, pianist George Winston will perform his "Winter Show" at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium.

The "Winter Show" is one of his two seasonally themed solo performances in which he plays selections from his "December" and "Autumn" albums, said Sherrie Huneke, marketing coordinator for Dancing Cat Productions.

He also will play some of the late Vince Guaraldi's "Peanuts" pieces in concert. In addition, he plays the harmonica and guitar.

"He can play three or four harmonicas at one time," Huneke said.

Winston will treat the audience to solo guitar pieces done in the "slack key" style of guitar, Huneke said. Slack key is a solo fingerpick-guitar style unique to the Hawaiian Islands.

Winston's concerts benefit local food banks.

He has sponsored a food bank for every concert he has done in the past nine or 10 years, Huneke said. It is Winston's way of giving back to the community and his fans for their support.

People attending the concert are asked to bring a non-perishable food item to support the Flint Hills Bread Basket.

Dance a sensory experience

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

The lights go out. The audience sits in silent darkness. From somewhere in the gloom, a pinpoint of light is seen. The dancer appears as if he were part of the darkness, then a shadow, now a light. It is the moon rising.

Kazuo Ohno and his son, Yoshito, performed the avant-garde Japanese dance form butoh, which means literally "dance step," in McCain Auditorium Tuesday night.

The dancers often wore Western costume, and the liner notes show Ohno as a poet familiar with European literature and symbolism. But, as Ohno writes, it is difficult to describe butoh in terms of concepts like symbolism.

Movements were so slow and controlled that the dancers seemed illusory at times. White garments and powdered skin gave the dancers an otherworldly glow, as if they were statues come to life, their movements seen but scarcely believed.

Butoh developed as a response to the devastation to Japan at the end of World War II, and the dancers seemed suspended in the wails of the dying and the thunder of bombers overhead.

Ohno and Yoshito explored the loss of childhood innocence in the movement "Dance with Crazy Halo." Ohno, dressed as a little girl, performed a humorous ballet with a soccer ball.

The experience was one of stunning visual effects and optical illusions. So intensely were the senses concentrated on catching each illusion that each new image was almost like a physical blow.

In the sensational finale, hundreds of colorful scarves floated to the stage like luminescent flower petals or autumn leaves. The effect of the dancer, made tiny by the enormous leaves, playing in the silent fall, was one of pure joy.

Kazuo Ohno was an unexpected pleasure.

DAVID MAYES/Collegian

Kazuo Ohno performs during the performance of Ka Cho Fu Getsu (Flowers-Birds-Wind-Moon) Tuesday night in McCain Auditorium. The dance is in the Butoh style.

who cared passionately about the arts.

"Some people remember him for the horror movies or the television shows, but his mission in life and the thing he believed in was the power of the arts," the actor's daughter, Victoria Price, said from a Los Angeles-bound airplane to join her family.

"He was just a wonderful man, a wonderful father, and a wonderful friend," his son, V.B. Price, said from his Albuquerque, N.M., home.

Price wrote several art books ("I Like What I Know") and wrote about cooking ("A Treasury of Great Recipes"). During the 1960s he served as art-buying consultant for Sears, Roebuck and Co., which was selling original art. He also founded a college art gallery.

"I've just done everything, but I feel that I've had a good life," Price said. "I haven't been as successful as some people, but I've certainly had more fun."

Born May 27, 1911, Price was the son of a St. Louis candy manufacturer. His father's wealth shaped his childhood, with art-viewing tours of Europe and a Yale University education. Price graduated with a degree in art history and English.

While studying at the University of London, he took a dare from a friend and auditioned for a role in the play "Chicago" starring John Gielgud.

He got the role and was then cast in "Victoria Regina," his 6-foot-4 frame and precise speech just fitting the role of Prince Albert. Producer Gilbert Miller invited him to appear opposite Helen Hayes in the New York production.

"Miller wouldn't even pay for my passage from London," Price recalled. "I came home steerage, smelling like a goat."

Price performed in several plays at Orson Welles' Mercury Theater. In 1938 he married his first wife, actress Edith Barrett, on the theater's stage.

That same year, Price moved to Hollywood, and he remained thereafter. Under contract to 20th Century Fox, he proved a valuable character actor in such films as "Song of Bernadette," "Wilson," "The Eve of St. Mark," "Leave Her to Heaven" and "Dragonwyck."

As a free-lance actor he appeared in a wide variety of films, including "Up in Central Park," "Abbott and Costello Meet the Invisible Man," "The Three Musketeers," "Curtain Call at Cactus Creek" and "Son of Sinbad."

His reputation as a scare merchant was established in the 1953 3-D thriller, "House of Wax."

During the 1960s Price appeared with Boris Karloff, Peter Lorre, Lon Chaney Jr. and others in a series of Edgar Allan Poe movies made by Roger Corman.

CITY

Riley County police avoid gunplay through training

SHERRIE ELMORE
Collegian

From the Civil War to 1985, Dallas had 57 officers killed in the line of duty.

In that same time span, Riley County had six law-enforcement personnel killed in the line of duty.

According to those figures, an officer in Riley County is 100 times more likely to die in the line of duty than an officer in Dallas.

"It is the sort of thing that happens very infrequently. And yet it is a dangerous profession, so, obviously, officers need to be prepared for the worst at any time," Riley County Police Captain Dana Kyle said.

"If you watch much TV at all, even the realistic cop shows, it seems like every time a cop goes somewhere they've got their guns out," Assistant Director Larry Woodyard said. "That's not the way it is here. It may be that way in some places where there is a greater evidence of weapon-use, like in Los Angeles and other big cities."

The number of people struck by officers' bullets was much higher in the 1970s, at least in Riley County, than in the 80s and 90s. In 1973, there were five officers in Riley County who had shot at and hit someone.

"The last time an officer discharged his gun at a person that we could recall was 1983," Woodyard said.

> "The last time an officer discharged his gun at a person that we could recall was 1983."
>
> LARRY WOODYARD
> ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF THE RILEY COUNTY POLICE DEPARTMENT

The situation involved a fleeing vehicle appearing to strike officers at a stationary road block. An officer fired a shotgun at the vehicle and hit the passenger door. No one was hurt in the incident. However, a follow-up determined this to be inappropriate use of force, and disciplinary action was taken, Woodyard said.

Disciplinary actions range from a letter of reprimand to dismissal.

No local, state or federal statutes exist concerning use of force. This is where the department's policy and the Use of Force Continuum are very important.

From a legal perspective, the use of deadly force is a high-liability area. From the individual's perspective, it would be a personal tragedy for the officer as well as the person shot, Lieutenant John Doehling, range master, said.

The question of having to shoot someone and being able to carry through with the shooting is something every officer has to answer for themselves, Kyle said.

"Obviously all of us want to be able to go home at night when we complete our shifts, and there may be times when we would have to injure someone in order for us to be able to do just that."

Lieutenant Brad Schoen, training officer, said authorized weapons range from what people call "nightsticks" to pepper sprays and the department-issued semi-automatic Smith and Wesson.

RCPD policy states that if given time, officers should identify themselves, and the officer should issue orders to halt. The policy would prefer to see an escalation of events — that the officer had attempted in some means to defuse the situation, and, if ineffective, had to go to the next step.

"We don't have a bunch of gun-happy cops here that go around looking for a chance to shoot someone. In fact, we look for ways to keep from shooting," he said.

The training on the firing range is important here. Even though a gun hasn't been fired at a person in 10 years, every individual who carries a gun needs to be ready to defend themselves or anyone in the area and do it efficiently.

That is why they train — so the officers will be comfortable in knowing when to shoot, and, if needed, they can shoot and hit where they are aiming.

The range training strives to make everything as realistic as possible. In most cases when a weapon is fired, the officer will be under some stress or some adverse conditions such as rain, snow or darkness. The range is tailored to those types of situations.

Photographs of different scenarios projected on a screen try to put an officer in a situation where the officer has to make a decision whether or not to shoot.

In different exercises, the officers approach situations that they will encounter quite often in their patrol duties. There are role players, generally instructors who will use these different scenarios to expose the officers to possible real-life encounters.

Deactivated handguns that fire a cotton wad or paint ball are used in these exercises.

"Being stung with a cotton wad doesn't sound like it's very dangerous, but it's eye-opening," Kyle said.

The qualification course is a varying-distance, timed course that varies somewhat in shooting positions. The targets here are human silhouettes. All officers who carrys a weapon, including corrections officers, are required to qualify three times a year with a minimum score of 80 percent.

Last fall, RCPD lost the lease on their firing range. The property was purchased by another individual. Since that time, the department has been operating the range on the basis of a short-term lease.

"We are currently looking for property with a long-term lease or land we could purchase," Kyle said.

If the uncertainty of the range continues, RCPD may face missing mandatory qualification times for continued departmental accreditation.

There is growing concern, not just for accreditation purposes, but also for the risk to the employees because they have not been able to be sufficiently trained.

"We recognize that tonight, even though we haven't shot a weapon in 10 years, that the circumstances may be such that someone should have to," Kyle said. "Everybody wants to go home when their shift is over."

Canada's liberals win political control

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TORONTO — The Liberals were swept to power in Canada less because voters were convinced Jean Chretien could cure the country's ills than because they were fed up with nine years of Conservative rule.

Chretien, the 59-year-old Quebec lawyer who spent a lifetime in politics, said early today the election gives him a mandate to begin tackling Canada's serious economic woes. Perhaps it does. But the mandate is thin and concentrated in Ontario and the east.

Prime Minister Kim Campbell and her Progressive Conservatives were not just defeated, they were atomized and humiliated. They fell from 155 seats in the 295-seat House of Commons to two, from absolute masters to a minuscule fringe party.

The final indignity: Campbell was dumped from her own seat in British Columbia.

The only Conservatives elected were Deputy Prime Minister Jean Charest and Elsie Wayne. Charest, of Sherbrooke, Quebec, is the man who narrowly lost to Campbell in this spring's heated race for the party leadership. Wayne is the popular mayor of Saint John, New Brunswick, and a newcomer to the federal government.

Cranky Canadians felt they were under assault by a depressed economy, 11.2 percent unemployment, a new 7 percent federal sales tax on top of provincial sales taxes that range as high as 11 percent, and free trade with the United States that many believe has cost hundreds of thousands of jobs.

Many Canadians feared that Conservative plans to wipe out the $26 billion federal budget deficit in five years could only happen if there was an erosion of sacred social programs, particularly universal health care.

On the defensive, the Conservatives spent most of the campaign fending off attacks from three sides.

First in line snapping and snarling at the Conservative heels were the Liberals, the traditional enemy. Then came two upstart protest parties that burst onto the national scene only recently.

The Bloc Quebecois wants to send representatives to Ottawa only to watch out for Quebec's interests until the French-speaking province wins independence. The Bloc was formed when Lucien Bouchard bolted from the Conservative Party in 1990, taking several others with him.

The rightist Reform Party came out of the Rocky Mountain west to suck up even more Conservative votes.

Between the three of them, they cleaned the Conservative clock.

Never in Canadian history had a governing party suffered such ignominy.

Even the leftist New Democratic Party, long Canada's third political force but lately on the skids, came out with a slightly better disaster than Campbell's Tories. It won eight seats.

Brian Mulroney, the former prime minister who had led Conservatives to two smashing victories in 1984 and 1988, stepped down after becoming the most reviled Canadian leader in history. It was a legacy Campbell simply couldn't overcome.

Hijackers set terms of hostage release

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NIAMEY, Niger — Gunmen who seized a Nigerian Airways jetliner kicked and clubbed passengers and threatened to set them on fire in the opening moments of the hijacking, a former passenger said Tuesday.

The estimated four to six hijackers remained with about 34 hostages inside the Airbus 310 they hijacked in Nigeria on Monday and diverted to Niamey, capital of neighboring Niger.

The hijackers were demanding enough fuel to fly to Frankfurt, Germany. During negotiations with authorities on Monday, they said they said they would set fire to the plane within 72 hours unless Nigeria's military-backed government steps down.

Nigeria has been wracked by political turmoil over the government's refusal to recognize the results of the June 11 presidential election.

The hijackers, after landing in Niger, released most of the 159 passengers but kept about 28 passengers and six crew members on the plane. Security and aviation officials in Niger said the hijackers apparently were singling out Nigerian government employees to remain on the plane.

A passenger who was among the first people freed Monday told reporters in Nigeria that six hijackers — authorities had said there were four — rushed to the middle of the plane shortly after it left Lagos.

Sooners come to K-State

JEN MESSELT
Collegian

Not since Ronald Reagan's second term of presidency has this happened.

The Oklahoma Sooner football team returns to KSU Stadium for the first time since 1987 this Saturday. The Sooners bought the rights and guarantee from K-State in the 1989 and 1991 seasons.

The idea of Oklahoma buying the rights of K-State's home games were proposed by K-State's senior associate athletic director Jim Epps in 1989.

Epps said the reason the rights were sold was to make more money.

"I constructed it solely and strictly for revenue purposes," Epps said. "We were able to generate a greater profit than if we would have played the game here in Manhattan."

Oklahoma paid K-State $350,000 for the 1989 game and $375,000 for the 1991 game. These numbers include the buy-outs and gate receipts of the games.

Big Eight Conference rules state the maximum guarantee for a game is $175,000. K-State will guarantee between $60,000 and $70,000 for this year's game. Guarantees depend on the attendance.

The cash-flow situation resulting from Oklahoma's buying the rights for the contest increased the revenue at K-State, Epps said.

"It was a quick and effective way to do it," he said.

Epps said he proposed the plan to former Athletic Director Steve Miller and Coach Bill Snyder. Miller and Snyder concurred with the decision.

Snyder said he didn't like selling the rights.

"I didn't want to do that," he said. "I never wanted to. But I had to do it to gain money.

Senior wide receiver Andre Coleman said it is great to have the Sooners come here.

"I'm excited for getting them at home," Coleman said. "We have confidence that we can beat them here."

Senior free safety Jaime Mendez also said it is nice to have Oklahoma in Manhattan.

"We don't need their money," Mendez said. "It will be great for me to finally play them at home."

Epps said the selling of the games to the Sooners was a quick way to gain money.

"Financially, we were looking for some way to increase revenue. At that time, OU sold their games out," Epps said. "They make far more money with the guarantee to buy our game, and we could help ourselves."

Epps said K-State decided to bring the 1993 game back to Manhattan instead of selling it to Oklahoma.

"We want home-field advantage. Fans deserve to see OU play," Epps said.

"Football has made so much progress, and we wouldn't do anything to diminish our team's chances of winning."

K-STATE SPORTS INFORMATION

Coach Vince Gibson (bottom of stairs) meets the K-State fans after returning from a 16-7 win over Colorado State in 1967.

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

One former football coach said he is glad to see the purple pride of K-State football back again.

Vince Gibson, who coached K-State football from 1967 to 1974, was the last coach to beat Nebraska and Oklahoma in back-to-back seasons in 1969 and 1970. Gibson said he is happy for the program.

"I'm glad to see the Cats getting back to winning and have winning seasons," said Gibson, who was 33-52 in eight years at K-State. "It's great to see the competitive spirit and seeing the Cats beat big teams."

Gibson said there are similarities between today's program and the program he led.

"Coach Snyder is having to build the program the way I did — he is a fantastic man," he said. "He is teaching the players to have the spirit to believe they can win. Coach Snyder is really keeping the program going and doing a good job."

Gibson works for Spectacular Sports, a wholesale travel agency in New Orleans that arranges trips to sporting events like the Super Bowl and World Series. He said he doesn't miss coaching, but enjoys keeping involved in sporting events.

"Coaching K-State football was extremely hard work — it was a 20-hour day job," he said. "Unlike some teams, like Florida State, you are constantly pushing, and K-State has the same hard teams on its schedule every year.

Even though Gibson is glad to get away from coaching, he said he misses Manhattan and the people.

"I do really miss the people of K-State," he said. "Everyone was always so friendly, and they began to get really involved with football and showing their Purple Pride, a saying we started."

Getting people to come to the games is an accomplishment Gibson said he is proud of.

"We built the new stadium, but we had very little excitement from the students. Then we began to get more support," he said. "Seeing the stadium covered with purple was the biggest thrill for me."

There was also a group called the Gibson Girls, who helped entertain people and players who came to K-State.

"The Gibson Girls were a student booster club that really supported K-State," he said. "It was exciting a few weeks ago when I ran into one of the original girls that helped start the club."

Gibson said the players and coaching staff he worked with made his job enjoyable.

"The guys like Lynn Dickey and Steve Grogan (former K-State quarterbacks) were a lot of fun to coach — there were so many guys who I enjoyed having on the team," he said. "Our coaching staff was extremely close, and we have still kept in touch."

Gibson said he hopes to see K-State win the Big Eight Championship and go to a bowl game.

"The team still has a good chance for a bowl game," Gibson said. "The team has come a long way over the recent years, and I'm really proud of them."

Though Gibson doesn't want to return to coaching at age 60, it has been an important part of his life.

"K-State will always be a big part of my life," he said. "The people of Kansas and K-State are wonderful and extremely friendly.

BIG EIGHT ROUNDUP

MISSOURI AT NEBRASKA

FAST FACTS: 2:30 p.m., Saturday, Folsom Field, Boulder, Colo.

RECORDS: Nebraska (3-0/7-0), Colorado (2-0-1/4-2-1)

ABOUT THE HUSKERS:

Nebraska defeated Missouri, 49-7, last Saturday in Lincoln, Neb. I-back Calvin Jones leads the Cornhuskers in rushing with 129 yards. As a team, the Cornhuskers rolled up 539 yards of total offense, including 340 yards on the ground.

Nebraska broke Colorado's 25-game unbeaten record in the conference with a 52-7 victory last year in Lincoln. Nebraska rattled the Buffaloes in that contest by forcing six turnovers.

Nebraska leads the conference in rushing offense with an average of 302.9 yards per game.

ABOUT THE BUFFALOES:

Colorado tied K-State, 16-16, last Saturday in Manhattan. Quarterback Kordell Stewart had 229 yards passing and tacked on 49 more rushing. He is second in the conference in total passing yards with 1,559.

Receivers Charles Johnson and Michael Westbrook are taking aim on the Big Eight record book. Johnson is sixth all-time in the Big Eight in receiving yardage with 2,068 yards, while Westbrook is ninth in receptions with 121 catches.

Running back Lamont Warren eclipsed the 2,000-yard mark against K-State and has 2,022 yards rushing for his career. He now ranks 10th all-time at Colorado.

IOWA STATE AT MISSOURI

FAST FACTS: 1 p.m., Saturday, Faurot Field, Columbia, Mo.

RECORDS: Iowa State (2-5/1-2), Missouri (2-4-1/1-2)

ABOUT THE CYCLONES:

Iowa State defeated Oklahoma State, 20-17, last weekend in Ames, Iowa. The Cyclones got the victory on running back James McMillion's fourth-down touchdown reception with five minutes left in the game. The win broke Iowa State's five-game losing streak.

McMillion ran back a punt 78 yards for a touchdown in last year's contest against the Tigers. The run sent Iowa State on its way to a 28-14 victory in Ames, Iowa. Iowa State has won the past five meetings.

ABOUT THE TIGERS:

Missouri lost, 49-7, last Saturday at Lincoln, Neb. Wide receiver Kenny Holly had five receptions in the game, making him Missouri's all-time career receptions leader with 130 catches.

Quarterback Jeff Handy passed for 307 yards against Iowa State and had the Tigers up 7-0 early in the game last year before Iowa State got on track. The game ended for Missouri with a 28-14 loss to the Cyclones.

Missouri coach Bob Stull has never beaten Iowa State in his five years at the helm of the Tigers. Missouri leads the series 48-29-9.

KANSAS AT OSU

FAST FACTS: 2 p.m., Saturday, Lewis Field, Stillwater, Okla.

RECORDS: Kansas (1-2/3-5), OSU (0-3/3-4).

ABOUT THE JAYHAWKS:

Kansas lost, 38-23, last Saturday at Norman, Okla. Jayhawk running back June Henley recorded his eighth touchdown of the season to tie the Kansas freshman record established by Kerwin Bell in 1980. Henley had 178 yards rushing for the day.

The Jayhawks have won the past three meetings with the Cowboys, starting back in the 1990 campaign, when they broke OSU's six-game winning streak against Kansas. Last year, then 18th-ranked KU pressured Oklahoma State into five turnovers as the Jayhawks capitalized on their opportunities and triumphed 26-18 in Lawrence.

ABOUT THE COWBOYS:

The Cowboys dropped a 20-17 decision last Saturday to Iowa State at Ames, Iowa. Quarterback Gary Porter had 151 yards passing vs. the Cyclones

Oklahoma State is ranked second in the conference in total defense, allowing 324 yards per game. The Cowboys are first in the conference in pass-efficiency defense with 102.5 points.

THE MATCH-UP

A position-by-position look at K-State's game Saturday against Oklahoma. The Collegian sports staff compiled the information to pick the team with the advantage at each position.

DEFENSE

| POSITION | | K-State | Oklahoma |
|---|---|---|---|
| LINE | The Sooner rushing defense ranks fifth in the Big Eight — just ahead of the Cats in sixth place. Both teams have allowed nine rushing touchdowns this season, but the Sooners have faced more dominant, rushing teams. Against Colorado, the K-State front four allowed the Big Eight Conference's leading rusher, Lamont Warren, to just 29 yards on 19 carries. | ☐ | ☑ |
| LINEBACKERS | K-State moved from fourth place to third place in total defense. Against Colorado, the Cats gave up just 335 total yards, which is 16 yards below their season average (351 a game). The Oklahoma defense, giving up 366.9 yards a game, ranks fourth in the conference. Oklahoma is led by second-team all-Big Eight outside linebacker Aubrey Beavers. | ☑ | ☐ |
| SECONDARY | The Cats rank second in the Big Eight in passing defense. The Cats have allowed only 94 completions while picking off seven passes. Last week, the Cats gave up 229 yards through the air, but held all-Americans Michael Westbrook and Charles Johnson for no touchdowns. The Sooner secondary is fifth in the conference, allowing 1,284 yards in the air this season. Free safety Larry Bush is second in the Big Eight with three interceptions. | ☑ | ☐ |

OFFENSE

| POSITION | | K-State | Oklahoma |
|---|---|---|---|
| LINE | Oklahoma returned all but one starter from last season's offensive line and has the third best offense in the conference. OU is fifth in rushing with 187 yards per game. The Sooners have also outscored the Cats on offense, averaging 32.9 points a game. Against Colorado, the K-State offensive line allowed four sacks — against the seventh-ranked defense in the Big Eight. The K-State rushing attack is just seventh in the conference with an average of 118.3 yards a game. | ☐ | ☑ |
| WIDE RECEIVERS/ TIGHT ENDS | K-State probably has the top receivers in the Big Eight. Andre Coleman, Kevin Lockett and Mitch Running are second, third and sixth in the league in receiving yards per game. The Cats also possess the top passing attack in the conference with an average of 260.3 yards per game. The Sooners are led by Rickey Brady, who is seventh in the Big Eight with a reception average of 3.43. The Sooners are in fourth place (163.6 yards per game). | ☑ | ☐ |
| RUNNING BACKS | Oklahoma is ranked fifth with a 187-yard average per game. Tailback James Allen is spearheading the Sooner attack this season eight touchdowns, and he averages 47.43 yards per game. K-State running back J.J. Smith was held to 26 yards against Colorado last week after three straight 100-yard rushing games. The Cats are seventh in the conference in rushing offense with 118.3 yards a game. | ☐ | ☑ |
| QUARTERBACKS | Sooner Cale Gundy is the top passer in Oklahoma's history with more than 4,000 yards passing. This season, he is leading the Big Eight in passing efficiency with a 63.16 completion percentage. Gundy has thrown three interceptions this season and has thrown for 10 touchdowns. Gundy was named the Big Eight's offensive player of this week. K-State quarterback Chad May is second in the league in total offense. May has passed for 1,806 yards, which is 442 yards better than Gundy, but May has also thrown six interceptions this season. | ☐ | ☑ |

SPECIAL TEAMS

| POSITION | | K-State | Oklahoma |
|---|---|---|---|
| PUNTING | Chad Romano is fifth in punting in the league with an average of 41.2 yards per kick, and K-State has the second-best net punting in the league with 39.1 yards a game. Oklahoma punter Scott Blanton is sixth in punting with a 39.04-yard average, but is seventh in net punting with an average of 39 yards per kick. | ☑ | ☐ |
| PLACE KICKING | Blanton is second in the league with nine field goals out of 12 attempts, is tied for the lead in scoring with 56 points and averages eight points a game for the Sooners. Wright ranks fourth in the league in field goals with eight field goals out of 11 attempts. | ☐ | ☑ |
| RETURN | Coleman is first in kickoff returns in the league — third in the nation — with an average return of 30.10 yards. Coleman dropped to third in punt returns, but maintains an 11.53-yard average per return. Oklahoma's Darrius Johnson is fourth in punt returns in the league. He averages 8.71 yards per punt return. The Sooners do not have anyone listed in the top five in kickoff returns. | ☑ | ☐ |

INTANGIBLES

| AREA | | K-State | Oklahoma |
|---|---|---|---|
| MOMENTUM | K-State will have the home-field advantage against the Sooners for the first time in five years. Even though the Cats tied with Colorado, they have played well against the top two teams in the Big Eight, and K-State has an 11-game unbeaten streak at KSU Stadium. The Sooners rebounded after losing 27-10 to the Buffaloes two weeks ago at home with a 38-23 win over Kansas. Oklahoma has won 22 consecutive games against K-State. | ☑ | ☐ |
| COACHING | Gary Gibbs is 34-15-2 in his four years at Oklahoma. The Sooners finished fourth in the Big Eight last season, and they are off to their best start since 1988, when they went 9-3. Gibbs has also led the Sooners to a Gator Bowl win in 1991. K-State coach Bill Snyder is 23-27-1 in five years. Snyder has the Cats ranked nationally for the first time since 1970. | ☐ | ☑ |
| THE EDGE | If the defense can stop the Sooner multiple-option attack, the Cats could have a lot of success in this game. It will be important for the Cats to not let the Sooners pound the ball with their experienced, offensive line. Oklahoma can't afford another loss in the Big Eight if it wants to compete for the league title. The Cats are now shooting for a bowl bid, and a win over the Sooners could be a big step toward that goal. | ☐ | ☑ |

Teams travel to meet

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The men's and women's cross country teams are bound for Columbia, Mo., for the Big Eight Cross Country Championships on Saturday.

The women's 5,000-meter race begins at 10:30 a.m. and will be followed the men's 8,000-meter race at 11:15 a.m.

The K-State women are the defending Big Eight co-champions — a title they shared with Colorado at last year's meet. However, they are tabbed for fourth in the Big Eight Coaches Poll last week.

K-State runner Jeanene Rugan said being picked fourth can help the squad.

"I don't think there is as much pressure being ranked fourth," Rugan said. "Hopefully, we can surprise some people."

Nebraska is picked to win the women's team title, according to the poll. They are ranked 15th in nation, behind Colorado, who is ranked 11th.

"It's (coaches poll) a hard way to pick teams when we don't run head-to-head," Nebraska Coach Jay Dirksen said. "Colorado is ranked higher than us, and I think Kansas is the best team in conference."

K-State coach Terry Drake said several of the Big Eight coaches said they agree K-State possesses the best one-two combination in the conference in Rugan and Paulette Staats.

"Everyone on the team is running well," Drake said. "It just seems like Jeanene and Paulette are taking bigger steps forward."

Staats placed sixth at the 1992 championship, and Rugan finished eleventh last year. Both said they hope to finish among the top five runners this year.

The duo said for the team to bring home another title, they need the third, fourth and fifth runners to move up and stay closer to the lead.

The men face the championship with only five members remaining on the team. They were picked by the conference coaches to finish fourth.

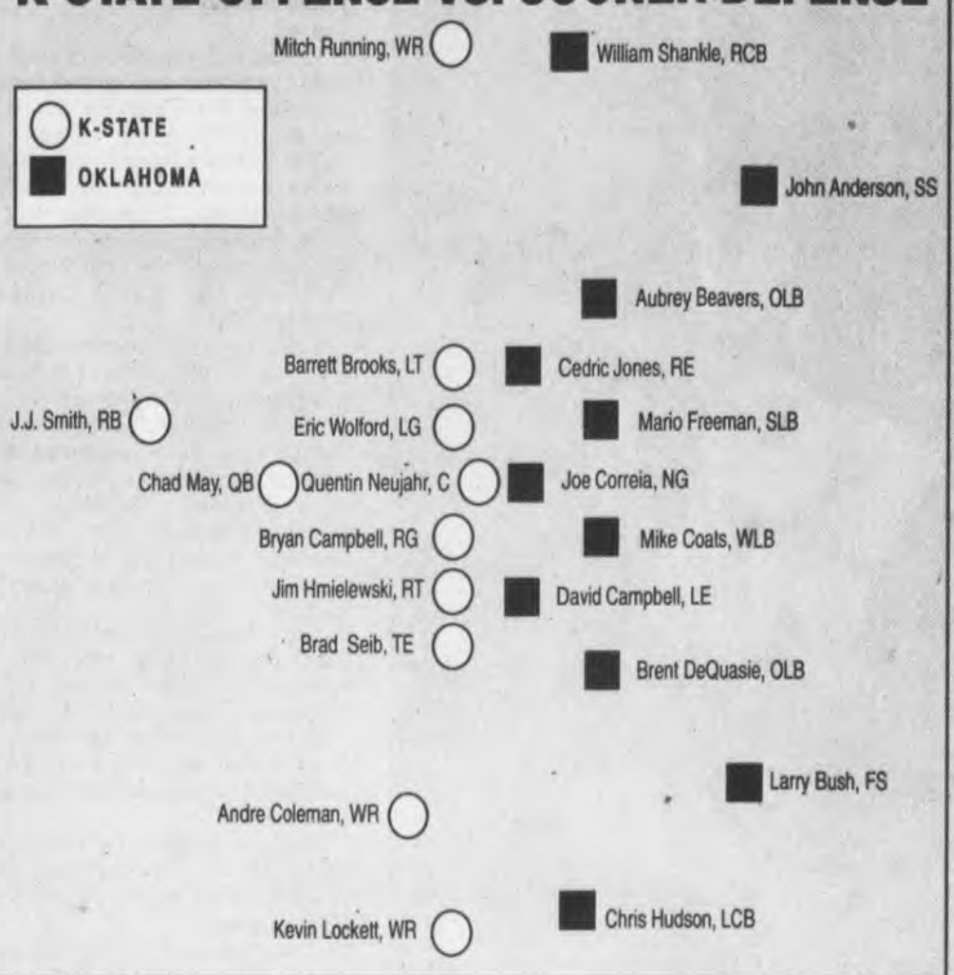
Iowa State enters the meet ranked second in the nation and is the favorite to win after receiving seven out of eight of the first-place votes from the coaches.

"It's going to be a real tough meet with Colorado as the defending champion," Iowa State Coach Bill Bergan said.

The Cyclones owned the title for four years before relinquishing it to Colorado last year.

K-State will be lead by Francis O'Neill and Ryan Clive-Smith. O'Neill has been the team's top runner the past two seasons and said he hopes to improve on his fourth-place finish from a year ago.

"The conference is much better this year," O'Neill said. "I could run my best race ever and still go down in the standings."



Drake said O'Neill has the talent to win, but the competition at this year's meet will be tough.

"The Big Eight is a talented, talented conference," he said. "Iowa State is ranked second in the nation and may have a shot at the national championship."

Clive-Smith is making a late-season surge going into the championships. He finished seventh at the Iowa State classic. Clive-Smith said he will finish higher than a year ago.

FOOTBALL

Snyder's attention drifts from preperation

BRIAN W. KRATZER/Collegian

J.J. Smith, K-State running back, is tackled by Colorado free safety Tim Ross in K-State's 16-16 tie against the Buffaloes. The 18-yard performance ended his string of 100-yards rushing at three games. He had run for 100 yards in the past three contests.

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State is 5-1-1, No. 4 in the Big Eight Conference and ranked in the Associated Press poll for the first time since 1970.

The Wildcats battled with No. 5 Nebraska before losing 45-28, rallied to tie No. 20 Colorado 16-16 and will now get another shot at an upper-echelon team in No. 14 Oklahoma at KSU Stadium Saturday.

Yet, Coach Bill Snyder said he and his team are having a difficult time focusing on the Sooners.

The difficulty stems from recent interest in his 10-year contract, the fact that two members of the team were arrested Sunday and suspended from the team and his decision to go for a tie against Colorado last Saturday at KSU Stadium.

"It's hard, and we've talked about this, for them (the team) to remain focused on this upcoming ballgame," Snyder said. "It's been extremely hard for me. Obviously, I haven't dealt with it very well yet. I will, and I'm sure our football team will, too.

"I think there is far too much focus on me and certainly not enough on the young people that play the game."

The contents of the 10-year deal were released earlier this week under pressure from Attorney General Robert Stephan, who said all terms relating to salary in the contract must be released under the Kansas Open Records Act.

Early Sunday morning, wide receivers Henry Smalls and Tim Sanders were arrested because of possession of a controlled substance, believed to be marijuana. Smalls had only seen limited action this season, catching just two passes for 58 yards, while Sanders has not played.

Snyder said he hopes the incidents won't affect the team's spirit, but also said the Cats would bounce back from the adversity.

"I hope not," Snyder said when asked if the arrests would damage the team's spirit. "I really can't speak for all of them at this particular time. I know they are pained by it as well, but I think they will bounce back well."

The Cats started the season 5-0, the program's best beginning since 1931, and are ranked 25th in the AP poll. This week's Big Eight games will start to clear up the bowl game picture, with the league's No. 1 team traveling to No. 2 Colorado, and No. 3 Oklahoma taking on No. 4 K-State.

Snyder said the program has had mountains to climb in the past.

"We've had hurdles before, and certainly they are on an ever-present basis," Snyder said. "It seems like we've bunched up a few of them here all at once. But these are things that affect a program, and, obviously, you have to deal with them."

Snyder said he was upset with the fact that faculty members had taken a negative outlook to his position.

"I'm terribly disappointed. I've always felt we've had a wonderful relationship with the faculty, and I'm pained by that as well," Snyder said. "And it's bothersome that that may be tarnished."

Free safety Jaime Mendez, who leads the Cats with 89 tackles this season, said the team has one priority.

"Our only concern is playing Oklahoma, " Mendez said. "We're going to get out of it."

Football players arrested on drug charges

BRIAN ANDEROSN
Collegian

Two K-State football players have been suspended from the team following weekend arrests on charges of possession of a controlled substance.

Wide receivers Henry Smalls and Tim Sanders were arrested early Sunday in Aggieville while fans celebrated the Wildcats' 16-16 tie with then-No. 16 Colorado last Saturday.

Coach Bill Snyder said both players have been suspended, although that does not indicate they are guilty of the charges against them.

Snyder said he talked with members of the Riley County Police Department.

"We did have a chance to talk with the authorities," Snyder said at his weekly press conference on Tuesday. "It pains me to do that (to suspend the players). No one should prejudge them guilty until they are in a court of law."

According to a police report, Smalls and Sanders were arrested at 12:18 a.m. Sunday with possession of a controlled substance, believed to be marijuana.

Officers said a crowd gathered around a truck at a stop sign at 12th and Moro streets, and an officer saw one the the players holding a hand-rolled cigarette.

Capt. Allen Raynor said no further information will be released to the public on the arrests. Players said they have tried to put this weekend's incident and the distractions of the release of Snyder's contract behind them.

"Everything was settled yesterday (Monday)," cornerback Kenny McEntyre said. "Everybody knows we need to think about Oklahoma."

Cats lose two matches in Ahearn

K-State remain winless in Big Eight contests

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State volleyball team remains winless in the Big Eight Conference after losing last week to the Missouri Tigers and the Colorado Buffaloes at home.

The losses gave the Cats a 7-14 record on the season and an 0-6 record in the Big Eight. The losses also mark the Cats' fourth and fifth straight losses in a row. The last win for the Wildcats was against Northeastern Illinois on Oct. 9.

The Cats played the Tigers evenly throughout the five-game match before losing 3-2 in Ahearn Field House last Wednesday.

The Cats battled back after being down 2-1 and won the fourth game, forcing a fifth game to decide the match.

K-State coach Patti Hagemeyer said she was pleased with team's performance.

"Overall, I was pretty happy about how we played against Missouri," Hagemeyer said.

K-State fell behind in the fifth game when the Tigers jumped out to a 7-3 lead, sparked by a 3-0 run. The Cats narrowed the score to 13-10 before falling to Missouri 15-12.

Leading the Cats' attack against the Tigers were outside hitters Suzanne Hagge and Yolanda Young. Hagge and Young recorded 23 kills in the match — both were career highs. Hagge's former high was against University of Missouri-Kansas City last season, when she had 17 kills, and Young's career high was against Wichita State earlier this season.

Hagge said it is difficult to play when K-State is losing.

"My kills felt better when we were winning," Hagge said. "When we are winning, the team's attitude is positive, but when we are down, the kills didn't feel the same. I still think it's the hardest that the team has played all season."

Middle blocker Jill Dugan also added 14 kills to the Cats' effort.

Last Saturday, the Buffaloes came to K-State to play the Cats for the final time this season.

The No. 11-ranked Buffaloes defeated the Cats 3-0, improving their league record to 6-0 with the win over the Cats. It was the 11th straight win for Colorado over K-State.

"Colorado came ready to play," Hagemeyer said. "They are as good as anybody we have played this season. We got a measure of how tough they are tonight."

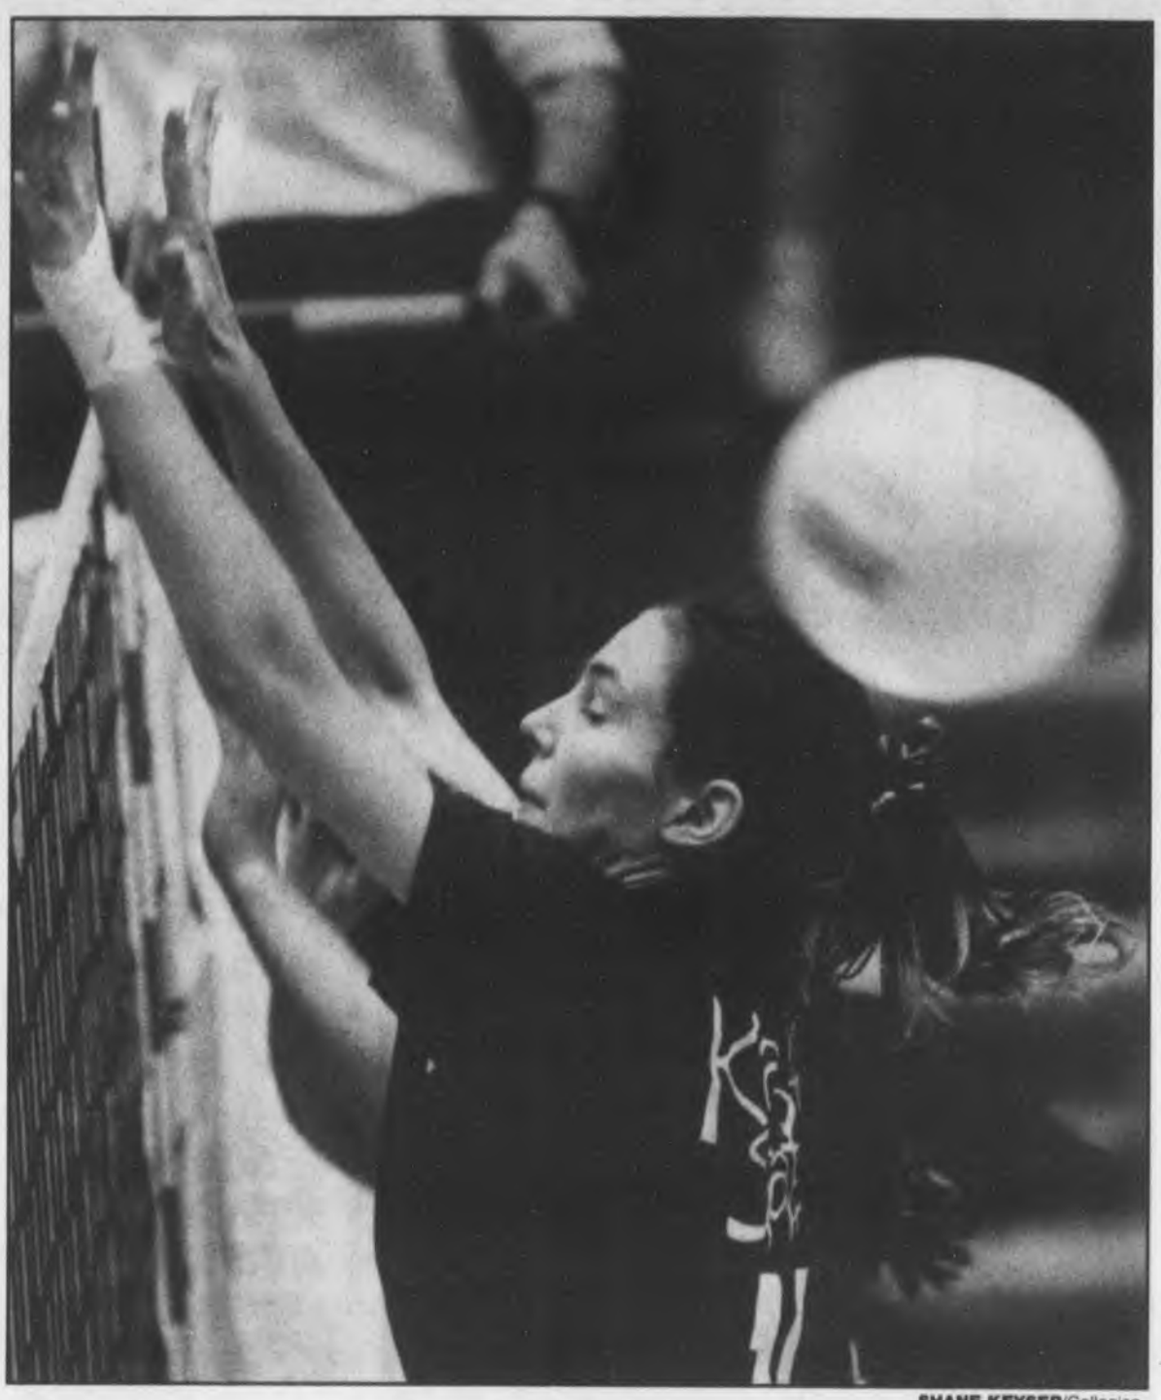
The Buffaloes never trailed in the match, but the Cats got close in the first game when they cut the Buffaloes' lead to 12-7 before falling 15-7.

Hagemeyer said the Cats could sustain a high level of play for only a few balls.

"We spent the rest of the time trying to get back to that level," Hagemeyer said. "To win, we will have to play tougher."

Young continued her hot streak with eight kills against the Buffaloes. In Young's past eight matches, she has averaged 14.4 kills per match.

Dugan and Hagge added four kills each to the Cats' effort. Setter Wendy Garrett also had 16 assists for K-State.



After losing the second game 15-2, Hagemeyer changed the line-up. The line-up took a while to work as the Buffaloes jumped out to a 4-0, but the Cats came back to narrow the score to 4-3. Then, Colorado went on runs of 5-0, 4-0 and 3-0 to win the game 15-7.

To win against a quality team like Colorado, Hagemeyer said K-State will need to improve its toughness.

"To get tough, it will take some practice," Hagemeyer said. "Winning will also help, but we don't need to make silly mistakes. We will be working at being tough and trying to conquer that."

K-State continues Big Eight play tonight against Nebraska in Ahearn Field House. Earlier this season, the Cornhuskers defeated the Cats 3-0 in Lincoln, Neb.

Nebraska leads the overall series 48-0 against K-State.

Colorado beat K-State 15-7, 15-2 and 15-7 to drop the Cats to a 7-14 record and 0-6 record in the conference. The Cats will compete against Nebraska today in Ahearn at 7:30 p.m. and will travel to Wichita for the Wichita State Invitational this weekend.

ROWING

K-State crew excells against Eastern squads

MELISSA E. HALL
Collegian

Tough competition at the Head of the Tennessee Regatta didn't stop the K-State rowing team last Saturday in Knoxville, Tenn., coach Alex Binkowski said.

The men's novice eight boat, which included Manhattan High School juniors, had an excellent finish, assistant coach Al Koch said.

"I'm blessed with a powerful group," he said. "Once we get the finesse and skill down, we will be unbeatable."

Koch said novice team members didn't feel they had rowed well until they saw the postings.

"They are learning not to dwell on mistakes they made in the boat and just row harder," he said.

"There are a lot of variables that determine a race, and the rowers just have to keep on pushing.

"We really couldn't have asked for better rowing conditions. The calmness of the water and a great view to watch the race made this a wonderful weekend."

Binkowski said this regatta will help the morale of the varsity team.

"We went to this regatta with very little water time," he said. "It was like competing without practice."

"Our practice time was reflective of how we performed," Lee Wilbur, a varsity rower, said.

"We haven't had a much water time, but we had good unity and really pulled together."

The novices weren't the only boats that did well, Binkowski said.

"I was very pleased with the level of intensity of the varsity men's and women's teams," Binkowski said.

The women's varsity four placed 15 out of 23, and the men's varsity four placed 10th out of 19.

"We were the only team west of the Mississippi, and we were excited to get a look at eastern teams we don't usually compete against," Binkowski said.

Binkowski said he was very surprised by the performance of the men and women in the mixed eight boat.

"The mixed eight is usually the last race and it is a lot of fun," he said.

"We had four novice men and four varsity women, and they got seventh place out of 19 teams."

Pulling together as a team is what made last weekend especially important, Binkowski said.

"It was fun to see the team gel," he said. "They really got to know their fellow members. After 18 hours of traveling in a van, you really get to know people."

The team stayed in the gym of the University of Tennessee, Binkowski said.

"We slept on the gym floor and took cold showers," he said. "It really was a lot of fun."

Winning coach of the Oklahoma/K-State game has chance to be Big 8 Coach of the Year

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — As Big Eight Conference teams slice into the meat of the season, an interesting race is shaping up for coach of the year honors.

After this past weekend's performances, K-State's Bill Snyder and Oklahoma's Gary Gibbs could be considered strong candidates.

There's still plenty of time for other candidates to develop, including Nebraska's Tom Osborne, whose Huskers are unbeaten and ranked No. 6 and suddenly in the driver's seat for the conference title.

K-State's 16-16 tie with Colorado last Saturday dropped the Buffs from No. 16 to No. 20 in the Associated Press poll. But it also elevated the Wildcats to No. 25, their first poll appearance since November 1970, when they made a brief visit at No. 20 in the 20-team list.

No. 14 Oklahoma, in the meantime, continued to muffle the critics of Gibbs with a 38-23 victory over Kansas. Nebraska, playing host to Missouri on a week the Tigers apparently were fated to be inept, rolled to an easy 49-7 triumph, Missouri's 14th straight road loss.

The only Big Eight game not involving at least one ranked team was probably the most dramatic. Kicker Ty Stewart broke out of his slump with a pair of third-quarter field goals, and coach Jim Walden gambled and won when Iowa State rallied for a 20-17 victory over Oklahoma State.

Walden ordered a screen pass on fourth down, and quarterback Bob Utter found running back James McMillion on a 6-yard touchdown play with 5:12 left. The Cyclones (2-5 overall, 1-2 Big Eight) had lost five straight.

Oklahoma State could still have tied, but kicker Lawson Vaughn missed a 39-yard field goal attempt with 25 seconds left. The Cowboys (3-4, 0-3) had been on the Iowa State 10, but quarterback Gary Porter lost 12 yards when he fell down while being rushed. With no timeouts left, Oklahoma State had to line up hurriedly for Vaughn, who missed from inside the 40 for the first time in two years.

I-back Calvin Jones ran for two touchdowns and caught one of quarterback Tommie Frazier's two touchdowns passes to lead the Cornhuskers.

One week after he was knocked unconscious in the game with Colorado, Oklahoma quarterback Cale Gundy threw for three touchdowns and ran for a fourth while helping Oklahoma take an insurmountable lead over Kansas.

Gundy, who didn't practice at full speed until Wednesday, completed his first six passes and wound up 19 of 26 for 324 yards.

Oklahoma (6-1, 2-1) blitzed Kansas with three second-quarter touchdowns on its way to a 31-7 halftime lead. The Jayhawks (3-5, 1-2) ran the ball impressively in the second half and got within 31-21, but weren't able to overcome the big deficit.

Wefald's head is art

CORI CORNELISON

K-State President Jon Wefald's head was the subject of a student's impromptu art display in the K-State Union Wednesday.

The idea of "The Jon Wefald of K-State, 1993-94" originated when Jasonomarr Johnson, sophomore in biology, saw a funny picture of Wefald in the Collegian. Johnson said he thought he could do something funny with it.

"These were made with the strictest intent to humor the student body and not to degrade or condescend on the University President Jon Wefald," the legal disclaimer attached to Johnson's artwork said.

Most of the photographs Johnson used were from the Collegian, he said. A few of the photographs of Wefald's head were attached to the bodies of Fred Phelps, Mickey Mouse, Beavis and Butt-Head, Willie the Wildcat and Michael Jordan.

Johnson said he is not mad at Wefald but that this was his way of having fun with the University.

Johnson began displaying his artwork in the K-State Union in front of the information counter on Wednesday.

He was asked to move the artwork to the free-speech zone between the Union and Seaton Hall later in the day.

"I got kind of pissed off when I couldn't put them in the Union," Johnson said. "I wanted to get it out today, and I obviously wasn't going to get what I wanted. The point is I just wanted people to see it."

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said he tried to offer some alternative places for Johnson to display his artwork. The artwork was not allowed in front of the information desk, he said, because of a Union policy requiring displayed materials to be sponsored by an student organization in a designated area.

"He did mention it had to do with some art he had been working on," Connaughton said.

"He mentioned he worked on it for a long time and it was 30 feet long."

Johnson said he first displayed his artwork in Putnam Hall and later decided to share his humor with the entire University.

Speaker to offer alternate views on health care

KRISTEN WELBORN
Collegian

Daniel Callahan, director and founder of the Hastings Institute, will speak at 10:30 a.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium as part of the Convocation Lecture Series.

The Hastings Institute studies ethical issues of biology and medicine.

Callahan received his doctorate from Harvard University and philosphizes on the American health-care system's progress in the field of medicine.

Callahan has said he believes U.S. health professionals give more support to diseases that kill people, rather than emphasizing those diseases that destroy a person's quality of life.

Diseases such as mental-health ailments and arthritis affect the productivity and quality of life for the people afflicted with these ailments, yet most emphasis is placed on fatal diseases, such as cancer and AIDS, a view Callahan challenges.

Callahan is the author of several books dealing with medical progress and health-care policies. His most recent book, "The Troubled Dream of Life," explores medical care and its relationship with human life.

He is expected to present alternative perspectives to the traditional views most Americans consider to be of importance. For instance, he has said he feels that after a certain age, life should no longer be prolonged by measures such as artificial life-support systems, organ transplants for the elderly and other such technological advances that prolong the natural human life span.

Callahan's lecture will address issues such as overextending the Hippocratic oath and when to rely on life support and when to discontinue it.

Thirty-seven million Americans face a health-care dilemma. Some are covered inadequately by insurance policies, while others have no form of insurance whatsoever.

Callahan will also address aspects of President Clinton's health-care reform package.

Dry winds propel fires in California

San Diego Zoo scorched; schools, freeways closed

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Fires fanned by fierce Santa Ana winds torched dozens of homes and thousands of acres throughout Southern California today, including one near the San Diego Zoo.

A 2,000-acre fire that began overnight burned near the San Diego Wild Animal Park in northeast San Diego County and burned one outbuilding, but the animals were safe. Only about 25 California condors were evacuated, authorities said.

At least seven large fires were reported burning from Ventura County to the Mexican border. No end was in sight as early-morning temperatures reached the 80s in some areas.

Hot, dry winds gusting to 60 mph turned brushfires into ember-scattering maelstroms that sent sheets of smoke hundreds of miles, stretching firefighters to the limit.

Traffic was chaotic, several freeways and schools were closed, and evacuation centers were set up.

A fire burning in the San Gabriel Mountain foothills prompted the evacuation of at least 100 homes in the Altadena area of Los Angeles County.

"Evacuate now," sheriff's deputies said by loudspeaker, but some residents kept hosing down roofs in an area where homes can cost $500,000.

Choking brown smoke covered the neighborhoods.

In Thousand Oaks, northwest of Los Angeles, an arson fire blackened 1,700 acres and destroyed two homes, authorities said.

Wind gusts reaching 55 mph fueled hot spots through the night, keeping about 600 firefighters on the defensive, said Mary Tucker, a representative for the Ventura County Fire Department. No injuries were reported.

"We left only with the clothes on our back," said Eleanor Rasnow, 65, who helped rush her 101-year-

VINYL: SPINNING FROM THE PAST

WILLIAM MCKEEN III
Collegian

Some call them spinning discs. Others call them running tracks. They have been around for almost half a century, and contrary to popular belief, they are still around.

They're vinyl records, something today's children might confuse with flimsy frisbees.

With the dawning of the compact disc in the early 1980s, people thought they were seeing a long, slow death of the vinyl LP.

Timothy McCoy, at Love Records in Kansas City, Mo., said record companies dropped the vinyl pressing of albums by 90 percent with the dawn of the 90s.

Most music-store chains have completely phased out vinyl, he said, forcing album afficionados to flock to speciality record stores.

The Music Exchange, also in Kansas City, is one of those stores.

"My store has had a steady vinyl market since 1979," Ron Rooks, owner of The Music Exchange, said.

People still stick to records for several reasons, Rooks said.

Some people have turned down CD technology after realizing it isn't all it is cracked up to be, he said. The idea a CD isn't capable of being scratched is a complete myth.

Money is another factor. People have decided, after spending hundreds of dollars on a record player, sound system and records, that they don't want to spend the money to upgrade to CDs, Rooks said.

Another group attracted to vinyl is the large audiophile market that believes the sound of vinyl is better than CD.

McCoy said some people feel the sound of a CD is broken, while the albums have a more linear sound.

Brian Harris, an employee at Vital Vinyl, described the sound as septic.

"Also, vinyl seems to push harder when you really want to crank it," Harris said.

However, sound is not the only reason people are attracted to vinyl.

"There is a certain ambience with vinyl, which you don't find with CDs," he said.

The album format is completely different from any other type of music format. Lyric sheets, liner notes and artwork make vinyl albums a popular item.

"People get a better visual impact from an album sleeve," Rooks said. "Record companies are putting out box set CDs solely to recreate the album format."

Collectibility of vinyl makes up another part of the sales, Rooks said. People who collect a certain band or artist will try to collect every facet of the artist's work.

"I've had people coming into the store looking for a certain album

Witness says Stephan knew about details

TOPEKA (AP) — When Attorney General Bob Stephan's perjury trial opens Jan. 11 in federal district court, Vern Miller will be a star witness.

Miller is expected to repeat testimony he gave in a previous federal trial that he negotiated — on behalf of Stephan — settlement of a sexual harassment lawsuit brought by Marcia Tomson Stingley against Stephan in 1982.

Miller said in a recent interview that Stephan knew all about the agreement.

Stephan denied during a 1988 trial that he knew the details of the settlement. That denial led to his indictment by a federal grand jury in January 1992 on a perjury charge.

Miller's testimony against Stephan has destroyed the two men's lifelong friendship, Miller said. They grew up together in Wichita and both became attorney general, Miller in 1971-75 and Stephan from 1979 until the present.

"I'm really sorry this happened," Miller said. "We were the best of friends. But Stephan knew what he was doing and made his own choices."

State budget recovery outlook is bleak

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite drastic budget cuts, state governments face a financial crunch rooted in a weak economic recovery that could plague governors for the rest of the decade, two associations said Wednesday.

States plan to limit budget increases to 4.6 percent for the 1994 fiscal year — little more than half the 8-percent annual increase of the 1980s, a survey of the 50 states, said.

States are reacting cautiously because of uneven growth since the end of the recession, Raymond Scheppach, executive director of the National Governors' Association, told a news conference.

Fewer states ran into midyear financial trouble in fiscal 1993 than in fiscal 1992.

Thirty-five states had to reduce their budgets because spending outstripped tax revenue in fiscal 1992.

The figure was 22 states for the just-ended fiscal year. Cuts in those states totaled $1.8 billion.

The governors and the National Association of State Budget Officers see continuing difficulties because of the burden of entitlement programs like Medicaid, for which state spending grew 14 percent in the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30.

Toykyo citizens mad about the trash

TOKYO (AP) — In what's probably the world's most orderly big city, a new rule is provoking something perilously close to open rebellion.

"I do not like this idea at all," Hideko Matsuda, Tokyo housewife, said. "Really" — she paused and glanced around — "really, not at all."

In polite Japan, those are fighting words.

The target of the anger is a requirement that residents put their household trash in transparent bags with name tags on them.

The new system, which was supposed to start earlier this month, is meant to encourage people to separate burnable and non-burnable garbage — which they're already supposed to be doing.

But the plan prompted such a storm of protest that city authorities are offering a three-month grace period on using the new bare-all bags, and they now say filling in the name labels is optional.

The controversy spotlights the scope of garbage problems in Tokyo, which generates about 3.5-million tons of trash a year. That's enough to fill the 55,000-seat Tokyo Dome a dozen times over.

Woody Allen cleared of abuse charges

NEW YORK (AP) — Allegations Woody Allen molested his adopted 8-year-old daughter were unfounded, said state authorities, who told Allen by letter they have concluded their investigation.

"No credible evidence was found that the child named in this report has been abused or maltreated," said an Oct. 7 letter to Allen signed by David Peters, director of state operations.

The 57-year-old director was accused by longtime companion Mia Farrow of sexually molesting their adoptive daughter during an August 1992 weekend visit to Farrow's house in Bridgewater, Conn.

Last year, the couple split after 12 years when Farrow learned Allen was having an affair with her oldest adoptive daughter, Soon-Yi Previn, 22.

Experts at Connecticut's Yale-New Haven Hospital concluded in March that the alleged abuse never happened. The New York inquiry began after Farrow took the child to a doctor there.

Immunity question delays Tailhook trial

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — The U.S. Court of Military Appeals granted a delay Wednesday in the opening of the first trial to result from the Tailhook scandal.

The military appeals court in Washington agreed to consider whether Lt. David Samples was given immunity.

Samples is accused of indecent assault on a drunken woman who was passed over the heads of a gauntlet of men at the 1991 convention of the military aviators group.

But Michael Kmetz, Samples' attorney, said his client was told by an investigator and two prosecutors that as long as he was truthful and honest, he would not be prosecuted.

Vest ruled that Samples was given immunity only for his testimony about the gauntlet, not for any actions he may have taken that prosecutors could prove using the testimony of others.

Kmetz said a ruling on the immunity issue could take a week.

Liz's former cook sues National Enquirer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A former cook for Elizabeth Taylor isn't taking the rap for making her fat.

Ladoris Jackson filed a libel lawsuit Tuesday against the National Enquirer over a story that said she was fired by Taylor's husband, Larry Fortensky, because she couldn't cook low-calorie food.

"There is information in publications that clearly documents the fact that Liz Taylor was gaining weight long before my client was hired," Jackson's lawyer, Kenneth Kazan, said.

The lawsuit seeks more than $1 million in damages and lost wages. Jackson was Taylor's cook for less than two months, ending in October 1992. She quit, Kazan said.

The Nov. 10, 1992, story said Jackson whipped up huge plates of fried chicken, mashed potatoes and gravy, calorie-rich lobster dishes and pork roasts followed by mouth-watering desserts.

Iain Calder, the president and editor in chief of the Enquirer, had no comment Wednesday.

Funds withheld by secretary

Social secretary withholds state money for facilities

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The Kansas attorney general may soon file suit against the Kansas Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services Secretary Donna Whiteman to release $800,000 in state funds for juvenile detention facilities, Mary Horsch, public information officer with the attorney general's office, said Wednesday.

The money being withheld comes from a fund established by the 1992 Kansas Legislature for the construction and operation of juvenile detention facilities.

Whiteman said in a prepared statement released earlier this month that the Legislature should decide what to do with the funds.

"This money accumulated because construction of three detention facilities did not get started," she said. "It is one-time money that was not anticipated by the Legislature. It should not be built into operating costs of these facilities."

Attorney General Bob Stephan sent letters to all the county commissioners to determine if there was support for legal action.

Horsch said Stephan's office had received written responses from 33 counties.

She said the consensus favors filing suit, but many hoped the situation could be worked out without legal action.

Riley and 11 other counties have almost completed construction on a regional detention facility in Junction City. About $50,000 of the withheld state funds would have gone to purchase equipment for the new facility.

Riley County Commissioner Jim Williams said the facility was scheduled to open in December.

He said the project would probably survive without the withheld funds.

"We don't want to be involved in any legal action, but we would support it," Williams said.

The facility was paid for through 90 percent state funds and 10 percent county funds. Riley County's share of the construction cost was $34,000.

The facility was built to comply with a federal law that does not allow juveniles to be housed with adult prisoners.

The facility will hold 12 juveniles at a time.

NEWS DIGEST

▶Space rats in good spirits, receiving humane care

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — First the human-health update from space: The seven Columbia astronauts are holding up all right despite long workdays, lots of shots and dizzying tests.

And now for the rat report: The 48 white rodents aboard the shuttle seem to have relaxed two-thirds of the way through the record two-week medical mission.

Veterinarian Martin Fettman said during a space-to-ground news conference Wednesday:

"We've tried to spend extra time holding them and playing with them so that they are more used to our handling. They seem to appreciate that a lot.

"They seem to have really relaxed and look forward to the interaction with the human beings on their flight."

Wednesday's experiments with 10 of the rats involved more blood draws and body measurements.

The 10 rodents were injected Tuesday with iron and either a hormone or saline solution as a control.

It takes the teachers defining exactly what students can reuse

When does turning in your own work become cheating?

A committee composed of students, faculty and the University Attorney has been formed to answer this question.

They are on the right track in determining if a student can turn in the same work for different classes.

A K-State student recently challenged the University to determine if a student is cheating when he or she submits the same paper to more than one instructor.

The committee is correct in saying sometimes this practice is dishonest to professors.

The option of calling this "cheating" should be available for those professors who think it is academically dishonest.

However, there are times when teachers should determine if it is acceptable for students to turn in already-graded work. The committee should be certain any changes in the policy allow for this flexibility.

Unfortunately, enforcement of this policy will be the main problem.

The burden of responsibility should not solely fall on the students' shoulders, but also on the teachers'.

If teachers deem this cheating, then they are responsible for informing students of their positions, by outlining them in their syllabi at the beginning of the semester.

Most students are not trying to be dishonest; there is simply a huge discrepancy between what they call cheating and what their teachers call cheating.

Allow teachers to make the final call, but make them responsible for notifying students of their policies.

This is the best plan for solving the difference between students' views and their professors'.

AND NOW FOR SOMETHING COMPLETELY DIFFERENT ...

Before I am besieged with hundreds of letters from angry women with thighs the size of California Redwood trees, let me say up front I have nothing but sympathy, and a healthy respect, for you unfortunate ladies with humongous thighs.

I know how serious this issue is with many of you, and let me assure you, I realize fat thighs are not a laughing matter. Especially when women knock you flat in a flying open-field tackle outside the K-State Union and mash you into tiny little pieces of smartass for writing a column about fat thighs.

No sir, my mother taught me to never play around with matches or joke about fat thighs.

So ladies, much to your (and my mother's) relief, this column is not going to poke fun at fat female thighs, but simply female fat in general. As some of you who regularly read this column may already know, I have written about fat before, but never in large quantities. Ha! That's just a little "fat humor" to get things rolling.

Actually, and in all honesty, I see very little female fat around my home. I say that for my wife's benefit because — and this is for all you men out there — it never hurts to occasionally babble like a TV evangelist and make totally insane statements in public on behalf of your mate. It will eventually pay off in ways that cannot be mentioned in a newspaper or a whipped-cream commercial.

A Brief History of Female Fat

Most of what is known about female fat can be found in my new book for men about women titled "Cellulite and Other Disgusting Substances: How to Insulate Your Home Dirt Cheap." (This is a companion book to my even newer book for women about men titled "Beer Bellies and Other Large Slugs Found in Nature.")

BRAD SEABOURN

As my book points out, very little was known about Female Fat prior to the turn of the century, largely because women generally wore thick, heavy dresses, which made it difficult for men to get a handle on the situation, if you get my drift.

However, it is widely believed that what was generally considered to be stylish fluff and frill in women's wear up to then was, in all probability, fat.

This prompted numerous scientific studies into the origin of Female Fat and resulted in the discovery that — surprise! — a woman's ENTIRE body (through no fault of her own) is structured toward the production of fat.

Just as a man's body is geared toward the storage of large quantities of beer and having sex with any unsuspecting object whose temperature is slightly above ambient, a woman's body is geared toward PMS headaches and storing fat in case of pregnancy or starvation.

We now know this to be an early evolutionary safeguard for women in the likely event that our primordial cave-husband forefathers got drunk and tried to mate with a tyrannosaurus, resulting in the loss of 20 percent of her food-gathering capability (and 100 percent of her unborn children's potential pool of "stupid" genes).

It is quite clear that, after millions of years of evolution, the female biological drive to produce fat has reached an intolerable level.

Any random viewing of the "Oprah Winfrey Show" will tell you that.

Fat production is so out of control that many women no longer need to eat to even produce fat.

In fact, it has been shown in numerous scientifically unverifiable studies that any woman within a five-mile radius of a Long-John's House of Deep-Fat Fried Fatty Chicken By-Products will gain 10 pounds simply by inhaling the fumes from the grill.

Fortunately, science has once again found the answer to another of life's most perplexing problems: the Female Fat Thigh Crisis.

Dr. Frank Greenway, a clinical professor at Harbor-UCLA Medical Center in Torrance, Calif., announced last week the development of a cream that — like magic! — appears to shrink women's thighs.

The cream is made from a drug commonly used as an asthma remedy (gee, why didn't I think of that?).

Greenway, in a presentation in Milwaukee at the annual meeting of the North American Association for the Study of Obesity, stated that although further research is necessary, a teaspoon of the cream a day for five weeks reduced women's thighs by one-half inch to 1-1/2 inches.

Well, that is just great for all the fat thigh sufferers, but what about the rest of us?

We should seriously be concerned about things like: Where did the fat go? And, what is it doing now?

I propose to have an answer to these and other important questions in my next column ... as soon as I can button my pants.

Success of Health Professional School Fair due to volunteers

Editor,

We want to thank publicly all the student volunteers who helped at the Health Professional School Fair in the K-State Union on Oct. 21.

You received lavish praise from many exhibitors who commented on your interest, courtesy and helpfulness.

This reflects well not only on you as individuals, but on K-State pre-health students and the K-State community in general.

We could not have pulled off such a wonderful event (33 exhibitors and more than 600 attendants) without you.

Special thanks go to Jennifer Abel and Erin Wingert, who scheduled, notified and supervised all student volunteers.

Also, special thanks to Wanda Grimm and Jason Rawlings, who spent many hours helping us to prepare for the fair.

Parents, students were at the game, but where was Willy?

Editor,

At last Saturday's football game against Colorado, students were shafted from their seats in the student section.

The parents can't necessarily be blamed for wanting to sit with their kids during the game, but general-admission seating is for students.

When people without these tickets sit there, they displace those who have proper tickets.

Therefore, many students were forced to move into the overflow (upper) bleachers, like in any ordinary game-day circumstance. Wrong. Only parents with assigned seats could, so hundreds — if not thousands — of students were left without seats.

The stadium security and management people need to get their act together on this issue.

Moreover, where the hell were Willie and the cheerleaders? I saw more of Colorado's mascot than Willie. A lot of parents brought their children, and Willie wasn't even present in the crowds for them.

The cheerleaders stayed in the same position for the longest time and didn't even use their usual sign props to get the crowd motivated — especially in the crucial fourth quarter.

Furthermore, the scoreboard was more concerned about corporate sponsors than getting the crowd involved with inspirational phrases.

The only people who got the crowd roaring were the team members waving the fans on and their successful "big plays — good going, guys."

And of course, Coach Bill Snyder's daring decision in the fourth quarter on the fourth down to "go for it." Heck, the referees got the crowd more into it with their bad calls!

As students, we did our part. Now if only the stadium heads and cheerleaders would do their part, it perhaps would boost the players up, as well as the students.

Beagles, quails & an afternoon walk

And what is truth?
–Pontius Pilate to Jesus Christ.

It is Sunday, and I am walking through my father-in-law's dying field with two beagles.

The sky is cloudy, but the north wind I had expected is not here. It is cold, and I have my hands in my pockets. Though it is not a season in which to hunt, I carry a shotgun in the crook of my arm with every intent to kill.

The beagles are a male and a female. The male is my old dog, Lloyd, who is neutered and staying here at the in-laws' until we find an apartment in which we can have pets. The female is a year-old pup named Dixie who has just gone through heat. She is showing signs of pregnancy. She is developing mammaries. She is gaining weight in the middle.

It is a false pregnancy, in all likelihood, because Lloyd is shooting blanks.

And so we are walking through this field, followed by a herd of my in-laws' cats. I am calling the dogs to me, and when they come, I pat their bellies and say, "Find the birds, find the birds."

I think this is futile because these dogs could find a rotten potato peel in the bottom of a closed garbage sack; I have never trained these beagles to find game.

But as I tell them to find the birds, find the birds, the beagles run off sniffing the moist ground under the yellowing grass standing mid-thigh to me.

I am here because we do not have a dryer at our house, I guess, so we have come to the in-laws' house to dry our clothes. My wife is inside. I decided to go for a walk on her old farm. She wanted to come with me. I said no.

Instead, I am out here to get away. To think.

I recently became a user. Logged onto a network. My electronic mail address is "defrese" to which I receive messages and memos and letters that have no stamps.

In this network, I can access a library in Africa, a news service from Great Britain, a game in the southern United States.

When the man showed me how to use this new system, new to me anyway, my mouth dropped and then grinned. I was now closer to everyone. Everyone with a computer, anyway.

Earlier in the week, I read of the child who died from her brother's cartoon watching. At least, that is what the dead girl's parents claimed.

The fire started because the cartoon guy did it, too. A fantasy became reality that became something with which news anchors would entertain and viewers would be entertained. Full circle.

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

Soon, they say, I will be able to pick any movie I wish to watch on my TV without spending half an hour in a smoky video store arguing with my wife over what we want to watch.

Soon, they say, I will be able to make a phone call to my sweet momma and see her through the TV as she talks to me of a sister's volleyball game or a brother's shipping out to Italy.

Soon, they say, I will be able to choose the day's news that I want to hear and/or read about from my TV and not have to sit through Dan and Connie's faked pleasantries.

Soon, I will not have to go outside.

So, I am not sure anymore. I am not sure what is real. I am not sure what is unreal.

There is a whole new world out there, wild and ready to be accessed by a phone line and a computer.

There is a whole world out there goading our children into burning homes and siblings.

And I am walking in the old world, stepping through the weeds, following beagles, looking for birds, waiting for a north wind.

The beagles are still sniffing, and I am ready to go back in the house to be near my wife, and I turn back.

Then, there is the sound of motors behind me. Fluttering, buzzing, winged motors, and again I turn.

There are 20 quail there. They are 10 feet from me. The dogs are alternately watching them fly away and watching me. The machine is in my hand. The beagles are before me. The gun. The beagles. The birds. But I do not shoot.

I do not shoot.

Cosmos' origin discussed

Lecturer says photons hold keys to universal secrets

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

The Physics Club Lecture Series opened with Bill Reay, professor of physics, as its first speaker.

"We have had few speakers in the past," John Giese, physics club faculty adviser, said. "This is the first time we have had an official title for the lectures."

Reay said he wasn't there to give a lecture but to have a discussion with the audience.

"I'm looking for some audience participation," he said.

Reay used transparencies to help the audience follow the lecture topic, "The Smallest Things, the Biggest Thing, and the Beginning of Time."

"I picked this subject because it is something that drives me," Reay said.

At the start of the lecture, Reay said the smallest unit of matter was the quark and the largest object was the universe itself.

"A quark is so small it can only be seen or identified by colliding it with another quark," Reay said.

The discussion moved on to light and the size of the universe.

Reay said the more distance between the viewer and the light source, the further back in history.

"If you see light from a source four light years away, you are seeing what happened four years ago," he said.

The lecture moved to the origin of the universe when Reay asked "What is the Big-Bang Theory?"

Reay said in the earliest times of the universe everything was very hot, and the hotter it was, the more active the particles were. This makes the physicist's job more difficult.

"Everything occurred in the first 30,000 years of the universe," he said. "Now, roughly 20 billion years later, we have to look back and try to figure out what went on at that time."

Study has led to many important discoveries, including isolating the number of photons that exist in the universe.

"To me that is on of the monumental discoveries of the 20th century," Reay said. "The number of photons is the same in any direction you would look, about 300 per cubic centimeter."

The uniform distribution of photons occurs through communication between everything in the universe. Reay said the communication occurred at the start of the universe, when everything was closer together.

"At that point everything expanded faster than the speed of light," Reay said. "It may not appear possible, but it happened."

Suspected Nazi's portait removed

Doctor's likeness was included in school's mural

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBUS, Ohio — The likeness of a suspected Nazi doctor is being removed from a mural of medical heroes at Ohio State University, but the Air Force said Tuesday it won't be renaming a library in Texas dedicated to him.

The etching of Col. Hubertus Strughold, part of a mural at the university's medical college, was covered Monday after officials received a letter from the World Jewish Congress asking that it be removed.

Strughold headed the German Air Force's Institute of Aviation Medicine during World War II.

The Jewish group cited testimony from the Nuremberg war-crimes tribunal at which a Nazi doctor said Strughold was aware of experiments on concentration camp inmates during World War II and could have stopped them at any time because he headed the institute that conducted them.

The German Air Force was known to have used prisoners from the Dachau concentration camp for experiments that included immersing inmates in ice water for long periods, placing them in air pressure chambers and forcing them to drink sea water, the group said.

University officials met Tuesday and decided Strughold's portrait should be removed, said Dr. Ronald St. Pierre, an associate dean of the medical college.

"What we found is that the information would strongly indicate that the likeness of Dr. Strughold is not one we would like to have displayed in this mural," St. Pierre said.

Strughold's stepdaughter, Laura F. Olle of Leming, Texas, said allegations that her stepfather had a Nazi past dogged him until his death in 1986.

"He's always denied it," she said. "I wish they would just let it rest. I wish they would let Dr. Strughold rest in peace."

The Jewish group released a page from Army Intelligence's 1945 Central Registry of War Criminals and Security Suspects listing Strughold as one of those being sought. The group said Army Intelligence hunted him down, but then recruited him for the nation's fledgling space program rather than hand him over for war crimes prosecution.

Strughold became a U.S. citizen and moved to San Antonio, Texas,

Free cabs may get trial run

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

K-State students may be able to get a free cab ride home if plans for a six-week pilot program are followed through.

The plan is designed for students who have been drinking or feel unsafe walking home.

"What I'd like to do is set up a program similar to KU and Emporia State," Rob Thompson, education senator, said.

The University of Kansas program, titled Safe Ride, picks students up in a shuttle from 11 p.m. to 3 a.m., seven days a week from anywhere in Lawrence.

Emporia State recently implemented a cab system to pick up students at bars close to campus on weekends.

"I feel the University has an obligation to protect the students to the best of its ability," said Rebecca Doering, senator with ESU's associated student government. "And this is one very good way we can to that."

Emporia State's program, named Corky's Cab for the school's mascot, pays a cab company hourly to pick students up from drinking establishments and take them home on the days of home games, mid-term weekends and finals weekends.

K-State's program will use a cab company, Thompson said. If K-State uses an hourly fee, the cabs would be available for a reduced period of time.

Thompson said he hopes a flat rate can be established so the program can run seven nights a week.

Thompson said he doesn't know the total cost of the program at this time, but some private groups have shown interests in supporting this program.

"I talked to a representative from Coors in Golden, Colo.," he said. "He said it would be likely that if we have a good plan, Coors would be interested in helping sponsoring us."

Thompson said he also plans to talk to other alcohol distributors about supporting the care cab.

Four weeks into the pilot program, Thompson said Student Senate would probably evaluate the program and decide what to do on a permanent basis.

The Corky's Cab was used for the first time at Emporia State last weekend, Doering said, and was successful.

Doering said 25 students used the service.

"It's my opinion the program will start slow and become institutionalized," she said.

The service is provided free of charge to Emporia students. The program is expected to cost $1,000 per semester, $750 of which comes from student fees. The rest is funded by private donations. ,

"The first weekend went really smooth," Doering said. "The biggest problem was publicity."

Hagemeyer impressed with defense despite loss

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Despite the fact the K-State volleyball team lost 3-0 to the Nebraska Cornhuskers Wednesday night in Ahearn Field House, Coach Patti Hagemeyer said she was impressed with her team's floor defense.

"We probably played the best floor defense that we have all season," Hagemeyer said. "It just wasn't on the first balls, but on the second and third hits."

The loss to the Huskers dropped the Wildcats record to 7-15 on the season. It was also the Cat's seventh-straight loss in the Big Eight Conference, and the sixth-straight loss in row.

Last night's loss also marked the 48th-straight match the Cats have dropped to the Huskers. The last time the Cats won a game against Nebraska was in 1987.

"We played more mature tonight than we have lately," Hagemeyer said. "The players are going to learn that they can't just play hard on Wednesday and Saturday and that they will also have to play hard in practice."

Down 2-0, the Cats jumped out in game three to a 4-0 lead. Then the Huskers mounted a comeback to tie the game at 6-6. From that point on the Huskers dominated the rest of the game to win 15-7, and claim the match 3-0.

Outside hitter Stephanie Liester said the start in the third game gave the Cats some confidence that they can play against the tougher teams in the Big Eight.

"When we were playing well in the third game things just seemed to click for us," Liester said. "Then when we got behind, the confidence level wasn't there."

Liester and outside hitter Yolanda Young led K-State with seven kills each. Middle blocker Jill Dugan contributed six kills, and outside hitter Suzanne Hagge added four kills.

Hagemeyer said Liester played really well after coming off the bench in the second game.

"Stephanie started out really slow," Hagemeyer said. "But once she got her confidence back, she started to get it together and perform at a high level."

In the past five games before tonight, Liester's playing time had been reduced because Hagemeyer installed a new line-up. The revised line-up put Hagge and Young in the outside hitter positions.

"It felt good to get back in the line-up tonight," Liester said. "It was difficult for me to sit, but it taught me a lot about team work."

In the first game the Huskers used a 7-0 run to take a 14-2 lead, before the Cats managed a 3-0 run to cut the margin to 14-5. The Huskers then regained control of the serve and won the match 15-5.

"Nebraska has had a lot of people shooting for them this year," Hagemeyer said. "You can expect that when they have been as successful as they have been in the past. They still are a strong team that will do well in the rest of the Big Eight season."

The Cats will travel to Wichita this weekend to play in the Wichita State Invitational. They will open the round-robin tournament against Sherbrooke, then play Wichita State and Arkansas State.

"The best thing to get us back on track is this tournament," Liester said. "It will give us a chance to get some wins and play some non-conference opponents. We shouldn't have lost to Wichita State earlier this season, and that will be in our minds against them."

Mendez among final 8 players for DB award

COLLEGIAN STAFF

K-State senior free safety Jaime Mendez has been named one of eight semifinalists for the 1993 Jim Thorpe Award, which annually honors the nation's top defensive back.

Mendez joins Colorado's Chris Hudson, Notre Dame's Bobby Taylor, Texas A&M's Aaron Glenn, Florida State's Corey Sawyer, Alabama's Antonio Langham, UCLA's Marvin Goodwin and Miami's Dexter Seigler as semifinalists.

Mendez leads the Wildcats in tackles with 91 stops, including 54 unassisted tackles. He also has one interception and is among the Big Eight Conference leaders with five passes broken up. Mendez is K-State's career interception leader and ranks ninth in Big Eight history with 14 career interceptions.

K-State's secondary ranks second in the Big Eight and 18th nationally in pass-efficiency defense. The Cats also rank second in the league in fewest passing yards allowed (1,153) and fewest passing touchdowns allowed (5).

Mendez was a first-team, preseason all-American by Athlon's, Street & Smith's and the Football News, and is on track to earn first-team all-Big Eight honors this season for the third-straight year.

Altman anxious for basketball season tipoff

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The countdown for the start of the K-State men's basketball season began Wednesday when Coach Dana Altman and his 1993-94 team welcomed local media for a preseason press conference.

Altman, who is starting his fourth season as the Wildcat coach, said he is ready for the upcoming year.

"I'm anxious for the season to get started," Altman said. "We've got several seniors who will provide leadership and play pivotal roles for us. On paper, it looks like we're tougher and stronger."

Altman has three starters returning — including five of the top seven players — from last year's squad, which yielded a 19-11 record, made the Big Eight Conference tournament championship game and returned to the NCAA tournament for the first time since the 1989-90 season.

One of those starters is point guard Anthony Beane. Beane, who was named the Big Eight Newcomer of the Year last season, averaged 10.1 points a game and hit the game-winning or game-tying shots in six games last season.

Beane said he expects he won't have to make those game-winning shots this year.

"I don't see it coming down to one shot anymore," Beane said. "As long as we work hard, we'll be as good as last year or better."

Another starter is guard/forward Askia Jones, who is back after having four screws taken out of his left ankle this summer. There are still two screws left in the ankle he broke at the 1990 U.S. Olympic Festival.

Jones said the ankle is tender, but he will be ready for the season.

"It's still sore," said Jones, who ranks 11th on the K-State career scoring charts with 1,105 points. "I get it treated two to three times a day to try to get rid of the pain. I've been running straight-away and going full tilt."

Jones said he worked frequently in the weight room while spending this past summer with the Miami Heat professional basketball team.

"I have been lifting weights to get back into shape, especially my left ankle," he said.

"I'm ready to go. This is my last go-around."

The final starter who returns is forward Deryl Cunningham. Altman said he hopes Cunningham will keep getting better.

"If Deryl made the same amount of improvement from last season to this season, that would be great," Altman said of Cunningham, who averaged 9.3 points and 8.3 rebounds a game last year.

"He has made great strides. He works hard on getting to the boards. I hope he would better his free-throw percentage and make the easy shots near the basket."

BRITTON HARPER/Collegian

Altman said he has three questions his team needs to answer.

"First, we need to replace Aaron Collier on the front line," he said. "We need someone to replace the number of his points and rebounds."

Altman said the front-runners would be forward Stanley Hamilton and centers George Hill and Hamilton Strickland.

"The second question mark is to find a defensive stopper to replace Vincent Jackson," Altman said. "Usually, we would put Vince on the opposing team's leading scorer, and Vince would hold him in check."

Altman said the leading candidates to fill the void by the loss of Jackson would be Belvis Nolan, Demond Davis, Brian Henson and Jones.

"Finally, we need a back-up for Beane," Altman said. "We played him in nearly every minute of every game."

Guard Brian Gavin and Henson would compete for that spot, Altman said.

"I would like to see Beane play at least 32 minutes a game," he said. "I would like to keep him healthy at the end of the season."

Chiefs' Davis twists knee in practice

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Quarterback Joe Montana went through a full practice without a problem Wednesday, but his favorite target didn't.

Wide receiver Willie Davis, who leads Kansas City with 21 catches for 381 yards, twisted his left knee. His status for Sunday's game at Miami was not immediately known.

"We hadn't started the team work. He was just running a route and twisted his knee," Coach Marty Schottenheimer said. "That's really all I know now."

Montana, recovering from a pulled hamstring, practiced for the first time since the Chiefs' 17-14 victory against San Diego on Oct. 17.

Defensive back Charles Mincy also turned an ankle Wednesday. Mincy returned to practice but was told to go inside.

If Mincy is slowed, it could be a problem for the secondary because safety David Whitmore is out with a knee injury.

Also back in practice after the week's layoff was tackle John Alt and kick-return specialist Ron Dickerson.

An exasperated Schottenheimer drew the players together at the halfway point in practice and told them he was not happy.

"We finished up quite well," Schottenheimer said. "But we were not real good early on in. There was a lot of activity, but I wasn't sure how much productivity we had. It wasn't the level of concentration in the first half we feel is necessary."

He made that clear to the players, who hope to avoid becoming Dolphin coach Don Shula's 324th victim. That would tie George Halas' record for coaching victories.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶SMITH LEAVES SHOCKERS

WICHITA (AP) — Junior center John Smith withdrew from Wichita State University on Wednesday after officials told him he would never play there again because he faces charges in the beating of his girlfriend.

Smith was suspended from the team Friday after his arrest early Thursday. He faces three misdemeanor charges for allegedly attacking his girlfriend.

It was the third time Smith, one of the most sought-after recruits in the school's history, had been arrested since he arrived in Wichita in the summer of 1991.

He started 49 of 50 games while at Wichita State, averaging 11.6 points and 6.5 rebounds a game. He led Wichita State in scoring and rebounding his first two seasons, becoming the first freshman to do so in 13 years.

Smith's departure leaves the Shockers with just nine scholarship players, including only one starter from last year and just two others with Division-I experience. Sophomore guard Chad Elstun is out with a broken foot.

▶THOMAS: $29-MILLION MAN

NEW YORK (AP) — While eight more players filed for free agency Wednesday, baseball executives were more interested in the $29 million, four-year contract extension that elevated Frank Thomas to No. 2 on the salary list.

Thomas, who has played just 3 1/2 seasons in the major leagues, will average $7.25 million a year from 1995 through 1998, according to terms that became available Wednesday. The two option years make him the first baseball player to agree to a salary for the year 2000.

Thomas, 25, made a $900,000 base salary this season and is signed for 1994 at $2.5 million. The new contract, announced Tuesday, calls for yearly salaries of $7.15 million from 1995 through 1998, gives the White Sox a $7.15 million option for 1999 with a $150,000 buyout and a $7.25 million option for 2000 with a $250,000 buyout.

On the free agent front, outfielders Luis Polonia and Ellis Burks and second baseman Julio Franco headed the group who filed. Thirty-six have become free agents this week, and approximately 76 more are potentially eligible to file by the Nov. 7 deadline.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1993 A COLLEGIAN SPECIAL SECTION ABOUT K-STATE FACULTY AND STAF KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

People & Projects

A K-State national-award winner will return from Dallas on Sunday having the new title of Distinguished Newspaper Adviser for 1993.

Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications Inc., was nominated for the award for his outstanding service to student media and will receive it this weekend at the Fall National College Media Convention.

Johnson competed against advisers from four-year universities across the country. His distinguished advising ability and his five years of service at K-State gave him the eligibility to become the recipient of this honor.

"Ron's contribution to the College Media Advisers and his Collegian track record make him most deserving of the award," Linda Puntney, assistant director of student publications, said. "He is very worthy of being recognized."

Johnson was selected by an awards committee consisting of people from the National College Media Advisers and the Associated Collegiate Press.

"There are a lot of people I know and respect in this business," Johnson said. "It's pretty amazing company to be distinguished with."

Looking back on his challenges through his nine-year advising span, he said advising gets in your blood, and he wouldn't think of giving it up.

This weekend's national convention also will recognize Johnson as the 1993-94 new president of the College Media Advisers.

RESEARCH

Study finds way to combat stress while off the job

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

Unemployment can cause more than just economic hardship. It can have emotional ramifications as well.

Connie Wanberg, assistant professor of psychology, said although some people view unemployment as a positive step to finding a better job, many experience physical and mental strain.

"They get depressed because they wake up in the morning, and what is there to do?" Wanberg said.

Wanberg's recent research explored how people adjust to unemployment. She found that predicting how a person will deal with unemployment is based on confidence and how well the person structures his or her time.

"They must have a positive outlook," Wanberg said. "Studying job-seeking behavior is very difficult, but if a person thinks there are jobs out there, they are going to get a job."

At K-State's Career and Employment Services, having a good self-image is also suggested.

Deanna Fuller, employer relations specialist, said job seekers must learn how to market themselves.

While a person is looking for the next job, staying busy is very important.

"Keep busy and set goals for each day," Wanberg said. "Go through a list and get those things done, whether it's something as simple as doing the laundry."

She also said it is crucial for people to keep in contact with friends as well as prospective employers.

Wanberg said unemployed people are sometimes alienated by society, especially when the economy is doing well. However, when unemployment rates are up, people tend to be more understanding.

Not all communities are apathetic toward those without jobs.

"They try their hardest," she said. "In Wichita, there is a tremendous community effort to help the unemployed."

Government agencies, churches and even the companies that laid off workers can provide support groups. Wanberg said public libraries are a good place to find help with job-seeking techniques, such as resume writing.

Fuller also said correct job-seeking techniques are crucial in any job search.

"I suggest they have a good resume to go with," Fuller said. "Don't leave any stone unturned. Do a good job search in finding what is out there."

Although Career and Employment Services deals mainly with first-time job seekers, some experience is essential.

"It's very important to have work experience in your field if you want to be considered, unless it's a very specialized field," Fuller said.

Air Force Col. Byrns, is the new head of Air Force ROTC Detachment 270 and the head of aerospace studies at K-State. Byrns was shot down while flying as a combat pilot in the Vietnam War. He was held captive by the North Vietnamese for more than 10 months.

Head of aerospace studies says hope kept him going in Vietnam

Air Force Colonel and other prisoners of war used spirituality as a means of coping while being physically and emotionally abused during their capture in Vietnam

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

Think of the late 1960s and the early '70s.

Images of flower children, Woodstock, protests and the Vietnam War are likely to come to mind.

During this time, some youths across the country were involved in anti-war activism, and others were in the heart of the war itself.

Col. William Byrns, new commander of Air Force ROTC Detachment 270 and head of aerospace studies, was one of those who served in the Vietnam War.

Byrns' involvement with the armed forces began early.

"I grew up as a military brat," Byrns said. "My father was in the Air Force."

Becoming a pilot was one of his earliest childhood dreams, his wife, Joanne Byrns, said.

"Bill wanted to be a pilot since he was 6-years-old," she said.

Before his dream became reality, Byrns attended William Jewell College in Liberty, Mo. He received his bachelor's degree in sociology in 1967.

Shortly after graduation, he married Joanne Garrison. Within months, Byrns began active service at the Officers Training School at Lackland Air Force Base in Texas.

Combat in Vietnam was escalating, and Byrns knew that he could be shipped out at any time.

In October 1969, he was assigned to his first tour with the 469th Tactical Fighter Squadron, 388th Tactical Fighter Wing in Thailand.

The Byrns' first child was born shortly before he left, and the split was difficult, Joanne Byrns said.

"I wasn't used to the military lifestyle," she said. "I couldn't believe that the government could take a young couple apart. Our first child was only seven weeks old.

"I worried a lot. I watched the news constantly to hear whatever I could. It was a depressing time, having a child to raise on my own and knowing that Bill could be MIA or KIA anytime."

This tour lasted about a year before he was sent home for further training at George Air Force Base in California. He left on his second tour six months later.

Seven months into that tour, Byrns was preparing to come home when, on a fast-forward air control mission in North Vietnam, his plane was shot down.

"I wasn't expecting to get shot down," Col. Byrns said. "I was packed and ready to go back home.

"It was right at dusk. They couldn't rescue me because of all the anti-aircraft artillery. I didn't know if my backseater was alive. I was really scared. I'd become an infantryman on the ground, and I was not used to that."

Within four to five hours, he was captured.

"They beat the living tar out of me initially with a club," he said. "They stripped me of my travel suit. At certain times, I was tied up and at other times blindfolded."

Byrns said he learned the next day that his co-pilot had survived.

During the night, the prisoners were forced to travel, and they were kept in bunks during the day until they reached the prison camp where Americans and other war prisoners were being held.

"They could beat you up to a point, and you'd tell them what they wanted to know, but no matter what they did, you'd come right back."

KEVIN MERTHA
PROFESSOR OF GEOLGY

"There were guys that had thought they were pretty macho," Col. Byrns said. "When the chips were down, and we were taken to the end of our physical and mental ropes, it was the spiritual rope that kept us going. We depended on God for strength."

Byrns said a strong sense of faith helped keep many of the prisoners alive.

"They could beat you to a point, and you'd tell them whatever they wanted to know, but no matter what they did, you'd come right back.

"Americans bounced back, and a lot of the others didn't. They respected that. They asked us why we prayed, and we were able to tell them."

Back in the United States, Joanne waited and prayed. For 30 days, her husband was declared missing in action before officials in Hanoi released the names of POWs.

"I was learning to trust God," Joanne Byrns said. "I asked him to take control. It was the biggest test in my life. I knew in my heart that Bill was alive and would come back."

The Bible became one of the most important parts of Col. Byrns' life.

"They eventually gave us a Bible," he said. "When you don't have anything in a 12-by-12 room except a bucket for the bathroom and a rice mat, getting something to read really meant a lot."

The North Vietnamese videotaped the prisoners to get propaganda out and show they were alive.

"They put us on parade and released our names as POWs," he said.

"They tried getting us to smile for the camera like everything was all right when they had guns pointed at our heads. Of course, you wouldn't see them (the guns) in the pictures. But if we could get our faces out, families would know we were alive."

In the prison camp, Byrns said he had a lot of time to think, especially about what he had been sent to defend.

"I'd taken an oath to defend the Constitution, but I had never read it. I didn't know what I was fighting for. Once I'd had all those freedoms taken away, I wanted to know just what freedoms I'd had."

After 10 months, five days, 12 hours and 26 minutes, Byrns was released from captivity.

Joanne Byrns remembers the joy of learning about his release.

"It makes my heart flutter to even think about it," she said. "One of the most exciting memories I have is when I received a phone call. Someone told me 'Mrs. Byrns, we have someone special here that wants to talk to you.' Then I heard Bill's voice. He said, 'Hi, Jo,' and I could only cry.

"I couldn't talk for about five minutes. It took a little to realize the impact."

On his way home, a stop in the Philippines gave Col. Byrns one of his first sights of freedom.

"In the Philippines, seeing all the folks cheering us, it was hard to take. When we sang 'God Bless America,' it wasn't to a flag or the country — it was to the people. It felt like a great weight was taken off my back, a real physical feeling of freedom."

On the wall of the room where he was held, a fellow prisoner had described that feeling of freedom, Byrns said.

"Freedom has a taste for those who have fought and almost died for it, that the protected will never know."

Historian donates funds for research

DANI JOHNSTON
Collegian

Donations to the K-State Department of History will provide assistance to faculty members and their research.

Kenneth S. Davis, a K-State graduate, has created the Davis History Endowment to benefit faculty members in the history department.

Davis graduated in 1934 with an agricultural journalism degree. He earned his master's degree from the University of Wisconsin in 1935 and returned to Manhattan. He taught history at K-State in the spring of 1975.

"He had a good working relationship with the department and the individuals in the department," Donald Mrozek, professor of history, said.

"He's very successful and an able historian who has taught here. He really has made his livelihood by writing for the general public," he said.

Davis has written about Dwight Eisenhower and Charles Lindbergh and four volumes on Franklin D. Roosevelt, Mrozek said.

"He's written mostly of U.S. history, but has also written novels. He is a journalist and a historian.

"One of the awards he won was the Francis Parkin Prize from the Society of American Historians, a group of professional historians concerned with presenting works applied to the average, intelligent person," Mrozek said.

Mrozek said he thinks Davis wants to see history taught in classrooms in a way that is comprehensible.

"Ken is very concerned with the quality of teaching history," he said.

Mrozek said Davis recognizes the importance of providing supplementary funds for faculty members.

"We are 20 to 25 percent under the average salary compared to our peers," he said. "Faculty members pay for activities and seminars on their own, and the fund will reimburse them."

"This is the first fund that deals with our needs. It will provide support and assistance to faculty who are performing well. Several department members have won teaching and research awards," Mrozek said.

Al Hamscher, professor of history, said historians usually get their principal research money from sources other than those on campus.

"I have always gotten money for my research off campus," he said.

Hamscher said the Davis fund will go toward salary supplements for faculty, for general departmental expenses and will also assist faculty in research expenses.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

■ Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Dear K-State,

I would like to formally apologize for my Oct. 26 column from P.O.'d and Poor. In that letter, P.O.'d expressed frustration with the K-State Financial Aid Office and asked my advice on which violent option should be chosen to resolve the situation.

While my reply did not advocate violence in any way, I feel in retrospect that the letter was inappropriate for printing.

I apologize to the Director of Financial Aid, Larry Moeder, and to his family and to all those that are affiliated with K-State Financial Aid. I apologize for my lack of foresight at the possible effects of such a letter.

Sincerely,
Cassandra Duveaux

Dear Cassandra,

Have I missed something? Was everyone else pulled aside sometime earlier in life and given instructions in human relations or simple communication?

Why do I make such an idiot out of myself when I'm around people? Whether it's a face-to-face or group situation and no matter how well I know the person/people, I clutch. If I don't draw a total blank, I'm never quite sure how to phrase whatever it is I want to say.

Usually, I wind up mumbling, having to repeat, feeling stupid and blowing it off with some sarcastic remark.

I keep pushing myself into social situations, hoping that practice really does make perfect, but this is getting pretty frustrating. How do I initiate a conversation or keep one going? That business about asking people about themselves doesn't work because most either feel interrogated or rude focusing on themselves.

Signed,
Tongue tied and tied to the tongue,

Dear Tongue tied,

Ree-lax.Once you get the hang of it, relating with folks isn't too hard. Don't be worried or feel inadequate. And don't put pressure on yourself to be the social butterfly. Just start out gradually and be natural.

Talk about the weather. Talk about the Wildcats. Talk about you for once.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Try something new and refreshing. Kick that person by you who always talks during class.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Redecorate your apartment in new and entertaining colors ... like puce, dark magenta and cyan.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Listen to Beavis and Butt-Head. They know what they are talkin' about.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Go fishing in a cement pond.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Learn to jump rope with the telephone cord. You could use more exercise.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Teach your pet fish how to bring in the newspaper. Advertising this feat will bring in tourists from all over.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Call the landlord and give them a list of everything that is wrong with your place. To get something done, call daily.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Jump down. Turn around. Pick a bale of cotton.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be an old dog and learn a new trick.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Answer the phone at least once today saying "Hello, I'm from Mars. Is there something I can shoot with a ray gun for you?"

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Ask a K-State administrator for his nifty K-State lapel pin. You'll be amazed by his response.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Turn to the dark side.

Chainsaw Kittens to play DowBows

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

Manhattan's music scene will receive a taste of Oklahoma grunge tonight, as Norman's Chainsaw Kittens take the stage at DowBows.

The Chainsaw Kittens have released three records on the North Carolina based, independent label, Mammoth Records. The latest release is "Angels on the Rage." The new EP has transformed the band from an innovative alternative act into a more mainstream pop-grunge offering.

Head Kitten Tyson Meade said he gets his lyrical concepts from atypical sources.

"I get my ideas from bad television, like talk shows or whatever is the worst thing on."

Musically, influences have in the past been noted punk bands like the Buzzcocks and the New York Dolls, but with the newest record a more Nirvana-type sound seems to prevail.

Live, the Kittens have a typical hardcore reputation, with singer Tyson being known for wearing dresses on stage.

"I have no problems wearing a suit or dress on stage." Meade said. "I figured at least you've got their attention and maybe they'll have the insight to dig deeper."

Manhattan's Sufferbus will open the show. The three-piece band that has grown from the ashes of the defunct Moving Van Goghs has played several shows in the region and is gaining a loyal audience.

REVIEW

Don't call it a comeback.

Although the Chainsaw Kittens have had success on previous albums ("Violent Religion," "Flipped Out In Singapore"), the band's release, "Angel on the Rage," fails to hit the mark.

Although the band has had success with its eccentric, wild, alternative sound, the new release comes close to scraping the bottom of the grunge barrel. The Chainsaw Kittens have turned from their originality and plain weirdness in a weak attempt to jump on the mainstream grunge bandwagon.

Unfortunately, their attempt came a bit too late, because as most of us have realized, the grunge sound is dead.

Nonetheless, these guys make Nirvana look good.

The lead track on this album, "Kick Kid," is lame with its grindy power-chord base, weak bass line and lack of variation throughout the song.

The next three tracks on the album simply follow the leader with unintelligent (and usually incomprehensible) lyrics, power chords out the rear and plenty of distortion.

Nothing new here.

"Mary's Belated Wedding Present" was one to make me sick. "Sgt. Whore" left me with only questions of the song's meaning — if there was one.

The final track, "Little Fishies," is so ridiculous and pointless that it was below sympathy. There is no meaning, no remarkable talent and not even a decent bit of senseless humor to make this album worthwhile.

K.C. has history of spook houses

WILLIAM MCKEEN III
Collegian

Too old to trick or treat? "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" isn't the same anymore?

Take a road trip to Kansas City, Mo., and check out some of its sundry spook houses.

Kansas City's spook houses are a tradition dating back to the early '70s. The first spook house, built in Kansas City 19 years ago, was constructed by Marion Trizoli, the first person to teflon coat a pan.

"I always go to Kansas City to check them out," said Michelle Ross, junior in pre-occupational therapy, who has made going to the spook houses a tradition. "My friends and I have a blast. There's something fun about being scared to death."

Kansas City has about 10 commercial haunted houses, all centrally located in the downtown area.

Commercial haunted houses are the type of spook house where the sole purpose is horrific entertainment, said Phil Dimaggio, owner of the Main Street Morgue. They are not considered as being lighthearted fun for the children or those with a weak heart, he said.

Each house offers a different type of entertainment.

People can find thrills and chills in everything from disemboweled corpses to a three-story circular slide.

Dimaggio said people visit the houses again and again. He has seen one girl return about 30 times already since the season began.

Still, the spook houses aren't for everyone.

"Some people can't even make it through," Dimaggio said.

Yeltsin lifts restrictions on real-estate transactions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — President Boris Yeltsin destroyed one of the remaining cornerstones of communist rule Wednesday by lifting virtually all restrictions on buying and selling land.

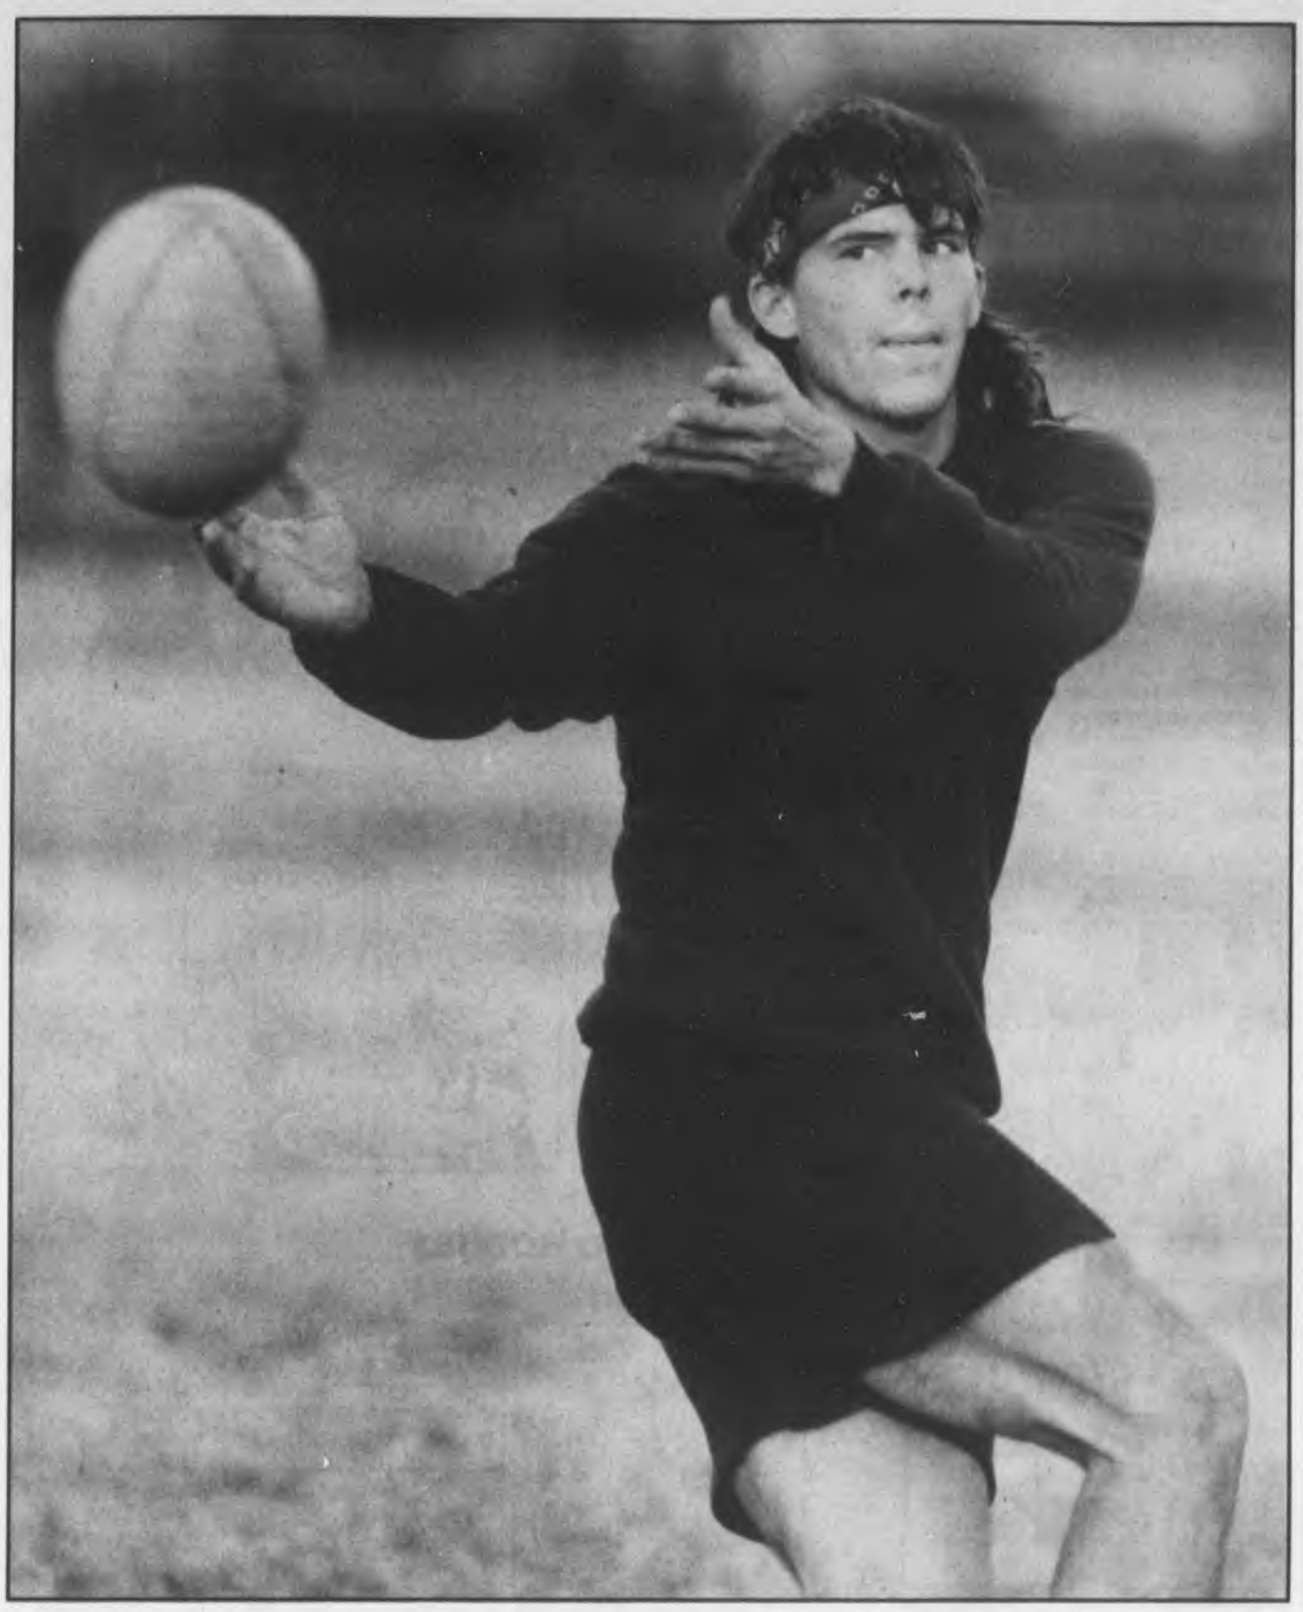
The action gives a huge boost to Russia's transformation to a market economy and likely will lead to the breakup of thousands of inefficient collective farms.

Yeltsin's earlier efforts to privatize land were hampered by restrictions imposed by the hard-line parliament he disbanded last month.

As the president pushed ahead with reforms, however, the fault lines in his government widened. Yeltsin — who himself has been accused of censorship — accused his prime minister Tuesday of trying to seize control of the media, in the latest infighting in the government.

The president's decree privatizing land allows Russians who own land to sell it, rent it or give it away.

The decree would remove the last obstacles to a real free market in Russia, presidential representative Anatoly Krasikov told the Associated Press.



Under the earlier, limited reforms, ordinary citizens could own up to a quarter-acre, usually used for country homes and vegetable gardens.

Farmers could own larger tracts, but could not resell them for at least five years.

The decree said the government cannot confiscate private land without compensation at market value.

Land confiscation was one of the Bolsheviks' first acts when they took power in 1917.

Dictator Josef Stalin forced Soviet peasants onto collective farms in the late 1920s and '30s, resulting in famine and millions of deaths.

Rugby demands high endurance

More running separates it from U.S. football

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

Football isn't the only rough-and-tumble sport at K-State.

Danny Blea, K-State graduate and coach of the Rugby Club, said the University has had its own rugby team since 1972.

Blea said he started playing in '81 when he came to study at K-State, and he has enjoyed it since.

The same year Blea started playing was the year the K-State rugby team went to the final four of the Rugby Nationals, he said.

"Rugby is a different type of sport. You are not designated to one certain task and there is no time to regroup," Blea said.

Rugby players don't wear pads. Rugby might consequently be known to be as physical as football, as violent as hockey and dangerous as cliff diving.

Blea said the sport has something for everyone.

"It takes all sizes and shapes," he said. "I'm only 5'4", and I've been playing for 12 years," he said.

However, a person needs to be in top physical condition because of the demanding aspect of the sport.

"Rugby is a continuous game, unlike many sports like football," Tim Harrold, junior in theater, said. "There are two halves, which are 40 minutes each, and play goes on continuously. Like soccer, you have to be constantly running around the field."

In addition, the sport has other differences.

Bill Peterik, from Fort Riley, said one unpleasant part of the game is there are only substitutions if someone gets hurt.

Peterik said a player cannot pass the ball forward. The person cannot move the ball forward with their hands. Also, there are no blockers. Each person on the team has to be able to cover a variety of functions.

"You have to be able to do everything from pass the ball to tackle another person. There is a continuous switch from offense to defense," Forrest Perich, junior in park and resource management, said.

Although people aren't going to be able to turn on the television and watch Monday Night Rugby, Blea said rugby is still a growing sport in the United States.

Many schools have rugby clubs, he said, and some schools such as Berkeley and Harvard give scholarships to rugby players.

K-State hasn't fallen behind the other schools, Blea said. It has some of its own players to be proud of.

DANNY BLEA
RUGBY COACH

Blea said Steve Robke, a K-State graduate, was on the all-American rugby team last year, and Mike Skahan, junior in English, was in the pool for tryouts for collegiate all-American.

However, the K-State Rugby Club doesn't limit itself to just playing clubs from other schools.

Blea said the club is part of the Heart of America Union, which is part of the Western Territorial Union. These unions together make up the USA Rugby Union, much in the same way the different football divisions make up the NFL.

The Eagles, who take members from the Heart of America Union, had the opportunity to play Australia, the World Cup Champions last year. The Eagles lost marginally with a score of 26-22.

K-State also has the collegiate side of the club.

Blea said this weekend is the first collegiate game of the season.

The team is playing University of Kansas at the L.P. Washburn Recreation Area in the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.
